ORGAN OF THE M. E. CHURCH SOUTH FOR THE MOBILE, MONTGOMERY, MISSISSIPPI AND LOUISIANA CONFERENCES

VOL. XVI. NEW ORLEANS, SATURDAY, JANUARY 7, 1871. NO. 51.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

Memphis, Jan. 3.—An accident occurred on the Mississippi and Tennessee railroad, this morning, at Noncounah bridge, by the breaking of an axle of the forward coach, which was thrown down the embankment, took fire and rapidly consumed.

Five negroes are known to have been burned to death. A number of others, who were severely burned, were brought here to the hospital, where one woman died.

William White, omnibus agent; Charles Eckols, newsboy; and a youth named Davis Horn, from Lake, Mississippi, were fatally burned.

Mr. Matherwent, C. C. Thompson, Felix Davis, Dr. Sam. Royne, of Mississippi, and Peter Kirby, conductor, slightly.

But for the exertions of the latter, White and Eckols would have been burned in the car. Mr. Kirby also saved several negroes by pulling them through the windows.

FOREIGN.

Madrid, Dec. 28.—This evening, while General Prim was proceeding from the Cortes to his residence, some individuals in Calee Aliella fired into his carriage, wounding both the general and his adjutant, but not dangerously. No public disturbance occurred, as the authorities took prompt measures to prevent an outbreak, and the arrest of the assassins. Great popular indignation is manifested at this dastardly attempt to murder General Prim, which so happily failed of success.

Havana, Dec. 28.—The rebels are surrendering everywhere in large numbers.

Madrid, Dec. 28.—Last night as General Prim left the Cortes eight shots were fired at his carriage, wounding him in three places in the left arm and right hand. No arrests.

London, Dec. 29.—The order of accusation against Mr. Noel for alleged complicity in the massacre committed by the Greek brigands has been countermanded.

Hong Kong dispatches of December 13 have been received. Quiet prevailed in the north of China.

It was expected that the river Teiso would soon be frozen up, in which event communication by water with Tsin Tsien will be suspended.

Montevideo, South America, advices to November 19 report continued fighting, and trade quiet.

Rome, Dec. 30.—An overflow of the Tiber has flooded half the city and occasioned great damage to property.

Madrid, Dec. 30.—The Cortes has adopted a resolution expressive of horror at the attempt to assassinate General Prim, and passed a vote of confidence in the government.

London, Dec. 30.—The Germans invested the Fortress of Peroune, in the department of Somme, on Wednesday, after sharp fighting.

London, Dec. 30, evening.—The conference on the Eastern question has been indefinitely postponed, as France has refused to take part, and the absence of one of the dignitaries of the treaty of Paris would render the meeting useless.

London, Dec. 30.—It is officially announced that Bismarck was asked by Washburne if Favre could have safe conduct to the conference. Bismarck, however, objected.

German reinforcements now on the way to France number one hundred and fifty thousand men.

Madrid, Dec. 30.—Admiral Topete has assumed temporarily the functions of General Prim as minister of foreign affairs and war, as well as the presidency of the council.

Senor Ayala has been appointed minister of colonies.

Berlin, Dec. 30.—The King telegraphs the Queen from Versailles, December 29, that the bombardment of Fort Avron silenced the enemy's guns. The railway station at Noisy was shelled and the French artillery at Bondy dislodged. The Prussian loss was three men. The garrison of Fort Avron has fled into Paris.

London, Dec. 30.—A Prussian dispatch reports Colonel Boltenstein, commanding a detachment of six companies, two squadrons of cavalry and two guns, surrounded by the French near Montverie, after a desperate fight, cut his way out, losing only one hundred men, and taking two hundred and forty prisoners.

Versailles, Dec. 30—Last night a detachment of Saxons advanced on Mont Avron, only to find the works evacuated by the French, and the guns removed. An attack will be made soon on the southeastern forts.

London, Dec. 31.—Paris correspondence of December 29 states that shells were thrown into the northern part of the city.

The German authorities at Versailles accuse the French of paying seven hundred and fifteen francs to each French officer escaping from captivity and breaking his parole.

A dispatch from Arras brings a report that the German soldiers on the march to the north of France openly declare themselves tired of the war.

A dispatch from Madrid, Thursday evening, says:

General Prim is much better, and his wounds evince no serious symptoms.

Bordeaux, Dec. 31.—The towns of Anferre, Gray and Vesone have been evacuated by the Prussians, before the advance of the French under Generals Bressoles, Bremes and Garibaldi.

The army of Bordeaux is to march directly on Paris.

As the French advance the inhabitants hasten to join their ranks, and thus the army increases rapidly in numbers.

The smaller towns now resist the enemy, as in the case of Tours, which, in consequence of the combat at Monnal, was not occupied by the Germans.

At Argent and Cog the Prussians were repulsed by the population.

Madrid, Dec. 31.—The Cortes has sanctioned the issue of treasury bonds.

London, Dec. 31.—Owing to the approach of the new year, the news to-day has been very meager.

The Lila, from Glasgow for New York, ran upon the wreck of the Clyde and was obliged to put back to have her bottom examined.

A French ironclad was seen off Roche's Point, in Ireland, to-day.

Advices from Cochin China announce that many German prizes have been taken into the French port of Saigron.

The Post's Moscow correspondent says that belief in an alliance between the United States and Russia, in case of a war, is becoming all but universal.

Florence, Dec. 31.—Ministers of the Italian cabinet have gone to Rome.

Madrid, Dec. 31.—The death of Marshal Prim has intensified the excitement in this city. Inflammation set in in his wounds, and amputation of his arm was found necessary, though it did not save his life.

He retained consciousness to the last, and when made aware of the approach of death bade adieu to his friends, and, it is said, expressed much anxiety for the safety of the new king.

Great apprehension of an outburst exists, but the government is making efforts to allay the excitement.

Madrid, Dec. 31.—The Cortes adopted a resolution in honor of the memory of General Prim. It declares that the deceased deserved well of his country, and places his family under the protection of the nation. The Cortes also passed a vote of confidence in the government.

Rome, January 1.—King Victor Emanuel left Rome to-day amid enthusiastic demonstrations. Before his departure he made a donation of two hundred thousand francs for charitable purposes, and begged the municipality to devote to similar objects the sum intended to defray the expenses of festivities on the occasion of his visit.

Versailles, Jan. 1, via London, Jan. 2.—King William gave a reception at the palace to-day. He said the great events which preceded the celebration of such a day in such a place were due to the heroism and perseverance of the officers and the bravery of the soldiers. Our goal is still, however, unattained, and important tasks remain before we can achieve a lasting peace. It would be censurable to make any peace which involves a continuance of the duties which brought us here.

London, Jan. 2.—The French ironclad Guyenne has been ordered to leave Queenstown. A Prussian corvette is off Dungaroon.

Meziers has been occupied by the Germans. The French have evacuated other advanced posts northeast of Paris since the reduction of Fort Avron, and the forts around Paris are silent.

The twentieth Prussian division repulsed a superior force of French in the rear of Vendome, capturing some guns.

In an engagement near Arras one hundred and seventy-five French infantry were taken prisoners.

Additional artillery is on the way to Paris. The number of siege guns of all calibers now in front of Paris is fifteen hundred.

The report that a commission was to be sent to the United States to settle the dispute about fisheries is untrue.

The Prussian government explains the sinking of the British colliers in the Seine by stating that they were fired into to bring them to.

The Sultan of Turkey and Khedive of Egypt are again on angry terms.

The bark Paromarandel, from Philadelphia for Liverpool, is ashore near Queenstown. The vessel will be a total wreck, but a portion of her cargo will be saved. The crew has been landed safely.

Advices from Rio Janeiro to the seventh have been received. The Brazilian minister of agriculture has resigned.

The insurgents in Uruguay have taken Montevideo by surprise.

The evacuation of Platean, before Mont Avron, by the French causes much depression in Paris.

A meeting of the mayors of Paris was held last week to censure the government for inactivity, but it proved a failure.

It is reported that the palace of Maison was set on fire by the guns of Mont Valerian, and totally destroyed.

No financial markets to-day. No cotton markets in Liverpool.

London, Jan. 2.—Bismarck writes to Lord Russell that Prussia is justified under the law of nations in sinking the English ships in the Seine, although the payment offered has been refused, because unaccompanied by an apology. He renews the tender of payment.

Brussels, Jan. 3.—King William has abandoned the idea of entering Paris upon its capitulation.

The forts of Paris are to be garrisoned and provisioned for two years, and the Germans are to hold Alsace, Lorraine, Belfort, Bitche and the line of communication with Paris.

After an unconditional surrender the Garde Nationale will be armed and made responsible for the preservation of order in the capital, and the Corps Legislatiff will be summoned to meet on the second or third of the following month.

Bordeaux, Jan. 3.—Paris advices of the thirtieth state that the Parisians unite in urging General Trochu to make a sortie with an enormous force, which can readily be spared.

The weather is moderating, and the artillery for the defense of the city is now so numerous and well manned that the enemy will be unable to make any serious impression upon the fortifications.

It appears that General Von Moltke, after the battle of Pont Noyelles, between the armies of General Faidherbe and Mantenffel, sent a message to General Trochu, that the army of the north had been annihilated. General Trochu paid no attention to the statement.

London, Jan. 3.—The appointment of Marquis of Hartington as secretary of Ireland will be popular, as the marquis favors mixed education.

A multitude of people attended the funeral of General Prim.

The Hague, Jan. 3.—The new Dutch cabinet has been formed as follows: Interior, Thorbecke; foreign affairs, Gueriche; justice, Jolles; colonies, Van Dosse; finance, Bluhse; war, Boons; marine, Broix.

London, Jan. 3.—Sir John Pakington, in a speech delivered in Somersetshire, yesterday, intimated that the Tory programme for the approaching session of Parliament includes the support of large additional appropriations for both the army and navy.

Berlin, Jan. 3.—Von Beust's dispatch of the twenty-sixth of December met with a hearty reception here. He recognizes the new German empire under the leadership of Prussia without conditions, and hopes that the amicable relations between the two empires will be productive of great good to both countries.

London, Jan. 4.—The Duke of Cambridge is about to be succeeded by Lord Napier as commander-in-chief of the army, and Right Hon. Edward Cardwell as secretary of war, by Lord Strathnaim.

England is determined to arm.

London, Jan. 4.—At the New Year's banquet at Versailles the King gave a toast to the German princes, to which the Duke of Baden responded in a speech, rejoicing at the restoration of the German empire, and concluded with a toast to King William "the victorious."

Letters from Paris state that citizens suffer greatly from lack of fuel and food. The scarcity of the latter, however, is mitigated by stores officially distributed by the government.

It is announced that Austria will arrest and detain all French prisoners who escape into her territory during the war.

Berlin, Jan. 4.—Certain bankers of Berlin have been sentenced to imprisonment for participating in the subscription to the recent French loan.

London, Jan. 4.—Advices from Rome say Cardinal Antonelli received cordially the embassador sent by King Victor Emanuel to announce his arrival in Rome.

SOUTH GEORGIA CONFERENCE.

We condense as follows from the Southern Christian Advocate:

Fort Valley, where this Conference was held, is a thriving little town on the Southwestern railroad, nearly thirty miles below Macon. It is a small place for so large a body as this to find entertainment for a week; but we judge, from what we see and hear, that the hospitality of the citizens is adequate to the emergency.

Bishop Pierce was in the chair at the appointed time, and opened the Conference with religious service, whereupon the roll of members was called, and sixty-seven of them answered to their names.

The roll of supernumerary preachers was called, and Y. F. Tignor was granted a superannuated relation, and William H. Thomas, William F. Conley and James G. Worley were placed on effective list. J. Taber Payne was located at his own request. S. G. Childs was placed on superannuated list.

The roll of superannuated preachers was called, and William B. McHan, Charles A. Moore, Wyatt Brooks, J. B. Wardlaw, John S. Ford, John S. Robinson, David Blacock, Jacob R. Owen, H. P. Pitchford, W. W. Griffen, Capel Raiford, T. C. Coleman and F. R. C. Ellis were continued in the superannuated relation. J. M. N. Lowe and C. L. Hays were reported as having died during the year. W. M. C. Copley was continued in class of third year. Adam A. Robinson, local deacon, was elected to elder's orders.

The Committee on Orphans' Home reported, and the Conference was addressed by Dr. Boring. After some discussion the report was laid over till the afternoon, that a session of the Legal Conference might be held.

The Sunday School Society held its anniversary, Rev. A. M. Wynn, president, in the chair. The venerable Dr. Lovick Pierce led the religious service, and, notwithstanding a very inclement night, very many of the Sunday school children, with their teachers, were present, and their beautiful singing added greatly to the interest of the occasion. The treasurer's report and the report of the board were read. These will be given hereafter. Dr. Harrison followed in a very simple and pathetic narrative of his own experience, which left the hearers in tears. Dr. Hicks, of Charleston, then addressed the children particularly, in a speech, which in every respect was fully up to whatever standard may be set for an address appropriate to such an occasion. It was heard with delight by young and old. The anniversary, altogether, was one of the most delightful meetings we have ever attended.

James A. Rosser, heretofore an elder in the Methodist Protestant Church, was admitted to the Conference.

The secretary reported the following statistics: Members, white, 23,147—increase, 700; colored, 653—decrease, 299; local preachers, 216—increase, 210; infants baptized, 795; adults baptized, 1,483; Sunday schools, 293; officers and teachers, 1,916; pupils, 12,843; total collections for pastors, presiding elders, Bishops, Conference collections, missions, church building, Sunday school, etc., $120,167.24.

The question of an Orphans' Home was resumed, and after debate it was resolved that it is desirable to have an Orphans' Home as soon as practicable, and a board of trustees to take charge of this interest was ordered.

The missionary anniversary, on Saturday night, was held before a large audience. Dr. Poisal opened the meeting with religious service. The treasurer then reported the receipts of the past year to be $2,629.80—which, after paying the percentage due the Parent Board and other claims on the fund, leaves only forty-two and one-half per cent. to be paid on the appropriations to the missionaries in the Conference.

The report of the board was then read by the secretary, Rev. J. W. Hinton. It will be published hereafter, and it will appear from it that while there are many missions in the Conference, and that there has been much success in these mission fields, the small amount of missionary money collected in the Conference is discreditable to the Christianity of our membership. We commend the report to our readers, and hope that the weighty argument offered in behalf of an enlarged liberality in the cause of missions will stir deeply their hearts, and bring forth abundant fruits.

Bishop Pierce, whom everybody wishes to hear on the platform as well as in the pulpit, was called on to address the meeting, but contented himself with making a few remarks to introduce Dr. Hicks, who brought the subject of missions before the Conference in a speech of great power, which was followed by a collection and subscriptions amounting to $1,622. The meeting was in every respect a great success.

The sum of $1,204.35 was reported as collected for the China mission. A letter was read from Rev. Y. J. Allen to the Conference, and the following resolutions were passed:

Resolved, That this Conference reciprocates the fraternal greetings of our beloved brother, Young J. Allen, and we pledge ourselves to bear in mind the necessities of his work in soliciting contributions for foreign missions—assuring him that he holds a warm place in our affections, and that we will remember him and his mission in our prayers.

Resolved, That the sum collected for the China mission this year, and remaining in the treasurer's hands, be paid over to Mrs. Allen, to be forwarded for the use of said mission to Bro. Allen.

J. E. Evans.
J. S. Key.

The Board of Education reported that two more young men had come into the Conference, who had been under its care at Emory College—one came in last year. The collections in the Conference have not fully met the claim on the funds.

An apportionment of $1,000 was ordered made to the various charges to raise money to aid in the schooling of young men preparing for the ministry.

The new "proviso" was concurred in by a vote of ninety-five yeas; nays, none.

The following were nominated and elected trustees of Orphans' Home: E. H. Myers, S. Anthony, G. G. N. MacDonell, J. S. Key, R. B. Lester, J. E. Evans, Dr. H. Wimberley, Dr. W. H. Hollinshead, J. W. Jordan, Jr., H. L. Jewett, J. W. Cheatham and N. D. Guerry.

The Bishop was requested to appoint the Rev. S. Anthony agent for the Orphans' Home.

The report on Bible cause was offered, and adopted after remarks from Rev. W. A. Parks, agent of the American Bible Society.

The Committee on Books and Periodicals reported.

The report of Board of Finance was made as follows: Conference collection, $4,480.27—paying claimants at fifty-three per cent.; Bishops' fund, $1,023.80.

A deficiency in this fund of nearly $400 was ordered to be added to assessments for next year, collections to be made immediately and forwarded to J. S. Key, chairman of the Board of Stewards.

Columbus was chosen as the place of holding the next Conference.

The missionary board reported the appropriations for the next year to be $10,000, and the chairman of the Board of Finance was ordered to apportion the sum to the respective districts.

South Carolina Conference Statistics.—Children baptized, white, 1,418; colored, 93; adults, white, 1,546; colored, 124; number of Sunday schools, 386; officers and teachers, 2,502; scholars, 15,837; members, white, 32,240; colored, 1,536; local preachers, white, 131; colored, 4; number of volumes in library, 32,614; number of churches, 500; number of parsonages, 48; value of church property, $121,370; assessed for pastors and assistants, $59,730; collected, $52,468.77; deficit, $7,882.91; for presiding elders, $8,451; collected, $7,076; deficit, $1,248.67. Conference collection, $4,725.50; collected, $3,973.81; deficit, $1,558.50. For missions, $4,058.50; collected, $2,513.10; deficit, $1,977.90. For education, $4,124; collected, $2,776.25; deficit, $1,779.36. For Bishops, $891; collected, $1,091.—Raleigh Advocate.

SATURDAY, JANUARY 7, 1871.

IN DARKNESS.

Father, will thou hearken to me.
Bending low thy gracious ear?
Will thy heart of love and pity
All my earnest pleading hear?

Hear me, Father, for the pathway
Leads through deserts dark and drear;
Gone the sunlight, all is shadow,
Much my coward heart doth fear.

Storms are gathering o'er the mountain,
Looming up in dread array;
Will thou cover me, my Father,
Till the dawning of the day?

Oh, the night is dark and fearful—
Powers of darkness join the fray,
Striving with their might infernal,
From thy hand to wrest the prey.

Let me feel thy hand, my Father,
Hear thy voice, assuring, say,
Child, thy Father walks beside thee,
Fear not then the rough, dark way.

Faint not, though the way be thorny,
Though the burden heavy be;
Fear not, though the contest deepens,
For my grace shall strengthen thee."

ITINERANT LIFE.

Mr. Editor: There is no other vocation so replete with incident and interest as that of an itinerant Methodist preacher. The close of one Conference year and the beginning of another, and all the labors, sacrifices, as well as the joys of a year's service on the circuit, in the station or upon the district—their almost endless variety; the effect of these upon the head and heart—combine to make the experience of a single year equal to the lifetime of many who drag their way along, living as they list, caring for none of those things which go to make life pleasant or profitable.

One of the excellent Bishops, at a Conference not long since, explained what to many seems a strange peculiarity of the Methodist system. It is remarkable that so short acquaintance and limited association as one year affords should so endear our people and their pastors as to give them pain at parting. The secret of this, in part at least, as explained by the Bishop, is that the pastor goes to his charge indorsed by the Conference, and needs no term of probation—no trial sermons, no formal introduction—but is received at once into the confidence of every household. He becomes at once familiar with the circumstances of his people, and, if a faithful pastor, he addresses himself promptly to the work of ministering to their spiritual necessities.

The faithful minister, however great the sacrifice he makes to do the work of the great Master, will find himself often more than compensated in the consciousness of having counseled wisely some erring soul, and converted a sinner from the error of his way. How sweet the comfort that flows from the assurance that we have smoothed the sick man's pillow, dried the tear of widowhood, or hushed the sighs of orphanage! How blissful the emotion which fires the minister's heart while regenerate souls rejoice in the saving strength of the glorious gospel he preaches!

The time for parting with such as we have served from the pulpit and at the fireside, at the sick-bed, at the baptismal fount and at the grave, is indeed a time of trial. The trial is no less to people than pastor.

An experience of more than thirty years justifies the sentiment that the more entirely free from secular pursuits and consecrated to his work, the more largely the minister shares the love and generosity of the people. The absence of parsonages necessitates the procurement of permanent homes for preachers' families. But this is not secularizing; nor will this interfere to prevent the church sustaining the man who leaves home and wife and children to save souls.

The beginning of a new year often necessitates changes, severing endearing ties, forming new acquaintances, and, despite experience, awakens apprehension as to the reception we may meet, and on the part of the people as to "what sort of preacher" they are to have. But this is soon allayed by the arrival of the new preacher, who proves to have some trait of character and to possess some virtue that his predecessor only wanted to make him in all respects a model. Wherever our people are properly educated they are prepared to receive the preacher sent; and the preacher whose heart is fully in the work recognizes his appointment as the one which in the judgment of his brethren is the very one he ought to have. Preacher and people, actuated by such sentiments, cannot fail to prove mutual blessings. May the history of the ensuing Conference year vindicate the propriety of these reflections of A Methodist Preacher.

FIRST CHAPTER OF GENESIS.

Second day, verse 6: "And God said, Let there be rakeea (expansion) in the midst of the waters, and let it divide the waters from the waters." At the time these words were spoken the whole surface of the world was that of water, on which the absorbing powers of the atmosphere or expansion had been at work during a Mosaic artificial day, consisting of twenty-four hours. This day commenced the moment "God said, Let there be light," and ended with the beginning of the second morning. The light was caused by the sun's first appearance in the east as a creature of life moving upward, the eth (substance) of which, according to the first verse, having been previously made and held in abeyance to the command just stated. Within the period mentioned the evaporation from the face of the deep, in consequence of its universality, was immense. As the expansion was now perfect—morning of the second day—by the operation of natural law, a practical expression of the divine will, we therefore have the significant words: "Let" it so "be"—that is, so exist for all time, to divide the waters from the waters. After officiating a few hours between the appearing of the dry land and its appointment, it commenced to divide the cloudy oceans above from lakes, rivers and seas below. The Almighty, in the regular order of things, as detailed by Moses, could not have sooner said than the beginning of the second day: "Let there exist an expansion."

We fail to find one passage in Genesis in which be denotes the making or creating of the thing denoted at the time specified. "Let there be (exist) light; let there be (exist) expansion; let the waters be (exist) gathered together; let there be (exist) lights, and let them be (exist) for lights in ha-rakeea," (the expansion.) In these extracts be or exist has a corresponding signification in the use of be in that which follows: "They twain shall be (exist) one flesh." All denote previous existence, terminating in a condition of perfection by divine purpose. This is as self-obvious as it is reasonable and scriptural.

Verse 7: "And God made harakeea (the expansion,) and divided the waters which were under the expansion from the waters which were above the expansion; and it was so." In the previous verse we are informed that the expansion was invested with permanent existence, and its office duly prescribed, by its Maker, on the second day. Moses, in his confirmatory description, adds: "God made the expansion"—that is, to continue its office as stated. What God pronounces enduring by a changeless law, Moses calls an act of making. It would be as reasonable to suppose the material of Adam's body was made on the sixth day as to think God spoke the atmosphere into being out of nothing on the second day.

Verse 8: "And God called the expansion heaven. And the evening (ereb) and the morning (boquer) were the second day." This was devoted to the proclaiming of the law of expansion perfect and abiding, with definitely stating its mission, and giving it a name.

As the natural day of Moses is composed of twelve hours, and the artificial of twenty-four, the interpretation of geology, as to indefinite periods, is intolerable. Moreover, as a part of a Jewish artificial day was as the whole, the reader has only to connect Thursday night with Friday, and he will have the key to the solution of the three days and three nights of Jonah and the Son of Man.

Aleph.

NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES.

Floyd, December 21, 1870.

Mr. Editor: The present inclement weather has shut down upon an interesting protracted meeting at this point. The Friday before our last quarterly conference was observed as a day of fasting and prayer, having divine service morning and evening. And although the weather was very much against us, yet the good work commenced, and up to last Wednesday night (fourteenth instant,) the sixth day of the meeting, there were twenty-three added to the church, and a number of most happy conversions.

The minutes of last year reported thirty white members for Floyd and Delhi; but those of this year will report a white membership of about one hundred.

Carroll circuit was added to this after my arrival. An increase will be reported for that work too.

I should have said, in the right place, that our excellent presiding elder, Bro. Alexander, and our dear old presiding elder, were both with us at the meeting just mentioned, and labored with a holy vim.

The citizens here have put up a house of worship, worth about $2,000, and deeded it to the Methodist Episcopal Church South. Bro. William G. McGaughey has been of great service in several ways here, and one was in assisting to raise $600 to finish the building. The expectation now is that it will soon be completed, and then it will reflect honor upon all concerned, and be a great blessing to all this people.

There was once a parsonage here, but the tender mercies of the Federals caused them to burn it, together with nearly all other buildings about the village. We hope that another preacher's house will ere long decorate the same beautiful lot of ground.

If we had proper mail facilities the list of Advocates would be much larger. We expect to report good collections for the several usual objects at the next Conference.

Very truly, J. E. Bradley.

Eventide.—In that hour which of all the twenty-four is most emblematic of heaven, and suggestive of repose, the eventide, in which instinctively Jacob went into the fields to meditate—when the work of the day is done, when the mind has ceased its tensions, when the passions are lulled to rest, in spite of themselves, by the spell of the quiet, star-lit sky—it is then, amidst the silence of the lull of all the lower parts of our nature, that the soul comes forth to do its work. Then the peculiar, strange work of the soul, which the intellect cannot do—meditation—begins. Awe, and worship, and wonder, are in full exercise; and love begins then in its purest form of mystic adoration, and pervasive and undefined tenderness—separate from all that is course and earthly—swelling as if it would embrace all in its desire to bless, and lose itself in the sea of the Love of God. This is the rest of the soul—the exercise and play of all the nobler powers.—F. W. Robertson.

One Drop at a Time.—Have you ever watched an icicle as it formed? You noticed how it froze one drop at a time, until it was a foot long or more. If the water was clear the icicle remained clear, and sparkled brightly in the sun; but if the water was but slightly muddy the icicle looked foul, and its beauty spoiled. Just so our characters are forming; one little thought or feeling at a time adds its influence. If each thought be pure and right, the soul will be lovely and sparkle with happiness; but if impure and wrong, there will be final deformity and wretchedness.

A boy was sent by his mother to saw some stove wood out of railroad ties. Going out doors shortly after, she found the youth sitting on the saw-horse, with head down. The mother asked her hopeful son why he was cast down, and why he didn't keep at his work.

The boy replied: "My dear mother, I find it hard, very hard to sever old ties."

WOMEN AND WINE.

Woman has never been associated with wine without disgrace and disaster. The toast and the bacchanal that, with musical alliteration, couple these two words, spring from the hot lips of sensuality, and are burdened with shame. A man who can sing of wine and women in the same breath, is one whose presence is disgrace, and whose touch is pollution. A man who can forget mother and sister, or wife and daughter, and wantonly engage in a revel in which the name of woman is invoked to heighten the pleasures of the intoxicating cup, is, beyond controversy and without mitigation, a beast. "Dost thou think, because thou art virtuous, there shall be no more cakes and ale?" Ay, cakes and ale, if you will, but let it be cakes and ale. Let not the name by which we call the pure and precious ones at home be brought in to illuminate a degrading feast.

Of the worst foes that woman has ever had to encounter, wine stands at the head. The appetite for strong drink in man has spoiled the lives of more women—ruined more hopes for them, scattered more fortunes for them, brought to them more shame, sorrow and hardship—than any other evil that lives. The country numbers tens of thousands—nay, hundreds of thousands—of women who are widows to-day, and sit in hopeless weeds, because their husbands have been slain by strong drink. There are hundreds of thousands of homes, scattered all over the land, in which women live lives of torture, going through all the changes of suffering that lie between the extremes of fear and despair, because those whom they love, love the wine better than they do the women they have sworn to love. There are women by thousands who dread to hear at the door the step that once thrilled them with pleasure, because that step has learned to reel under the influence of the seductive poison. There are women groaning with pain, while we write these words, from bruises and brutalities inflicted by husbands made mad by drink. There can be no exaggeration in any statement made in regard to this matter, because no human imagination can create anything worse than the truth, and no pen is capable of portraying the truth. The sorrows and the horrors of a wife with a drunken husband, or a mother with a drunken son, are as near the realization of hell as can be reached in this world, at least. The shame, the indignation, the sorrow, the sense of disgrace for herself and her children, the poverty—and not unfrequently the beggary—the fear and the fact of violence, the lingering, life-long struggle and despair of countless women with drunken husbands, are enough to make all women curse wine, and engage unitedly to oppose it everywhere as the worst enemy of their sex.

And now what shall we see on the New Year's day, 1871? Women all over the city of New York—women here and there all over the country, where like social customs prevail—setting out upon their tables the well filled decanters which, before night shall close down, will be emptied into the brains of young men and old men, who will go reeling to darker orgies, or to homes that will feel ashamed of them. Woman's lips will give the invitation, woman's hand will fill and present the glass, woman's careless voice will laugh at the effects of the mischievous draught upon their friends, and, having done all this, woman will retire to balmy rest, previously having reckoned the number of those to whom she has, during the day, presented a dangerous temptation, and rejoiced over it in the degree of its magnitude.

O woman! woman! Is it not about time that this thing were stopped? Have you a husband, a brother, a son? Are they stronger than their neighbors who have, one after another, dropped into the graves of drunkards? Look around you, and see the desolations that drink has wrought among your acquaintances, and then decide whether you have a right to place temptation in any man's way, or do aught to make a social custom respectable which leads hundreds of thousands of men into bondage and death. Why must the bottle come out everywhere? Why can there not be a festal occasion without this vulgar guzzling of strong drink?

Woman, there are some things that you can do, and this is one: you can make drinking unpopular and disgraceful among the young. You can utterly discountenance all drinking in your own house, and you can hold in suspicion every young man who touches the cup. You know that no young man who drinks can safely be trusted with the happiness of any woman, and that he is as unfit as a man can be for woman's society. Have this understood: that every young man who drinks is socially proscribed. Bring up your children to regard drinking as not only dangerous but disgraceful. Place temptation in no man's way. If men will make beasts of themselves, let them do it in other society than yours. If your mercenary husbands treat their customers from private stores kept in their counting rooms, shame them into decency by your regard for the honor of your home. Recognize the living, terrible fact that wine has always been, and is to-day, the curse of your sex; that it steals the hearts of men away from you, that it dries up your prosperity, that it endangers your safety, that it can only bring you evil. If social custom compels you to present wine at your feasts, rebel against it, and make a social custom in the interests of virtue and purity. The matter is very much in your own hands. The women of the country, in what is called polite society, can do more to make the nation temperate than all the legislators and tumultuous reformers that are struggling and blundering in their efforts to this end.—Scribner's Monthly.

THE FRIENDSHIP OF JESUS.

What a volume of meaning there is in the word friendship, but how much deeper and holier the meaning of the words, "The friendship of Jesus." Are there not times when we feel our hearts burn within us, as he opens to us out of the Scriptures things concerning himself? It may be, after a crucifixion and a death, that he draws near; then do we learn the value of his friendship as transcending every earthly good. Do we not often cling to human friendship as a substantial good, when that friendship is only the shadow of that offered by his heart of infinite love? True friendship consists in a communion of heart with heart in mutual confidence and love; but how often are we misunderstood by our friends? Are there not moments when we are truly alone? But the heart of Jesus knows how to touch "the secret springs of ours;" 'tis he alone can soothe and satisfy. The friendship of Jesus is in its nature all-satisfying. Oftentimes human love is the occasion of anxiety and unrest. It is followed by a troop of fears, lest the dear one should be removed from our sight into the unseen hereafter, or lest the blighting finger of time touch the heart we trust in, and cause it to become cold and indifferent. But in the friendship of Jesus there is no change; he is the same yesterday, to-day and forever. The friendship of Jesus is perfect in unselfishness; all human love requires something in return. Unrequited it dies; but the love of the Friend of all sinners gives all for nothing. Nothing that our weak, wandering hearts can yield up to him is worthy the name of a return for the infinite wealth he pours upon us. How like we grow unto those whom we love. How our thoughts flow in the same channel with theirs, and how we are molded into their resemblance! And we joy to know that the friendship of Jesus has a divinely transforming power. To the Christian there are moments when Jesus seems very near—so near that he can almost feel and touch him, when he can seem to feel his loving arms encircled about him. At such times he would fain lay his head on Jesus' dear bosom, and say: "Draw me closer, dear Saviour, still closer to thee." Such near friendship with the high and holy One can but have a transforming effect; and do we not see his very likeness impressed upon their countenance? As we look unto Jesus are we not conscious that the power of his love is changing us? Yes, we are already longing for the time to come when we shall remember no more this earthly tabernacle, but shall enter into his ineffable glory and likeness forever.—Religious Herald.

Love.—At first it surprises one that love should be made the principal staple of all the best kinds of fiction; and perhaps it is to be regretted that it is only one kind of love that is chiefly depicted in works of fiction. But that love itself is the most remarkable thing in human life there cannot be the slightest doubt. For see what it will conquer! It is not only that it prevails over selfishness; but it has the victory over weariness, tiresomeness and familiarity. When you are with the person loved you have no sense of being bored. This humble and trivial circumstance is the great test, the only sure and abiding test, of love. With the persons you do not love you are never supremely at your ease. You have some of the sensation of walking upon stilts. In conversation with them, however much you admire them and are interested in them, the horrid idea will cross your mind of "What shall I say next?" Converse with them is not perfect association. But with those you love, the satisfaction in their presence is not unlike that of the relation of the heavenly bodies to one another, which, in their silent revolutions, lose none of their attractive power. The sun does not talk to the world, but it attracts it.—Arthur Helps.

THE REST-GIVER.

In every human soul there is "An aching void"
The world can never fill.

There is an undefined longing for something which the world cannot give, but which the soul feels to be necessary for its complete enjoyment of life. As it peers down the dim vista of the future, this sense of want becomes still more apparent, and the soul is all unrest until it has found its anchoring place. The souls need an anchor, both sure and steadfast, and that reaches within the vail. If it has not this anchor it is forever at the mercy of the winds and waves; it is out on a tempestuous sea, and can never reach the desired haven by its own piloting.

From the depth of suffering humanity comes up the cry like a dying wail: "Rest! Rest! Who can give it?"

"O where shall rest be found,
Rest for the weary soul?"

The Son of God, Jesus of Nazareth, answers: "Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest." Here, then, humanity's question is answered. Christ Jesus is the Rest of Souls. He is the Rest-giver. The moment the sinner comes to him there is rest. His promise is: "My presence shall go with thee, and I will give thee rest." "I will never leave thee nor forsake thee." "Lo, I am with you alway." And the soul, having found rest, trustingly responds: "I am continually with thee; thou hast holden me with thy right hand. Thou shalt guide me with thy counsel, and afterward receive me to glory." Jesus gives rest from sin. He bore our sin for us, has endured the penalty of them, and therefore we who have believed in Jesus do enter into rest. It is the present rest that we enjoy. It is the rest of the soul. Thus the believer enjoys a rest here on earth which may be aptly called the antecedent of the more glorious rest in heaven: "There remaineth a rest for the people of God." They have only the earnest of it here. And whilst believers have much to contend against during their stay on earth, yet they have rest in their souls. And the soul that does not enjoy this rest has reason to fear that it has not yet truly come to the Rest-giver. Paul found rest as soon as he came to Jesus; and his language is: "We which have believed do enter into rest." Luther tried long to find rest from his sins by the Romish work-system, but it was only when he caught a glimpse of Jesus through the text, "The just shall live by faith," that he found rest. And it is the voice of all the past, of the church triumphant on high, that Jesus only can give rest from sin—present rest, eternal rest. To every troubling sinner that comes to him he says: "Son, thy sins are forgiven thee; go in peace." And, oh, what peace fills the soul that feels the load of guilt taken away!

The rest which Jesus gives is a permanent rest. It is a rest for every day, and for every hour. It is not simply a rest for those who have reached the "delectable mountains," but for those also who are in the valley and in the shadow of death. To all the weary children of earth Christ says: "Come unto me, and I will give you rest; take my yoke upon you, and learn of me; for I am meek and lowly in heart; and ye shall find rest unto your souls." Oh, how many are "seeking rest and finding none," because they will not listen to these precious words of Jesus: "Come unto me." There is nothing but unrest away from Jesus. He only is the Sabbath of the soul.—Lutheran Observer.

At a religious anniversary in England, a few years ago, a very excellent but eccentric clergyman was called on to close the meeting with prayer; and as the exercise had been protracted to an unusually late hour, and many of the audience had already left the house from excessive fatigue, he was requested to offer a short prayer, which he did in the words following: "O Lord, forgive the tediousness of the speakers, and the weariness of the hearers. Amen."

An Ohio clergyman, several years ago, received a bright new cent as a wedding fee. The other day he met the bridegroom, who mentioned the circumstance, and said: "My wife was a comparative stranger to me at the time we were united in wedlock. I had not learned her value, and paid accordingly. I find her a jewel; so here is an additional fee," at the same time handing the astonished minister a twenty dollar gold piece.

At one time, while John Thompson was justice of the peace in Sugar Grove, it became necessary, in the final settlement of an estate, to have a certain woman identified, and a certificate of the same made out by the justice. He did the work as follows; "I certify that Mary Jones is Mary Jones. John Thompson, J. P."

SATURDAY, JANUARY 7, 1871.

BATTLE SONG OF GUSTAVUS ADOLPHUS, 1631.

Fear not, O little flock, the foe
Who madly seek your overthrow,
Dread not his rage and power.
What tho' your courage sometimes faints,
His seeming triumph o'er God's saints
Lasts but a single hour.

Be of good cheer: your cause belongs
To Him who can avenge your wrongs—
Leave it to Him, our Lord.
Though hidden yet from all our eyes,
He sees the Gideon who shall rise
To save us and his word.

As true as God's own word is true—
Not earth or hell, with all their crew,
Against us shall prevail!
A jest, a by-word, are they grown;
God is with us—we are his own;
Our victory cannot fail.

Amen! Lord Jesus, grant our prayer;
Great Captain, now thine arm make bare;
Fight for us once again!
So shall the saints and martyrs raise
A mighty chorus to thy praise,
World without end—Amen.

OUR LIFE'S BLOOD.

Two startling announcements have lately been made in the public papers, well calculated to cause us to blush for our ignorance, and to marvel at the wonders which science may yet have in store for coming generations. A Swedish savant of high renown and great authority in his profession has solemnly proclaimed his conviction that a large number of Egyptian mummies were embalmed long before death had ensued, and merely for the purpose of suspending life for a given time. While admitting that the secret was lost in Egypt itself, he claims to have discovered it anew, and offers to embalm a criminal condemned to death with a view to resuscitating him after a number of years. The statement gains weight by the well authenticated fact that in the East Indies the secret of thus suspending life has been handed down to a few favored men of our day. Persons have been buried, more than once, and in some cases before the highest British authorities of the land; their grave has been guarded by government troops, and after several months they have been disinterred in the presence of numerous witnesses, among whom were physicians, and they have been seen to come back to life with all the familiar symptoms of sufferers recovering from syncope or cataleptic attacks.

The other announcement, hardly less startling, and decidedly more shocking to all our ideas of life and death, conveyed the conviction of another savant, in Paris, that the head of a decapitated man was, at least for an hour, and perhaps even longer, still possessed of feeling, and that hence the guillotine was the most cruel instrument by which the death penalty could be inflicted upon criminals. This view also sought support in the very general impression among the ignorant that life may continue in a beheaded criminal by means of the blood remaining in the head—a popular notion, of which the eccentric German writer Hoffmann has availed himself in one of his most remarkable sketches. A foreigner, called to Paris during the Reign of Terror, meets toward night, on one of the bridges across the Seine, a woman of passing beauty, whose unearthly pallor is set off by a broad velvet ribbon around her snow-white neck. She seems to be in dire distress; he offers his help, and, finding her apparently in a state of overexcitement, unable to give an account of herself and her friends, takes her to his home. On the next morning he finds, to his horror and utter consternation, that the strange necklace has given way, and the head rolled to the floor; afterward he learns that the unfortunate woman had been guillotined the day before, and an ardent lover had attempted, with a physician's assistance, to place her head on her trunk and to restore her to life by a tight bandage, intended to unite the severed arteries. Other novelists, our own Poe among them, have seized upon the attractive subject, and thus confirmed the popular impression; while not long ago a clever writer put into the mouth of a French physiologist traveling in South America so graphic an account of the resuscitation of an executed criminal that the story went the round of the papers throughout the whole world, misleading many by its grave tone and extreme plausibility, and welcomed by thousands who delight in "snapping on horrors."

As all error is useful by leading to research, and thus finally to truth, these and similar misstatements have recently called attention once more to the oft-mooted question, Where is the seat of life? It is well known that the heart, the stomach and the head have all been presented and believed in as the true homes of the life of man; but the oldest and most general belief is, after all, expressed in the words, "The life, which is the blood" (Gen. ix, 4.) The simple accident of a man's death after a violent hemorrhage may very well have led to this early faith, and hence we find that, as Homer's heroes pour forth their life with their blood, so with the Jews, also, to shed a man's blood meant to cause his death. The earth opened her mouth to receive Abel's blood from Cain's hand, and the voice of Abel's blood cried unto the Lord from the ground. The whole East; therefore, has ever believed that "the life of all flesh is the blood thereof," and especially that the seat of man's life is in his blood. The West, ever skeptic, and in its general tendency to judge, not by faith in dogmatic assertion, but from the results of actual observation, has long since established the truth that life dwells, not in one great center, but in every great or small part of the system, and that the nerves of our bodies, the flesh of our muscles, and the tissues of our glands, although all in need of blood, still have each a life of their own. Even Harvey's great discovery of the circulation of the blood, established in spite of the fierce opposition of the disciples of Galen and the protestations of the faculty, only served to make this point clearer. Nevertheless, the blood was even in the seventeenth century universally looked upon as the great principle of life, and then it was that the long-cherished idea of transfusing the blood, and with it the power of life, from one person into the system of another, became once more prominent, and led to numerous interesting experiments.

A Benedictine monk was the first to give publicity to the strange doctrine in a sermon. Then a learned French nobleman, M. de Montmor, a member and founder of the Academy, and a friend of Gassendi, suggested the first actual operation. A young man of fifteen, who after the fashion of the day had been bled twenty times, till there was very little blood and still less life left in him, was chosen for the experiment. A Dr. Denis drew eight ounces more from him, and immediately, through the same orifice, injected arterial blood from a lamb. The patient bled a little from the nose, but soon after rose, dined heartily, and recovered. Dr. Lower repeated the experiments in England, confining himself, however, to animals; and from that day the transfusion of blood has become a frequent if not a familiar operation.

Blood has thus been successfully injected into patients, as a last and heroic remedy against arterial hemorrhages, and in the case of threatening losses of blood after childbirth. But it must be borne in mind that in all these instances, the whole important apparatus of nerves, muscles and glands was in perfect condition, and that hence the blood here appeared only in the light of new oil poured into a lamp, the mechanism of which is in good order. When, on the contrary, the loss or want of blood is a consequence of some severe injury done to those parts of the system, a new supply of blood can, of course, be but of little use, and rarely, if ever, renders even a momentary service.

The operation is, however, not only resorted to when the patient has to be supplied with new blood in place of that which he has lost, but also in order to substitute good blood for vitiated blood. This is the case, for instance, when persons are poisoned by carbonic oxyde. This gas has a most remarkable power of affecting the tiny globules of our blood; it combines with them, mechanically, in a way which deprives them of their oxygen and renders them unfit to sustain life. For several hours this is the only effect of the deadly gas, and, if in this interval, before the alteration in the blood produces death, the vascular system can be emptied, and new blood infused to replace the vitiated, poisoned blood, life may be saved.

By the side of these truly scientific and all-important benefits to be derived from a transfusion of blood, we find that men, from time immemorial, have connected with it almost superstitious hopes of ascertaining and mastering by its aid at last the great mystery of life itself. If the life of the flesh is in the blood thereof, they say, why should not life be given, why not restored, to lifeless bodies? Medicine and physiology, we need not add, have never encouraged such idle thoughts; but charlatans and dreamers have again and again returned to the puzzling question. In the case of decapitated criminals alone, the experiment promised a certain possibility, which finally, in our own day, led a great master of his science, whom we can almost claim as our own, to perform some exceedingly interesting operations. This was Dr. Brown-Sequard, who in 1851 experimented on two murderers that had been guillotined.

One, a young man of twenty, had been beheaded at eight in the morning; eleven hours afterward every trace of irritability had naturally disappeared from the muscles of the body. A few minutes after nine o'clock the operator injected blood, drawn from his own veins, into one hand of the corpse. The operation continued for thirty-five minutes; the blood, which was red when it entered the orifice, passed off black, as in a living body; irritability was restored, and by proper means a movement in the muscles of the hand could be clearly discerned.

In the case of the other victim, about a pound of the blood of a dog was used; but it had been previously deprived of its coagulable part, and beaten in the air. The body was that of a robust man of forty, and had been left undisturbed for more than twelve hours. One arm was then cut off, and the blood injected through the brachial artery. The skin began to resume its natural color, the hairs rose upright, and a so called goose-skin appeared. The veins on the back of the hand became bluish; the pulse began to beat, and to raise the artery at the wrist; the fingers ceased to be rigid; and for nearly six hours the muscles of the arm remained irritable.

These two experiments had produced such remarkable phenomena that Dr. Brown-Sequard determined to push his researches still further, and to ascertain by actual experience if a head detached from the body could be at least momentarily revived by the infusion of arterial blood. He beheaded a dog at the junction between neck and breast. Ten minutes after all symptoms of life had disappeared from the severed head, when the eyes had lost all expression, and electric currents even produced only contractile spasms, Dr. Brown-Sequard applied to the four arteries of the head a number of tubes, connected with a quantity of blood which had been deprived of its coagulable part and charged with oxygen. An ingenious mechanism, devised by the operator, supplied the action of the heart, and caused the blood to circulate, as in life, through the brains. After a few moments, spasmodic jerks gave a kind of animation to the face; then the movements became regular and precise, and soon all the muscles were movable, and the eyes turned to and fro. The experiment was continued for a quarter of an hour, and during all that time these manifestations of life continued, and, apparently at least, in the guise of voluntary actions. They ceased as soon as the injection of blood was interrupted, and then followed all the usual phenomena observed in agony; the pupil of the eye contracted, and then was dilated, and life passed away once more with a last effort, a violent convulsion of all the facial muscles.

This astounding result produced the deepest impression upon all the by-standers, among whom were some of the most eminent men of France. The paramount importance of bringing arterialized blood in contact with the cerebral matter was fully established, and the reason clearly shown why in a case of syncope a horizontal position is favorable to a speedy reflux of the life-giving liquid to the brains. But the physiologist sees as clearly that the brains of a dead body, subjected to the infusion of blood, operate only as a complicated mechanism, which receives once more the blood that it needs in order to be kept in motion; the spirit is, nevertheless, flown, and no "life's blood" can bring it back. In fact, the head is only the instrument of the intellect, and, as a French writer has pointedly expressed it, the human machine only marks life as the clock marks time.—Scheie de Vere, in Appletons' Journal.

One of the papers tells the story of a man coming into church after the sermon had begun, whereupon the preacher paused and said to him: "Glad to see you, sir! Come in, come in! Always glad to see those here late who can't come early." To which salutation the stranger, taking his seat, as coolly replied: "Thank you; would you favor me with the text?" "Certainly," was the answer; which was done, and the discourse moved on as before. This recalls a Missouri incident. One cold night Rev. Dr. Ezra S. Ely, of Presbyterian fame, was preaching in a prairie farm house. When about a third through the sermon, two late-comers rode up to the door and entered. The doctor stopped and said that, as these friends were very cold with their ride, the meeting would sing a hymn while they were warming themselves. Which being done, he observed that, as they had taken so much trouble to come, he would begin his discourse again for their benefit; and, taking his text accordingly, he commenced once more at the beginning, and repeated his sermon, rather more to their edification than to that of the rest of the audience, perhaps.—Springfield Republican.

A few years ago, at a negro camp meeting held near Flushing, the colored preacher said: "I tell you, my blubbed bredern, dat de debble is a big hog, an' one of desé days he'll come along an' root you all out." An old negro, in one of the anxious pews, hearing this, raised himself from the straw, and, clasping his hands, exclaimed in the agony of his tears: "Ring him, Lord! ring him!"

ALL FOR THE BEST.

BY I. N. KANAGA.

"All for the best" then fling away terror,
Meet all your fears and your foes in the van;
And in the midst of your dangers and terrors
Trust like a child and strive like a man!"

It cannot be denied successfully that we live in a world of sorrow, perpetually surrounded with trials and care. Yet each sorrow has a corresponding joy, and each trial an alleviating cheer. This, we must admit, is a vale of tears, yet we are traveling to, and expecting ere long to reach a tearless clime, where all sorrow and sighing shall flee away forever! Then let us act and live as if we really believed all is for the best, and heaven will abundantly recompense us for all we suffer here. For "verily there is a reward for the righteous."

God hangs out his glorious bow, hard against the retiring storm. For every wintery and dark day he gives us a day of brightness and resplendent summer time. The great oaks of the forests, after centuries of flourishing and glory, may be cut down, yet others will soon spring up and take their places. God rules the wind and the tides, and ordereth all things well—all for the best. Blessed be the name of the Lord!

We read his wisdom alike in earth and sky—in the worlds above and in the worlds below. He presideth over all, governs all, directs all, orders all things in his infinite intelligence, and "doeth all things well." All is for the best, and this is equally true in the kingdom of nature as well as the kingdom of grace. Then trust in God always, and all things shall be for the best.

"All's for the best! unbiased, unbounded,
Providence reigns from the east to the west;
And by both wisdom and mercy surrounded,
Be happy, and hope that all's for the best!"

In Richard Grafton's Chronicle, printed at London in 1567, is found this explanation of the origin of the term sterling, as applied to coin and as a standard of gold and silver: "Also about this time a Parliament was holden at London, in the which it was ordered that the English Grote should be coyned of a certain weight and of the one side the King's picture, and one the other side a cross as large fully as the Grote, to advoyd clipping. And at thys tyme was used to be coyned that standard and finenesse that was called sterling money, which before as we maye reade was first coyned in the town of Sterlyng in Scotland, and therefore it taketh the name of Sterlyng."

Giving an Act of Worship.—Every gift for the Lord's cause should be an act of worship, even as the wise men from the East first fell down and worshiped the Babe in the manger, acknowledging him to be the promised Messiah, and then opened their treasures and presented him gifts—gold, frankincense and myrrh; an adoring faith sanctifying the gifts of love and gratitude. The still higher gift of personal consecration God rightly asks of those who are bought with a price—the blood of Christ.

Value of the Bible.—"I am a creature of the day, passing through life as an arrow through the air. I am a spirit come from God; just hovering over the great gulf, till, a few moments hence, I am no more seen! I drop into an unchangeable eternity. I want to know one thing—the way to heaven; how to land on that happy shore. God himself has condescended to teach the way. He hath written it in a book. Oh, give me that book! At any price, give me the book of God!"—John Wesley.

A notch literary gentleman was strolling one day in the vicinity of Weehawken, and looking for the scene of the memorable duel between Hamilton and Burr, he observed a farm-wagon approaching, and hailed the driver of it with:

"Ho, there, can you tell me where it was Hamilton fell?"

"Fell," said the countryman, "did any one fall about here? I hadn't hearn tell of it. Did he hurt himself much?"

Eleven young Japanese officers arrived in New York from their native land on Saturday, November 26, and put up at the Metropolitan Hotel. They are from nineteen to twenty-four years old. About half their number will soon proceed to England, while the rest will enter college in the United States. All of them speak English fluently.

Vanity.—Fisher Ames says: "It has long been my opinion that of all passions vanity is the greatest corrupter of good dispositions. Others subside occasionally. Avarice sometimes sleeps. But vanity is a perpetual trade wind, always moved by a single cause, and always setting one way."

A jury at New York has fixed the price of "kissing ladies for fun" at $150. They decide that it is apt to raise hopes of marriage, and make a breach of promise suit good.

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

The "Baptist General Convention" of Oregon has the names of forty ministers upon its roll.

The society at White Plains have purchased a lot on Railroad avenue, adjoining Lafayette Hall, for the sum of $7,000, on which they propose to erect a new church.

Protestant Germany is not very liberal in supporting missions. "Infidel France" contributes more to the Catholic Society for Propagation of the Faith than is contributed in all Germany to its missionary societies.

Teetotalism seems to be making progress in Wesleyanism. Many of the ministers have espoused it, and are zealous and indefatigable in trying to promote it among the people. Especially in the Sunday schools does it seem to prosper.

The church at Norfolk, Virginia, has decided, by a vote of more than two to one, to adhere to the Methodist Protestant Church. This vote was taken in view of the proposition made to unite with the Methodist Episcopal Church South.

The census returns show that the Presbyterians are the wealthiest denomination in Philadelphia, their property being worth more than $4,000,000. They also furnish more sittings than any other church. The Episcopalians stand next in both respects.

The Roman Catholic Bishop of Quincy, Illinois, has excommunicated for a year nearly the entire congregation at New Albany for engaging in a dance on Sunday, November 6, in opposition to the will of the priests, on the occasion of the dedication of a new church.

The English Church Missionary Society, which has a large missionary force in China, regards the late outbreak at Tientsin as the fruit of the grasping and arrogant course of the Roman Catholic priests and nuns, and hopes that England will not be drawn into a quarrel by the inexcusable conduct of the French.

Dr. Maxwell writes from the town of Baksa, in the Island of Formosa, that a religious interest has just been awakening among the aborigines of that island, a people different from the governing Chinese class. Fifty families have destroyed their idols, and there are two hundred regular attendants in the new chapel at Baksa.

The Roman Catholic papers publish at full length the Pope's encyclical of November 1, on the "Usurpation of Rome." It abounds in the bitterest language toward the "Piedmontese Government," and ends by pronouncing the major excommunication upon all who have been guilty of this sacrilege, or have aided or abetted it.

The Prussian minister of religion, though a Protestant, seems to be doing all he can to force the dogma of infallibility on the Roman Catholics of Germany. The Archbishops of Cologne and Munich are silencing the professors in the Catholic universities who will not yield on this point, and he seems determined to aid them as far as is possible.

The Herald reports that the Pope, unable to discharge the duties of his office, has delegated to Cardinal Cullen, of Dublin, the power of appointing all the English-speaking bishops in Great Britain, America, Australia, etc. Some think that this foreshadows his elevation to the papacy, especially as it is thought that a foreigner as Pope would be more independent of the Italian government.

A very gratifying and pleasant meeting was held in Dublin lately, by a number of Wesleyan ministers, to present an address and a purse of sovereigns to the Rev. James Tobias, on the occasion of his retirement from the secretaryship of the Wesleyan Conference, which he filled efficiently and satisfactorily for many years. A large number of ministers assembled to do honor to the worthy ex-secretary.

It now seems unlikely that any bishops will take part in the agitation for repudiating the doctrine of papal infallibility and the authority of the Vatican Council, which is still actively continued among the laity and a portion of the priesthood. It is expected that all the professors of the University of Bonn will be suspended by the Archbishop of Cologne, as they persist in refusing submission to the council.

The Wesleyans of Canada last year sustained worship in one hundred and eighty-one missionary districts, six being among the settlers of British Columbia and Red river, twenty-seven among the Indians of Saskatchewan and Hudson's Bay, one hundred and forty among the English-speaking towns of Canada, and four each among the French of Quebec and the Germans of Ontario. Their missionary receipts last year were $74,930.

A field agent in western Iowa has been instrumental in organizing eleven Presbyterian churches during the past two years. The Neosho and the Humboldt presbyteries in Kansas were organized but three years ago, with five members each. They now have thirty-one ministers, forty-one churches, and about one thousand members. Osage presbytery, in Missouri, has over fifteen thousand members, where it had less than one hundred five years ago.

An important religious movement is in progress in Ohio, which tends toward the ultimate union of the Baptists and Campbellites, or "Christians," of the State. The latter sect have three hundred and fifty churches and thirty thousand members, and would make a formidable accession to the Baptists. Although the "Christians" disclaim any desire for immediate union, yet they have submitted a number of propositions, upon which it is hoped that both parties could unite.

A confession of faith has been published in Spain, with the following title: "The Confession of Faith of the Reformed Church, approved by the General Assembly of Seville in the year 1869." The New York Observer says that it is largely drawn from the Westminster Confession, the chapters on the decrees and adoption having been omitted, and the subjects of justification and sanctification being embraced in one chapter. With a few unimportant additional changes, the Westminster Assembly's Confession stands as the symbol of the Reformed Church of Spain.—Presbyterian.

Four vacancies have occurred in the Irish Wesleyan ministry since Conference—three by death and on account of failing health. The Rev. Charles L. Grant was ill at the time the Conference was in session, and soon after died. The Rev. J. S. Bassett, a worthy and promising young minister, followed Mr. Grant to the rest and reward of the faithful. And a few days ago the Rev. Henry Geddes was summoned from the field of labor and conflict here to the enjoyment and glories of the "world to come." Mr. Geddes was sixty-four years of age when he died, and had been thirty-nine years in the ministry.

Our American Lutherans have not yet taken hold very heartily of the work of foreign missions. The expenses of their single mission among the Telegus of South India have been $3,500 the past year, which they have had great difficulty in securing, although they are one of the strongest denominations numerically in the country. Father Heyer, a grand old man of a somewhat Methodist type, aided by two young men, are their only missionaries. Their mission at Rajahmundry is a new one, occupied scarcely a year, and instructs one hundred and sixty-one baptized persons and two hundred scholars.

South Sea Islands.—In speaking of the wonderful triumphs of the gospel in the South Sea Islands, the report of the London Missionary Society says:

"In no part of the world have the triumphs of Christianity been more marked than in the islands of Polynesia. It would be difficult, probably impossible, to find any chapter in the history of the church describing an overthrow of idolatry so rapid and so complete as that which has taken place in the South Sea Islands. Sixty years ago there was not a solitary native Christian in Polynesia; now it would be difficult to find a professed idolator in those islands of Eastern or Central Polynesia where Christian missionaries have been established."

Papal Grievances.—These are very many just now. The Quirinal at Rome is regarded by the Pope as his private property. Italy seems to be of the opinion that it belongs to the State. Then there are the caricatures sold on the street that afflict his holiness. One just now on exhibition in the Via Condetta is particularly offensive. A print of 1848, representing the Pope blessing Italy, is revived now, with an inscription under it which says that our Saviour hid himself from the people because they would have taken him by force and made him king, but that his vicar hides himself because he is not allowed to be a king. Another trouble that the gentleman of the vatican takes to heart is the recollection, constantly recalled to mind by the journalists, of the former liberal course of Pius the Ninth.

The Japanese line of Mikados is the only unbroken line of royalty in the world. The Japanese trace the ancestry of the present Mikado without any break in their genealogy to a misty antiquity, and Ten-sho-go-dai-jin, the mother of all the gods, is his primeval ancestor. The Japanese government has for some time been discouraging the Buddhist and all other religions than the old Shinto religion in which she is worshiped. A new Shinto temple is now building in Yokohama, over which a converted Buddhist priest will have charge under the Shinto bishop of the diocese. There is little doubt that this new movement in Yokohama is designed by the Mikado's government to guard against the influence of Christianity in this large foreign port.

TO SUBSCRIBERS.—Any person wishing to subscribe for this paper can do so by paying the Methodist preacher in the circuit, and forwarding to us his receipt for $3, with the address of the subscriber upon it, stating Post Office, State, Circuit and Conference. The receipt ought to be taken in duplicate.

N. B.—Agents are requested, wherever practicable, to invest and remit funds in a POST OFFICE ORDER, DRAFT, or by EXPRESS. If this cannot be done, REGISTER the letter at our expense.

When money is forwarded in either of the above methods we will be responsible for it, but not otherwise.

POST OFFICES.

As changes are being made in the post offices of the preachers, they will greatly oblige us by furnishing their addresses as early as possible. Don't forget to give the post office from which your paper is to be changed, as well as that to which it is to be sent.

LOUISIANA ANNUAL CONFERENCE

The Louisiana Annual Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church South began its twenty-fifth session at the Carondelet Street Church, of this city, on Wednesday, the fourth of January, 1871. Conference met at nine o'clock, and was opened with religious exercises by Bishop Doggett. The Bishop delivered an interesting address, and then proceeded to organize. C. F. Evans was elected secretary, and John Wilkinson assistant secretary. Wednesday and Thursday were occupied with the usual routine business. The most of the mornings were consumed in the examination of characters and a thorough review of the work. Bishop Doggett knows how to put searching questions in the right place. The afternoons have been occupied by the sittings of the Committee of the Whole on Missions. The attendance of both preachers and laymen is not large, but increases as the session advances. The Conference is honored with an unusual amount of episcopal presence, Bishops Marvin and Keener, in addition to the presiding Bishop, being in attendance. The Conference is blessed and delighted by the presence and fellowship of these brethren. As we write on Thursday evening it is too early to give statistical information. The financial reports so far indicate an improvement on the past year. The preachers have been better supported, and the collections promise to foot up encouragingly. Several young men have come up for admission on trial, and the personnel of the Conference never looked better. Our indefatigable missionary secretary, Dr. McFerrin, is with us and at his work. We predict that he will get all he asks of Louisiana.

MARTHA WASHINGTON COLLEGE.—This model institution for the education of young ladies is advertised in our columns. It is located at Abingdon, Virginia, a salubrious and delightful region. We can say nothing that should so much commend the college as the fact that it is under the control and presidency of Rev. W. G. E. Cunnyngham, D. D.

MINISTERIAL GIVING.

Our preachers are, we believe, generally unsurpassed and, we may say, unequaled in their contributions to all the benevolent enterprises of the church. We have no statistics on this subject, and it is probably better that we should have none; but the impression is strengthened by the observation of every year, that no class of men give so much, in proportion to their means, as Methodist preachers. This fact is abundantly illustrated at our Annual Conference gatherings, where large tribute is laid upon these devoted men. The greater part of the old missionary debt has been assumed already by them, and they will probably have the most of it to pay. At the Conference missionary anniversaries they are, by eminence, the givers. The lay congregations rarely give a third of what is raised on these occasions, although the preachers have already nearly exhausted their little store by the collections on their several works.

Their money goes into every educational enterprise, into the foundations of every school and college, and into every church building and every charitable undertaking. For the most part their giving is an act of self-denial and sacrifice. Their deep poverty abounds unto the riches of their liberality. Many comforts are given up, that the appeals of the church may not be made in vain. Often is it the case that the threadbare servant of God gives so nearly all, that he has hardly enough to pay his ferriages on his way home from Conference. After all the collections at Conference are lifted his pocket-book is not worth picking up. Our itinerants cannot withstand an appeal for any object that looks to the relief of the destitute or to the salvation of the world. As they "abound in everything, in faith and utterance and knowledge, and in all diligence," so they "abound in this grace also." There is a Macedonian recklessness in their liberality, a godly abandon and an audacity of faith which often equals the widow's consecration when she cast "all her living" into the treasury.

Years ago we were tempted to regard this trait as a fault, or at least as a censurable infirmity; as an inequality and an injustice deserving rebuke rather than commendation. We have come, however, to look upon the matter differently, and to feel that such examples are needed for a rebuke to the covetousness of the church and the world. It is not the preachers who do more than their duty, but it is others who do less. They are not to be checked and pitied who act upon the principle "that it is more blessed to give than to receive;" and their generosity is a censure to those who come far short of the scriptural measure. It is well, it is necessary that preachers in this should be ensamples to the flock, and that they should plant the standard far in advance of the practice of the people. We like to see a Conference of itinerants turning their pockets inside out under a sound missionary appeal, and thus challenging the whole church to follow them to the same height of faith and denial. As ministers are to display the loftiest faith, the most untarnished purity, the deepest spirituality, so they are required to be foremost in their giving. Wesley's example in this direction was no more than was just and expedient; and Asbury was never more apostolic than when he parted with his watch to help one poor brother, and gave his shirt to aid another. The moral influence of ministerial devotion in this direction is of incalculable advantage in cultivating this grace in the church, and in keying up and giving tone to its entire financial operations.

We would earnestly resist the notion which some entertain that preachers give too much. We hope that they generally come nearly up to the measure of duty, but we doubt if the most liberal go beyond. There are, doubtless, some exceptions to the general rule in the degree of duty. The fact that a minister gives himself does not relieve him of the obligation to give his money. In proportion as he has it, whether received from the church or from other sources, it is his duty to give. We know some who conscientiously give a tenth of all they receive from every source, whilst their time and talents besides are wholly devoted to the service of the church. The law was doubtless "our schoolmaster" in giving as in other things, but it brings us to Christ, that we may learn of a greater Master, and that our love and its expression may be immeasurably deepened and extended. Blessed is the man whom the law has brought to Christ in this respect, and whose gauge of generosity spreads and deepens into this sea of gospel line!

Neither the church nor the world can hardly get over the dubious fact of wealth in the ministry; but where this condition is associated with covetousness, the influence is pernicious in the extreme. A money-loving preacher, prosperous and notably stingy, is a blight upon the pecuniary interests of any church. His presence and example, whether he be local or itinerant, will make themselves felt disastrously in all the financial operations of the work. He will do more to educate a society in the easy vice of covetousness, and to lower the standard of giving, than all other influences combined. Ministers whose lot it is to be rich have special reasons to guard against the reproach of avarice. The church and the world look to them especially, and it is in their power to be a blessing or a withering curse to the piety and benevolence of a community. No preacher, rich or poor, can successfully plead for the financial interests of the church unless he possesses the spirit of gospel liberality, and illustrates it in his personal contributions. The sinner may as consistently preach repentance and holiness as for the covetous minister to instruct the church in the duty of honoring the Lord with their substance, and with the first fruits of their increase.

SUNDAY SCHOOL GATHERING.

It was our fortune to be at the Carondelet Street Church on Friday night, the thirtieth ultimo, where a Christmas gathering of the Sunday school was in progress. The large basement was filled with happy children and a considerable congregation of grown people. Short addresses were delivered by Rev. Mr. Finlay, of Lexington, Virginia, by the pastor, Dr. Walker, and by Bishop Keener. The speeches were excellent, and the singing was perfectly delightful. "Glory to God in the Highest" was rendered in a manner to satisfy and to exalt the most devout frame. After an hour—the sweetest and shortest hour of all the holidays—the curtain was drawn, and lo! a chimney, over the top of which looked forth a venerable personage, whose ample locks and beard were silvered with age, and whose overcoat was flecked with the brightest snow-drops. The pastor introduced him to the wondering audience "as that excellent person, Santa Claus." His venerable highness soon came down, and distributed presents with a princely generosity—every scholar receiving something worth taking home, and suited to the age and sex. For ourselves we have to thank Mr. Santa Claus most heartily for the benignant and successful performance of his part, and for a well-tempered pocket knife. This same and singular and suggestive distinction was conferred upon the Bishop and all the clergy, we believe. The superintendent, Bro. R. L. Walmsley, was in charge of the exercises throughout, and everything was wisely and tastefully arranged. The music, under the conduct of the ladies, was eminently well done, and the whole affair was the most pleasant, to our mind, of any Christmas gathering we have attended for years.

A MAN of virtue is an honor to his country, a glory to humanity, a satisfaction to himself, and a benefactor to the whole world. He is rich without oppression or dishonesty, charitable without ostentation, courteous without deceit, and brave without vice.

MANKIND is a gaping monster that ovos to be tickled and is seldom disappointed.

Why the Pope Wishes to Come to North Carolina.

MR. EDITOR: As a contribution to the answer to this problem I would suggest that:

1. The climate of North Carolina is highly salubrious, and strongly resembles that of Italy.

2. North Carolina offers as much security to life and property as any State in the Union, or at least did before the war.

3. There are no Catholics in North Carolina; but it is not unlikely that he would be glad to escape for awhile to some Protestant retreat, as he has suffered very much of late from his own people.

4. There can be no comparison between the honest comfort and room which North Carolina offers and the circumscribed quarters of San Angelo.

5. There are large tracts of country in North Carolina that would afford the distinguished exile ample scope for his charity, and might sooner or later be to him a source of no little profit. One-half the money now required to keep up the Vatican would suffice him to live in comparative luxury in North Carolina. Besides, he might save enough annually to buy more land than he has ever owned before.

6. I do not, in this, say anything of the annoyances he would escape by this step. He might do away altogether with the Papal Zonaves, the papal prisons, and the Pope's body-guard, and get rid of that dreadful routine and ceremony that must by this time have become exceedingly wearisome to his highness.

7. On last Sabbath Victor Emanuel entered Rome as the head of the people, the court and the army of Italy, and occupied it as the permanent capital of his empire. This situation should now be accepted by the Pope, and regarded as one of those great turns in the wheel of providence that puts down one and another up. He can now retire with honor. His greater excommunication will remain on record, and be just as consuming and destructive of the King of Italy at the distance of three thousand miles as if in the same town.

8. The various celebrations and illuminations of the Catholic Church could be had in North Carolina as readily as anywhere in the world, and at as little cost. Nature has done more there toward furnishing fuel and lights than in Italy or anywhere in Europe.

I am convinced that it is only a profound ignorance of the resources of North Carolina that could suggest wonder at the Pope's selection of the safest and most desirable retreat on earth.

Yours, NORTH CAROLINA.

REV. GEORGE H. CLINTON, D. D.—We learn, through Rev. D. Watkins, of the Mississippi Conference, that Bro. Clinton died at the residence of his father, in St. Helena parish, Louisiana, on Tuesday, the twenty-seventh of December, 1870. Dr. Clinton was in the prime of life, a burning and shining light, and a meek and devoted minister of Christ. He was a man to be loved and reverenced, as well as admired, and who, as a preacher, did the whole work of an evangelist. About two years ago he was transferred to the St. Louis Conference, and stationed at the First church of St. Louis. During the past fall he returned to his father's in broken health; and, as it has proved, to die. We hope some one will furnish us an extended sketch of his life and character at an early day.

SEMI-CENTENARY.—Our church in St. Louis have made elaborate and suitable preparations for the commemoration of the semi-centenary of Methodism in that city. The services are to take place January 15–22, 1871, and we doubt not will be of great interest, and we hope of great benefit to the cause of Christ. We are glad to note this among other indications of life and progress in the St. Louis churches, and are sorry that it is not in our power to accept the courteous invitation which comes to us through J. W. Lewis, chairman of the Committee on Invitation, to attend, on the occasion, as the guest of the church.

DIALOGUE OF DEVILS.

Some years ago, perhaps thirty, I picked up an old pamphlet entitled "Dialogue of Devils." It was written, as I understood, by some of the old Kentucky preachers. The other day I was giving a friend a synopsis of the contents. He did not say, after the fashion of the "Arabian Nights," "It is worthy to be put in books;" but he said it was worthy to be put into the ADVOCATE.

The story, as I remember, began in this wise: A traveler, about nightfall, called at a wayside house to ask a night's entertainment, but on the ground of sickness or want of room he was refused, but was told there was a vacant house a little way ahead, where he could spend the night with tolerable comfort, and find shelter and food for his horse.

On reaching the designated house he put his horse in the stable, kindled a fire in one of the rooms, and, after taking some refreshments from his lunch wallet, laid down on his saddle-blanket, his saddle-bags for a pillow and his cloak for a covering. It was winter, and the winds were whistling around the house. Save this, all was still. His fire was slowly flickering down, and rather a dreamy heaviness began to steal over his senses; but suddenly he heard voices. At first he was startled, but soon found that the parties either knew or cared nothing about him. As their conversation was curious he was tempted to listen. He soon discovered that there were three, and that they represented themselves as devils charged with the care and oversight of the Baptists, Presbyterians and Methodists in that region. It was their mission to hinder and thwart the success of these Christian denominations. In the conversation the traveler unexpectedly overheard them detail their modus operandi.

The Baptist devil, or rather the devil who sought to circumvent the Baptists, said that the Baptists were really a religious people, and were laboring to bring sinners to Christ; that he had had a great deal of trouble with them, but that he had changed his tactics for some time past, and with encouraging results. He said he had managed to impress upon them that baptism, and that only by immersion, was the grand thing in Christianity; that they were mainly set for the defense of this ancient and holy rite. He said by this he had turned off their zeal from Christ and holiness; had stirred up a great deal of strife; had made them narrowly and exclusively sectarian, and kept them from doing his Master's kingdom much serious damage. The other devils applauded his sharp strategy.

The Presbyterian devil, a grave-spoken diplomatist, said that his labors had been arduous; what with the schools, the missions, the zeal and high-toned morality of the Presbyterians, he had had work enough; that he had been compelled to compromise and yield something in order to gain something. So he had deemed it wise and expedient to give up the Sabbath, or at least to appear to do so, on the condition that the remainder of the week he should not be so stoutly resisted. He said that since he had effected this arrangement he had got on better. To attach a vast importance to the observance of the Sabbath, to make it a preponderating consideration in their theory and practice of religion, he had rather lessened the fervor of devotion on other days. But he said it would not do, of course, to surrender a whole day to religious devotion. So he said that as far as he could he got up various diversions. He sent the old gentlemen out on a Sabbath morning's devotional walk, as the old gentlemen thought and intended; but he said he managed to put in various suggestions about the plans and business of the coming week, so that the old gentlemen's devotional walk did not spiritually amount to any great matter. Then he said the ladies had to be managed—they must appear in God's house "decently and in order," but that he managed to mingle with godly zeal a strong seasoning of worldly vanity; and thus, by good management, he had taken off much of the Sabbath's edge. This smart piece of diplomacy was highly complimented by the other devils.

When these two had concluded, the devil who overlooked the Methodists for evil spoke and said that his attention had been mainly devoted to the Methodist preachers. His modes of dealing with them were various. In the first place, he did all he could to keep them from preaching at all. He told them it was hard work and poor pay; that it was a sad and homeless life—a life of ceaseless wanderings and toil. But if this failed, as in many cases it did, he set to work to excite in them a preternatural and unwise zeal—to sing, preach and exhort themselves to death; and in some cases they love themselves out at an early day, and filled a premature grave. But often this strategy did not succeed. His plan, he said, was then to get them prematurely married, or to marry a rich woman, as in either case it most always resulted in location and great loss of usefulness. These schemes toward the ruin of ministerial usefulness elicited the highest applause.

Soon after this the conference dissolved, and silence reigned, leaving the traveler to muse and sleep. W.

RELIGIOUS ECONOMY.

The following is taken from a letter of Bishop Marvin to the St. Louis Christian Advocate, giving some account of the West Texas Conference and country:

Finances here, as elsewhere, are looking up. Preachers are supported a shade better. There is a marked improvement in Conference collections. Some little advance in missionary collections. The assessment for Bishops' fund met, and more. There was actually a surplus of two dollars and six bits.

I must tell you that, first and last, I have learned "a right smart" in Texas. Among other things I have gained some information on the subject of religious economy. For instance, it was a Texan who, during the war, when Confederate money went down to twenty for one, consoled himself that, at any rate, it was good for one thing—it would pay the preacher. On this trip I have met with another case which is too rich to remain in obscurity. I am assured by several credible witnesses that it occurred literally as follows:

A steward on one of the best circuits in the West Texas Conference contributed, as quarterage, one hundred pounds of bacon. Now, bacon was ten cents a pound, but at the quarterly meeting the brother brought in his bill, charging fifteen cents. Objection was made to the price. The brother acknowledged that if he had taken his bacon to town he would not have thought of asking above ten cents for it. Upon being asked why he charged the preacher more than the market price, he gave, in all simplicity and seriousness, this reply—that all he gave to the church was exactly so much treasure laid up in heaven. It was important to put his bacon at a big price, that it might swell that account as much as possible! I gave it up. This exceeded any case I ever heard of in Missouri.

To augment one's treasure in heaven by a sharp transaction with the preacher was a bran new operation. The preacher was to be fleeced that this dear brother might be rich in eternity. He is quite a prosperous planter, and they say his account in heaven is small—uncommonly so for a church member of his means. He feels the importance of making a little go a good way.

How this species of thrift may prosper in the matter of heavenly treasure I shall not undertake to surmise. But I can imagine I see the old brother stand by, in the great day, when his account shall undergo revision, and insist upon the full credit for fifteen cents a pound. Will it be allowed?

Well, well, Bishop Andrew says that human nature is a great rascal, any how.

This Conference, now young and small, is destined to be one of great importance. It has ample territory, fine soil, a salubrious climate, and is about to be penetrated by several railroads. It embraces several important towns on the gulf coast, and will, in a very short time, be populous and prosperous.

The church here has not been inattentive to the interests of education. We have a good school at Goliad. Our school property at Seguin has passed into private hands, but will, I trust, soon be redeemed by the church. Two brethren have generously stepped in and paid the debts. When their outlay is refunded they will make a title to trustees for the church. It is valuable property, and situated at an important point.

COLORED GENERAL CONFERENCE.

We are indebted to the Western Methodist for the following account of the meeting and organization of this body:

The Colored General Conference, authorized by the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, met December 16, in Jackson, Tennessee. Delegates, clerical and lay, were present from eight Annual Conferences. Bishops Paine and McTyeire have been in attendance—also the Rev. Samuel Watson, Thomas Taylor and A. L. P. Green, who with others had been appointed to aid in the separate and independent organization of this new branch of our beloved Methodism. The assistance of the Revs. James A. Heard, W. T. Bolling and Amos W. Jones, and of the Hon. Milton Brown, was formally requested by the members, and kindly rendered them. We enjoyed the privilege of being present on Sunday and Monday, and regretted that pressing duties did not permit us to remain till the close of the session—of the time of which we are not yet advised. Committees were appointed to consider various important interests, and reports submitted were discussed freely and zealously, amended when thought necessary, and adopted for the most part without division. The report on books and periodicals as adopted contemplates that the Rev. Samuel Watson shall continue to conduct for them the Christian Index, and provides, as well as could be done, for the ultimate establishment of their Publishing House in the city of Memphis—to this end they assessed every member of their church, old and young, the sum of twenty-five cents annually. The report on episcopacy, after acknowledging heartily and fully their indebtedness to our Bishops, recommends the election of two Bishops. This was adopted, but when we left the election had not taken place. We subjoin the report which was adopted on ORGANIZATION.

The Committee on Church Organization beg leave to report that they have had the subject under careful consideration, and they are unanimously of opinion that while we gratefully acknowledge the obligations we are under to the white brethren of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, for what they have done for us, as a people (who by service to the country have brought them under reciprocal obligation;) yet the time has come in our history when we believe it will be for the glory of God and the best interests of the church which we represent, that we have a distinct and independent organization—this having been amply provided for by the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, in April, 1866, resolving that: "When two or more Annual Conferences shall be formed, let our Bishops advise and assist them in organizing a separate General Conference jurisdiction for themselves, if they so desire, and the Bishops deem it expedient, in accordance with the doctrine and discipline of our church, and bearing the same relation to the General Conference as the Annual Conferences bear to each other." Five Annual Conferences having been organized, the Bishops, in their address to the General Conference in 1870, say: "It is our purpose, unless otherwise ordered by your body, to call a General Conference, to be holden next winter, for the purpose of organizing them into an entirely separate church, and thus enabling them to become their own guides and governors."

The General Conference at Memphis, in 1870, resolved that the action of the last General Conference in reference to the ultimate organization of the colored people of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, into a separate church, is complete, and therefore no additional legislation is necessary to the end intended. They therefore appointed this, the sixteenth day of December, for the meeting of this General Conference. We therefore, as a committee from each of the eight Annual Conferences represented in this body, do unanimously desire, and we respectfully request to be thus set off as above specified.

Whereas, "The Methodist Episcopal Church in America" was the name first given to the Methodist church by its founder, Rev. John Wesley; and whereas, we are a part of that same church, never having seceded or separated from the church, but in the division of the church by the General Conference in 1844 we naturally belonged to the South, and have been in that division ever since, and now, as we belong to the colored race, we simply prefix our color to the name, and for ourselves adopt the name, as we are in fact a part of the original church, as old as any in America; therefore,

Resolved, 1. That our name be The Colored Methodist Episcopal Church in America.

2. That while we thus claim for ourselves an antiquity running as far back as any other branch of the Methodist family on this side of the Atlantic ocean; and while we claim for ourselves all that we concede to others of ecclesiastical and civil rights, we shall ever hold in grateful remembrance what the Methodist Episcopal Church South has done for us; we shall ever cherish the kindest feelings toward the Bishops and General Conference for giving to us all that they enjoy of religious privileges, the ordination of our deacons and elders, and at this Conference our Bishop or Bishops will be ordained by them to the highest office known in our church—no other colored organization has thus been established in the land. We most sincerely pray, earnestly desire and confidently believe that there will ever be the kindest feelings cherished toward the Methodist Episcopal Church South, and hope that our conduct will be such as to merit and receive the warmest sympathy and support of the church which acted so kindly toward us in aiding us in this our time of need.

3. That we request the Bishops to organize our General Conference on the basis of the Discipline of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, in its entire doctrine, discipline and economy, making only such verbal alterations and changes as may be necessary to conform it to our name and the peculiarities of our condition.

Respectfully submitted.

J. H. ANDERSON, Chairman.

LATER.—After making up our last forms we received the following telegram:

Jackson, Tenn., Dec. 21.—Have elected William H. Miles, of Kentucky, and R. H. Vanderhorst, of Georgia, Bishops, and L. J. Scurlock book agent and assistant editor. Will adjourn to-morrow. Bishops McTyeire and Paine present.

JAMES A. HEARD.

NEW PUBLICATIONS.

THE YOUNG FOLKS' RURAL is a handsome double sheet, published monthly in Chicago by H. N. Lewis, at $1 a year. We have received the first number, November, 1870, and find it a very interesting and instructive periodical. The object is an excellent one—to lead the young to love country life and pursuits, and to furnish them with needful information in the practical affairs of farm life.

THE OLD GUARD, for December, is battling still for Caucasian manhood, and for a better political condition of things in this land. The literature of this number is excellent, and the articles are all fresh and entertaining.

APPLETONS' JOURNAL, of January 7, has more than its usual quantity of illustrations, besides a tempting variety of reading matter on literary and scientific subjects.

LIPPINCOTT'S MAGAZINE, for January, being a holiday number, is embellished with illustrations. The article about "Boys" is very fine, and the article on "The Industrial and Financial Effects of the War" furnishes a good many suggestive facts and figures.

THE NEW YORK TEACHER AND AMERICAN EDUCATIONAL MONTHLY, for the present month, is as entertaining and instructive as usual. This publication is generally well edited, and contains a great amount of matter of special value to educators. It is published by J. W. Schemerhorn & Co., 14 Bond street, New York, at $2 per annum.

THE SECRET FOUND.—One of our most earnest and successful ministers sends a letter with five new subscribers, and tells us he has found the secret of securing subscribers for the Advocate. He says: "I believe I have found out how to get subscribers, and hope I shall be as successful hereafter as I have recently been. I canvass for your paper as I do my pastoral work. When I go into a family I ask if any religious paper is taken. If not, I present the claims of the Advocate, and urge that it be taken. My recent success has encouraged me very much." This is just the way to do such work. Now let all the preachers try it, and the result will astonish them. Never let a family in your charge remain without the church paper. It will help you faithfully in your work. Work on the plan of Bro. M——, and you will succeed. Try it one round.—Richmond Christian Advocate.

CURIOUS AND SUGGESTIVE.

The following, as reported by the Christian Union, contains some singular and instructive items:

Some curious questions relating to home and foreign organization have lately been raised by Methodist Episcopal journals. Thus a layman, with a quick eye for statistics, calls attention in a city cotemporary to the fact that in 1868-69 there was an average deficit of $30 in the payment of salaries to each of the 7,424 itinerant preachers in the United States. Now the cash contributions of the entire Methodist Episcopal Church, including all collections, amounted in the same period to only seventy-three cents per member. Practically, then, the clergy contributed at least forty times more than the same number of laymen to the pecuniary fund of the denomination. Another point opened up by the same writer is the waste arising from the unequal distribution of clerical energy. The minutes for the Annual Conference of 1869 show that there were 1,163 stations or charges left "to be supplied." From these figures a deduction of 160 is necessary on account of transfernls, leaving 1,003 destitute charges. Meanwhile there are 386 presiding elders, and 257 college presidents, professors, editors, book and other agents, in total 643, who rarely preach except in pulpits already filled. Were this number brought into active employment the number of non-supplied charges would be reduced to 360. It is not evident that such a reduction is possible; but it was perhaps well to show what causes are at work to keep certain churches out of the reach of the ministry. Why, asks our inquiring layman, is it not possible to reorganize—place the 387 elders over stated charges, and elect sixty bishops in place of the present ten to do the work of visitation? There are 12,000 churches. Each bishop would have the care of 200 during his pastorate. "The pecuniary gain to the (Methodist Episcopal) Church, under this plan, would be great, but as nothing compared to the spiritual profit arising from the concentration of episcopal talent and work. With four churches per week to visit, and only one Annual Conference to preside over, ample time would be left for attention to matters of general denominational interest, so that the office of the bishop, instead of taking our greatest preachers and soundest divines from pastoral work to serve tables, would open to its occupants the grandest opportunities for bringing the glad tidings of salvation to fallen man."

DEATH OF THE REV. C. B. HARRIS. We learn from the Rev. A. J. See, who made us a brief call this week, that the Rev. C. B. Harris, of the North Mississippi Conference, died in peace, December 9, at his residence in Marshall county, Mississippi. A veteran in the itinerancy, well known by his long and faithful services in the Tennessee and Memphis Conferences, he has at last exchanged the cross for the crown—passed from labor to reward. We met him in great feebleness at the Conference in Water Valley, but we thought not that the end was at hand—happy is he! A memoir, we hope, will be furnished without delay.—Western Methodist.

LONGFELLOW, speaking of books, says truly enough: "Many readers judge of the power of a book by the shock it gives their feelings—as some savage tribes determine the power of muskets by their recoil; that being considered the best which fairly prostrates the purchaser."

ADAM SMITH, the great political economist, makes the following curious definition: "Man is an animal that makes bargains. No other animal does this; no dog exchanges bones with another."

CARLYLE says a deep, great, genuine sincerity is the first characteristic of all men in any way heroic.

Obituaries.

Died, at the residence of his daughter, Mrs. M. P. Gilmer, near Sharon, Madison county, Mississippi, on Tuesday, November 29, 1870, Mr. CHRISTOPHER ADAMS, in the eighty-sixth year of his age.

He was born in 1785, in Lynchburg, Campbell county, Virginia, and was the last surviving member of one of the oldest and most respectable families of that State. He was respected and beloved by all who had the pleasure of knowing him. At fourteen years of age he embraced religion, and for seventy-two years had been a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church. His devoted piety, strict integrity, earnest zeal in the path of right, his unassuming and affectionate disposition, united with an unwavering faith in the mercy and power of the Holy Trinity, rendered Mr. Adams, through the long journey of his useful life, a worthy example to Christians, as well as unbelievers. He frequently said that these words of David the Psalmist were his daily prayer: "Let the words of my mouth and the meditation of my heart be always acceptable in thy sight, O Lord, my strength and my redeemer." And from the peaceful, happy manner of his death his prayer certainly was granted him by God the Father, who has called back to himself his ransomed soul, to dwell with him on high in the world of eternal bliss. Died, of yellow fever, at the residence of her brother, Gibbon S. Chevis, on Bayou Courtableau, on the ninth of November last, LAURA HAYWARD CHEVIS, only surviving daughter of Dr. Francis T. and Elizabeth W. Chevis.

Laura was for many years previous to her death a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, and was a consistent and devoted Christian. During her last illness she showed to all around that not a cloud darkened her sky; that she was ready, when the summons came, to leave earth for heaven.

How uncertain is life! how inscrutable the ways of Providence! The young, the strong, the vigorous fall a victim to disease, while the old and infirm survive its dread attack. Her mother, aged sixty, was struck down with yellow fever and survived, while her daughter, of not half as many years, fell a victim to the same disease. Thus has passed away one of earth's fairest, sweetest flowers—transplanted to bloom immortal in Eden's radiant bowers. Praise cannot now add to thy happiness, neither can envy detract from thy worth.

"Thou art gone to the grave; we no longer behold thee,
Nor tread the path of the world by thy side;
But the wide arms of Mercy are spread to enfold thee,
And sinners may hope, since the Sinless has died." F.

Sister VIRGINIA ELIZABETH, wife of Bro. James Mitchell, died on Sunday, November 7, 1870, in Sabine parish, Louisiana. She was the daughter of William and Louisa German, who emigrated to Louisiana, from Yazoo county, Mississippi, in 1840.

Sister Mitchell had long been a sufferer, but during all this time she was "looking for that blessed hope" which we all have in Jesus. When we saw her last she was on a bed of languishing, from which she never arose. Though all were unremitting in their attention, she could not stay. The tide of life was fast ebbing out into eternity's vast ocean, to rise again upon the distant shores of a happier clime, bearing with it a pure freightage of praise to Jesus' name. Meek and humble in life, none were more consistent in their professions than our dear departed Sister Mitchell. Old Bro. Wright talked with her of death. She had no fears; faith in Jesus had dispelled every cloud that gathered along her pathway.—Brethren and sisters, this doctrine of justification by faith alone is full of comfort, and our Sister Mitchell realized it in her dying moments. Thank God for such a testimony from such a woman! Oh! Lord, thou who art the orphan's friend, shield from harm those bereaved children. Give your hearts, dear little ones, to Jesus, in whose arms your mother now rests. Sister Mitchell was perfectly conscious to the last. She announced the presence of the destroyer: "Mother, I'm dying. My dear children!" Oh! Saviour, thus let us die. R. H. ADAIR.

If you have a Discharge from the nose, offensive or otherwise, stopping up of the nose at times giving a nasal twang to the voice, partial loss of the sense of smell, taste or hearing, feel dull and stupid, have pain or pressure in the head, take cold easily, you may rest assured that you have Catarrh. Thousands annually, without manifesting half of the above symptoms, terminate in Consumption or Insanity, and end in the grave. R. V. Pierce, M. The Child's Corner.

BEWARE OF THE WOLF.

You never need fear, little children, to meet
A wolf in the garden, the wood or the street;
Red Riding Hood's story is only a fable,
I'll give its moral as well as I'm able;
Bad Temper's the wolf which we meet everywhere—
Beware of this wolf! little children, beware!

I know a boy, neither gentle nor wise,
If you tell him a fault, he gives saucy replies;
If kept from his way, in a fury he flies—
Ah! Passion's the wolf with the very large eyes;
Tis ready to snap and to trample and tear—
Beware of this wolf! little children, beware!

I know of a girl always trying to learn
About things with which she should have no concern;
Such mean Curiosity really appears
To me like the waif with the very large ears,
All pricked up to listen, each secret to share—
Beware of this wolf! little children, beware!

And Greediness, that's like the wolf in the wood,
With the very large mouth, ever prowling for food,
That eats so much more than for health can be good;
That would clear a whole pastry cook's shop if it could,
That never a dainty to others will spare—
Beware of this wolf! little children, beware!

Passion, Prying and Greediness, each thus appears
As a wolf with fierce eyes, a large mouth or big ears;
They bring to our nurseries fighting and fears,
They cause bitter quarreling, trouble and tears.
Oh, chase them and cudgel them back to their lair—
Beware of the wolf! little children, beware!

Advance.

THE TWO CRIPPLES.

You want to know why I keep that horrid, common lame sparrow, do you, Harry, and why I make such a fuss over him? Well, if you can keep still for five minutes I will tell you his story. Three years ago I was walking along a poor, miserable street, when I heard a sweet voice above my head singing "The Mocking Bird." It was long since I had heard such fresh young notes, and I was pleased to find they came from the garret of the house I was going to. When I had finished the business which took me there, I asked who was the singer, and was told: "Oh, that's poor Jem Robson, a cripple; he and his mother have the top attic."

I made my way up and found Jem alone. His mother, who was his whole support, went out to sew, and poor Jem was left by himself almost every day. When he was quite a baby he had had a terrible fall, which had injured his spine so much that he never was able to walk. He was now twelve years old, but his legs had grown quite thin, and he was hardly ever out of pain. His face was white and sickly, and had that sad look of deformity which so often accompanies a crooked back. I soon got him to talk quite freely to me, and I asked him if he was not often very dull. "I was very low sometimes, ma'am," he said, "till Bob came to me."

"And who is Bob?" I said, for the child spoke as of some one present.

For answer, Jem gave a low whistle, and from the farthest corner of the room there came a lame sparrow.

Its hopping was a most painful process. I saw at once that one of its legs was broken. Its spirits, however, remained unimpaired. It came up at its little master's call, and perched itself on one of his small, wasted hands, and pecked gently at his lips as though it would give him a bird-kiss.

Jem then told me that some months ago his mother had left him one day laid by the window, so that he might see all that went on in the street below. While she was away he watched the people coming and going, and wondered how he should feel if he could walk and run as they did. He noticed the children as they went to school, and thought within himself: "I shall never grow up a scholar, for I can never go to school, and no teacher will ever come to me." At last he saw a tiny child toddle into the middle of the road, where it fell flat on its face. It would certainly have been run over had not a boy, just about Jem's own ago, picked it up and carefully led it away. Then tears of disappointment rolled down the face of the cripple, who watched from his window this scene of life and action, of danger and of help. "Ah," he thought, "I could have borne to see people strong and happy, whilst I was dull and in pain, but it is hard to see them wanting help and to know that I can never give it. That baby might have been killed for anything I could have done; why did God let me live when he knew I should always be like this, and never any use in the world?"

Just then a lad looked in, whose parents lodged in a room below Jem's garret, and said: "I say, see what I've caught!"

He came close up to Jem, and opening his hand, showed him a wretched-looking, half dead bird. He had been setting traps for sparrows, and this was the only one he had caught. It had struggled violently to get free, and in doing so had broken one of its slender legs.

"I shall kill it," said the boy.

"No, you shan't," said Jem, his pale face flushing all over with newly-awakened pity; "give it to me, I'll nurse it."

Then ensued much and close bargaining; for the sparrow instantly rose in value as soon as its captor perceived that its very misfortunes enhanced its value in Jem's eyes. Jem offered in exchange a long piece of string, an alley-toy and a bit of lead pencil, all of which were treasures very dear to him. But his neighbor gradually increased his demands, till at length Jem was compelled to sacrifice the bright, new four-penny piece which formed his sole capital. A kind-hearted district visitor had given it him on Christmas day, and Jem had secretly intended to buy something for his mother with it, but pity was stronger than love, and Bob became Jem's sole charge in life.

With much difficulty the two boys bound up the broken leg, and Bob began life and education under Jem's guardianship. Jem soon taught the little creature to come at his call, to feed out of his hand, and to perform many little tricks at a word. I said to him once: "Why, Jem, what a great deal you have managed to teach Bob; he is quite a learned sparrow."

"God sent Bob here to show me that a lame bird is more helpless than a lame boy. I learnt from Bob that even I could save life, and make some one happy that would have been miserable else. So we just do each other good. Bob sits and chirps, and is as merry as a cricket, and whenever I feel a bit dull I start off singing to him, and Bob puts his head on one side, and listens and looks as if he was saying to himself: 'Yes, I remember something like that long ago in the parks among my relations there.' Bob and me was made for each other, I think, ma'am. I don't mind being a cripple now, for may be it would grieve Bob if he saw I could run about. He might feel like I did afore he came."

It was the terrible cholera year, and one evening they brought me word that Jem and his mother were both ill. I could not go that night, but the next morning I put on my bonnet and went to see them. They were both beyond my reach, and would never again feel pain or want. The woman in the next room came in to speak to me, and said, with many tears: "Poor Jem, we shall all miss him, with his poor pinched face and his sweet voice; and as for his bird, its just heart-breaking to see it stand by and never lift up its head."

True enough, there was Bob standing on the miserable apology for a bed, where lay all that remained of his master and friend. His head drooped, so did his feathers, and not a chirp did he utter. When I put out my hand to take him away he gave a cry almost like a child who is torn from its mother's arms; but I knew it must be done, and I did not let him go. I brought him home, and after many days he brightened up a little, though I am sure he has never forgotten poor Jem, for he never plays any of his old tricks. Now, Harry, you will understand why I am so fond of a common lame sparrow. Crippled Bob reminds me of crippled Jem, and teaches me lessons of patience and tenderness and love.—The Quiver.

True Reason for Being Honest.—"Honesty is the best policy," said Harry aloud; "and I mean always to be honest."

"What does 'best policy' mean?" asked his sister Ada, looking up from her work.

"Why this," replied the boy, "that if you are always honest, even though it may not seem the wisest thing for yourself at the time, you will get best off in the end."

"I don't think," replied his sister, "that is a good reason; because if you saw dishonest people getting on better for a long time, you would, perhaps, get tired of waiting for the time to come when you would be 'best off,' and begin to be dishonest too."

"Ada is right," said her mamma, coming into the room; "be honest because it is right, my son; that is the only safe reason. Try to please God, whether any gain comes from it or not. You will sometimes not be able to see how doing the right thing is profitable in a temporal point of view; but it will matter little, when you come to die, whether you have been 'best off' in this world or not."

"I thank you, mamma," said Harry. "In future I will endeavor to do right because it is right, and is pleasing to God, whether it seems to my advantage or not."

The Farm and Garden.

LUCERNE.

This valuable forage plant flourishes on fertile soils in the Southern States, and is worthy of greater attention on the part of those who are in want of a rich and nutritious feed for soiling purposes. The following is an extract from the proceedings of the Farmers' Club, New York Institute:

Mr. Curtis read a paper on the value of this plant for soiling. He says of it: "It will grow in the same climate and soil with red clover, but needs stronger land, and, being a native of southern Europe, requires, to perfect itself, more sunshine and warmth. This peculiarity can be remedied to a considerable extent by a rich soil, a warm exposure and stimulating manures. When furnished with these advantages, its rapid growth, and the amount of lucerne which can be taken off from a small piece of ground, is most astonishing. From four to six crops can be cut in one season from the same land. For flesh-forming and nutritive elements it is superior to red clover, containing 50.7 parts to 41.2 in clover.

"Like clover, it covers the ground with a dense shade, thus enriching the soil while the roots strike down into the subsoil to the depth of several feet, defying drouth, and leaving the land in admirable condition for subsequent cultivation. Lucerne resembles clover in appearance, with a smaller leaf, and if left to ripen, has a more woody stem. Would not recommend it to take the place of clover for general purposes, but I do most emphatically indorse it for a soiling plant to meet the great want of the dairyman and stock-breeder. For horses it has special merits; not being soft and washy, they are not liable to scour on it. It is perennial. Once get it rooted, and with a clean soil it will thrive for years, yielding its excessive burdens of richness. The seed is larger than clover seed, and when ripe and fresh, glossy and yellow. They can be obtained of any first class dealer at fifty cents per pound. The crop may be sowed with grain, rye being the best; but it is preferable to sow alone—from eight to ten pounds of seed to the acre.—Maryland Farmer.

SMUT IN WHEAT.

Mr. A. G. Percy communicates the following to the Rural New Yorker:

Having read in the Rural New Yorker the answers to prevent smut in wheat, by Mr. Fuller and Mr. Curtis, I must say that my experience does not confirm their opinions. In 1841 I purchased a farm in the town of Lyons which had been cleared twenty-seven years, and cropped twenty-four, as I learned, after my purchase, from some of the neighbors. Said land had never been seeded to red clover, except an orchard, which I sowed with plaster, at the rate of two bushels per acre. Said orchard was mowed and then plowed, and then sowed to wheat, as well as other portions of the farm, in the fall of 1842. As the crop of wheat in said year was very full of smut, and produced but ten bushels per acre, I determined to get rid of the smut at once. I brined and heavily limed every bushel that I sowed; supposing that there would be a perfect cure, as I had read many times that no smut would grow after such treatment.

Behold the result! Where the clover and plaster were sown, it was perfect wheat; not a smut head could be seen; but on all of the other land there were thousands of heads that were completely filled with smut, many of them not over sixteen inches high.

The land was sandy and gravelly loam, and after it had once been seeded with clover, and plastered at the rate of two hundred pounds to the acre, the smut disappeared. I have no doubt but the brining and liming of wheat is of value to the preceding crop, but do not believe it will prevent smut, unless the land has been previously filled with nitrogenous food, to aid the proper development of the wheat plant.

Shrinkage of Corn.—The Farmers' Exchange, of Louisville, Kentucky, more than a year ago, appointed a committee to test the shrinkage of corn for one year. The report of the committee, as published in the Courier-Journal of that city, is as follows:

Six ears of large cob-corn, a little too ripe to cut up, weighed, with box—

Measuring Corn in Bulk.—We have seen several plans to measure corn in bulk and ascertain the contents of a crib, but we have not seen any so plain, simple and correct as the following, which was published in the Southern Cultivator many years ago, by Mr. B. T. Harris, one of the most extensive and successful planters in Hancock county:

Take a box of any convenient size, for example say, 3 feet long, 2 feet deep, 2 feet wide=12 cubic feet. Fill it evenly with the corn from the crib to be measured, and shell and measure it with your sealed half bushel. We will suppose that it holds 5 bushels. Now ascertain the cubic feet in your crib, which we will suppose to be 14 feet long, 10 feet wide and 10 feet deep=1,400 feet.

12 feet: hold 5 bushels—1,400 feet hold 5

583⅓ bushels.

This is a simple application of the rule of three. If the measurements are correctly made it seems to me to be a safe rule.—Southern Farm and Home.

The Israelite has the following sketch about the Jews in the province of Posen:

The province of Posen formed a part of Poland until the year 1815, and if the congress at Vienna had granted Saxonia to Prussia, Poland would yet form one country, as Austria preferred a part of Germany to Galicia. There exists no country which has shown greater liberality toward the Jews than Poland.—Boleslaus, Duke of Poland, granted many privileges to the Jews in the year 1264. They were entitled to a deputy from each province to the general assembly at Warsaw. They were put under a marshal, elected for six years and confirmed by the government, who represented the rights and obligations of the Jews at the court. The Jews had their own jurisdiction, independent of State laws, and even Christians were sometimes submitted to these courts. These existed down to the time of Stanislaus, the last King of Poland. The French laws of 1807 granted the Jews perfect equality; a decree of October 17, 1808, however, suspended the political exercise of these rights for ten years, as the Jews, on account of their practices and customs, would not submit to military duty; they rather paid a considerable sum and sacrificed their civil rights. After the suspension of ten years the rights of equality were yet withheld for an unlimited time, and they remained freed from military duty. Down to the year 1817 they lived under French laws; from that time the Prussian laws were extended to the province of Posen.

The greatest city of the province is Posen, with about two thousand five hundred Jewish families; and in no German city does Jewish feeling predominate as in this city. Many disciples of Chief Rabbi Akiba Eger yet exist, as evidence of the fact that in Posen was disseminated Jewish lore and Hebrew study. In passing the streets of Posen on Sabbath you will notice great quiet, for in many streets every store is closed. But not only in the observance of the Sabbath and festivals does Posen offer an uncommon spectacle to other cities of Germany, but in social relations Posen forms a brotherly congregation, as co-religionists support one another in commerce and the trades. Only in one point did they not succeed to unite, namely, in the erection of a Jewish congregational school. Religion is taught in the existing schools; but the profane studies leave very little time for that branch, and the consequences are already visible, so that many young persons desecrate the Sabbath secretly, and some even publicly. Some time ago the plan was urged for the erection of an orthodox school like those of Mayence, Frankfort and Hamburg. Mr. S. Calvari, subscribed seven thousand thalers, Mr. R. Seegoll, the renowned Jewish poet, four thousand thalers, and some others considerable sums. Messrs. Calvari and Seegoll wished the school named Calvari-Seegoll school; and, as the members could not agree about the name, the project was dropped.

A "Badger" who, as usual, entertains an exalted opinion of the good things of the old country, was asked by her mistress if they had any pies where she formerly lived in Ireland. "Yes, an' sure they do." "What kind of pies?" "Magpies, mum."

MISCELLANEOUS.

THE ARROW TIE.

FOR BALING COTTON THE ARROW TIE is the most popular, being the best Cotton Tie in use.

Planters and Cotton Press men everywhere prefer it to all others.

THE ARROW TIE

was used to cover MORE THAN HALF THE CROP OF 1869, giving entire satisfaction.

The patentee and manufacturer of the celebrated ARROW TIE, J. J. McComb, formerly of New Orleans, now residing in Liverpool, having control of the best and most extensive Rolling Mills in Europe, is constantly importing large stocks of this popular Tie, manufactured of the very best quality of English iron, to meet the increasing demand for it throughout all the Cotton States.

Planters can buy or order the ARROW TIE of all dealers in Iron Ties, and of country merchants generally, at the lowest market price; and we respectfully solicit the patronage of Planters and Factors everywhere.

BRACES AND TRUSSES.—DR. JOHN G. ANGELL informs the medical profession and others that he has constantly on hand and for sale a complete assortment of BANNING'S TRUSSES, Spinal and Shoulder Braces, and other appliances for the prevention, relief and cure of general debility, sexual weakness and derangements of public speakers and singers, palpitation of the heart, bronchitis and weakness of the lungs, spinal weakness and deformity, dyspepsia and nervous affections, constipation and chronic diarrhea, female derangements and extreme displacements of the womb, Rupture, Piles, prolapsus-ani, and weakness of the male and female system.

These light, cool and springy auxiliaries are the special favorites of the profession, are intensely common-sense and rational in their action; supply a missing link in treatment; place the above affections in a new and more hopeful light, and often complete cures where medicine can only mitigate, and more than it can cure a hernia or a dislocated joint.

He specially desires an examination of these appliances by the profession and sufferers. Where necessary the professional application of the above braces will be under our supervision or that of the family physician.

These valuable appliances are sanctioned by a large number of the medical profession in the United States and Europe as the best adapted to fulfill the purpose for which they are intended, and the Trusses and Braces are adopted by the United States government for the use of the army and navy. Terms cash. Consultations free. Send for their pamphlet. It is better to call.

GEMS.

The flower beheld the star above,
And longed to reach its airy love;
But longed in vain. A dew-drop fell
Into the rich and fragrant bell;
And then the star was imaged there
As though it dropped from upper air.
And, glancing down from heaven, had come
To seek on earth a kindred home.

AN ENGLISH LADY, who, after years of prosperity, was compelled by loss of fortune, at the age of seventy-six, to avail herself of her excellent education as a means of support, had under her charge a class of very little children. She was unusually successful in teaching these infants, who were supposed to be too young to learn anything except how to sit still. They progressed rapidly, and she gave the secret of her success as follows: "Three minutes of complete attention from a child will enable you to teach him more than three hours of simple hearing." Talk to them so that they will sit with eyes and ears open for five or ten minutes, and then stop, and you will make an impression. Not long since we listened to a capital speaker on Bible themes, who had only this fault—he never knew when to stop. He would say: "Now, I know you're tired and don't want me to go on." Some one ont of compliment would say, "Go on;" and on he would go. For ninety minutes he talked to the large assembly, talked well, biblically, earnestly, fluently; but, alas! he talked so long that everybody was tired, talked so much that the children had only a jumble of ideas in their minds when he was done, and talked to such an extent that the hearers had enough to last them for a year, and the Sabbath school concerts were thinly attended for many a month. It is a pity some men cannot be shut off like the gas, by those who can see better than they can when they ought to stop.

WHERE HELL IS.—"I wish to ask you a question," said Mr. Sharp to our young minister as he met him in the street; "I am anxious to know where hell is. The Bible I have read, geographies, histories and other books, and I can't find out where it is exactly."

The young minister, placing his hand on his shoulder, and looking earnestly into his eyes, replied encouragingly: "My dear sir, don't be discouraged; I am sure you will find out after awhile. As for myself, I have made no inquiries, and really don't wish to know 'where hell is.' About heaven I have thought and read, and studied a great deal. I wish to make that my home, and by the help of the Lord I will. Ask me about heaven and I can talk—I don't know where hell is, and you had better not find out."—Observer and Commonwealth.

LITTLE NANNIE is a close student of the Bible, but not so very clear upon some points. "Ma," said she, on a Sunday evening, after having sat like a "good" child all day in the house, "Ma, have I honored you to-day?" "I don't know, Nannie; why do you ask?" said her mother. "Because," said little Nannie, shaking her curls sadly, "the Bible says, 'Honor thy father and thy mother, that thy days be long;' and this has been, oh! the longest day I ever saw."

AT A RECENT political convention a gentleman declined a nomination on the ground that he had not lived in the State long enough. "Oh! never mind that," said the chairman; "you will have lived quite long enough by the time you are elected." The nominee was completely overcome.

A TEACHER had been explaining to his class the points of the compass, and all were drawn up facing the north. "Now, what is that before you, John?" "The north, sir." "And what behind you, Tommy?" "My coat-tail, sir," said the boy, looking behind him.

THE beauty of our conversation arises from the heavenly frame and holy order of our spirits; as the candle within puts a luster upon the lantern in which it shines. Have your conversation honest, reads the Greek beautiful.—Flavel.

A HINT TO MINISTERS.—John B. Gough, seeming as good as new, one morning after an exhausting effort the evening before, being asked by a clergyman how he managed to work so hard and live, replied: "O rest and sleep."

THE New York editors are continually talking about the "Hell of obstructions," whereupon an exchange remarks: "Let them stop talking and go on. The obstructions won't keep many of them from going through."

THE MONT CENIS tunnel will be completed early in 1871.

Scientific.

PYROGRAPHY is a new art invented in England, and consists, as the name indicates, in printing by fire through a system of metallic cylinders, which burn into the wood any design required, which is indestructible. From its nominal cost and great beauty, it seems likely to take the place of much of the expensive ornamentation and inlaid work done by hand.

LINEN can be converted into sugar; sugar into alcohol and carbonic acid; alcohol into ether and water. Sugar can also be converted into oxalic acid, and likewise into pure charcoal and water. Alcohol will readily change into acetic acid, or vinegar. Coal tar is transformed into dyes that surpass the Tyrian purple of old. Starch may be transmuted into gum, alcohol, sugar, vinegar or oxalic acid; and these are but a few of the magical changes which modern chemical science has made "familiar as household words."

IT IS CLAIMED that metallic iron affords the readiest and simplest means of disinfecting water and of keeping it fresh. The water of the Thames, taken to sea in iron tanks, soon becomes perfectly sweet, and remains so during a long voyage. A small piece of iron or a few nails in the water, in which cut-flowers are put, will keep the water sweet. The experiment has been tried of putting some iron filings in a vessel with a very small quantity of water, and then placing a leech therein. After six months had passed the water was found quite fresh, and the leech alive and healthy. These facts are curious and suggestive.

DR. DAY, of Geelong, Australia, the improver of the guaiacum-tests for blood and other animal fluids, confirms the discovery of Neumann, that the picture or net-work formed by human blood can be distinguished under the microscope from that which is formed by the blood of other animals. He says he has repeated the experiment, which is "wonderfully simple," almost every day for the last two months, with invariable success. A small drop, not a mere speck, of the blood is to be placed on a microscopic slide, and carefully watched, at a temperature of ten or twelve degrees Reaumur (=54.2 to 59 degrees Fahrenheit,) until the picture or net-work formed by its coagulation is developed. Human blood speedily breaks up into a "small pattern" net-work; the blood of other animals (calves, pigs, etc.,) takes a longer time, and makes a larger pattern; but the blood of every animal seems to form a characteristic "picture." Dr. Day has examined the blood of calves, pigs, sheep, rabbits, ducks, hens, fishes, etc., as well as that of man, and has found the results trustworthy and constant.

HOW RAIN IS FORMED.—To understand the philosophy of this phenomenon, essential to the very existence of plants and animals, a few facts, derived from observation and a long train of experiments, must be remembered.

Were the atmosphere everywhere, at all times, at a uniform temperature, we should never have rain, hail or snow. The water absorbed by it in evaporation from the sea and the earth's surface would descend in an imperceptible vapor, or cause to be absorbed by the air when it was once fully saturated. The absorbing power of the atmosphere, and consequently its capability to retain humidity, is proportionably greater in cold than in warm air. The air near the surface of the earth is warmer than it is in the region of the clouds. The higher we ascend from the earth the colder we find the atmosphere. Hence, the perpetual snow on very high mountains, in the hottest climates.

Now, when from evaporation the air is highly saturated with vapor—though it be invisible—if its temperature is suddenly reduced by cold currents descending from above, or rushing from a higher to a lower latitude, its capacity to retain moisture is diminished, clouds are formed and the result is rain. Air condenses as it cools, and, like a sponge filled with water and compressed, pours out water which its diminished capacity cannot hold. How singular, yet how simple, is such an arrangement for the watering of the earth!—Scientific American.

A JUDGE whose personal appearance was as unprepossessing as his legal knowledge was profound and his intellect keen, interrupted a female witness—"Humbugged you, my good woman—what do you mean by that?" said he, sternly. "Well, my lord," replied the woman, "I don't know how to explain it exactly; but if a girl called your lordship a handsome man, she would be humbugging you."

AN OLD FARMER said of a minister whose sermons were much wanting in point: "Ah! yes; he's a good man, I dare say, but he will rake with the teeth upward."

Guyot's Geographical Text-Books.

"Incomparably superior to anything published."—Agassiz.

Introduction to the Study of Geography.
Elementary Geography.
Intermediate Geography.
Common School Geography.

Guyot's System is approved and indorsed by the most distinguished literary and scientific men of our nation; such as Profs. Agassiz, Dana, Tenney, Henry and others, celebrated in science throughout Europe as well as at home.

The fact that ONE MILLION (1,000,000) copies of the work are in use in the schools of our country, at the present time, is proof of the unparalleled success attending the New System, for no other series of books ever published in America have ever secured so rapid and extensive introduction. They are the text-books in nearly all the colleges, seminaries, normal schools, etc., in the United States; in the public schools of the cities of New York, Brooklyn, Rochester, and most of the cities and towns of the Eastern States; Cincinnati, Cleveland, Columbus, Springfield, Toledo, Marietta, and most of the other important towns and cities, numbering nine thousand schools in Ohio, and hundreds of towns and cities in the other Western States, while in the Southern States and California they are being extensively adopted.

Believing that the publication of Professor Guyot's series has marked a new and better era in the presentation of geographical science, that by it the pupils of this generation will obtain a clearer, more definite and exalted knowledge of the world on which they live, and that it is so systematized as to render that knowledge more valuable and permanent, we commend it to the attention of all interested in educational improvements and progress.

SCHOOLS AND COLLEGES.

FLORENCE WESLEYAN UNIVERSITY,

FLORENCE, ALABAMA.

W. H. ANDERSON, D. D., PRESIDENT.

This institution of learning, so widely known through the South, will begin its next session on WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 14, 1870.

The Faculty is composed of men of experience and ability. The course of study is comprised in the Literary Department, Law Department, Department of Biblical Literature and Commercial Department. The advantages of this University are seen in its healthful and attractive location, thorough course of study, excellent discipline, the character, and success of its instructors, and the reasonable rates at which board and tuition are furnished.

Licentiates in the ministry and sons of ministers in the regular work are admitted to matriculation on paying the incidental fees.

EXPENSES PER SESSION OF FIVE MONTHS.

Tuition in the University classes	$30 00
Tuition in Grammar School	25 00
Tuition in Law Department	40 00
Incidental fee	2 00
(Tuition and incidental fee required in advance.)
Chemical fee, paid once	5 00

Boarding can be had in the best families at from $16 to $20 per month.

For particulars see circular, or apply to the president, Rev. Dr. Anderson, or to Hon. W. B. Wood. GEO. W. FOSTER,

TUSKEGEE FEMALE COLLEGE,

TUSKEGEE, ALABAMA.

The Fifteenth Annual Session begins SEPTEMBER 15, 1870, and continues forty weeks; divided into two equal terms.

REV. GEO. W. F. PRICE, M. A., President.
REV. B. B. ROSS, M. A., Professor of Latin and Mathematics.
MR. S. M. BARTLETT, Director of Music, with Nine Assistants in the various departments of instruction and discipline.

The president calls particular attention to the fact that Rev. B. B. Ross, of the Alabama Conference, has accepted the professorship of Latin and Mathematics in the Institution. Brother Ross is a graduate of Lagrange College, Alabama. He was professor of Mixed Mathematics in that institution for two years. Subsequently he was president of Talladega Female Institute. His classical education, his experience in the practical business of teaching, his acceptable career of itinerant service, his many excellent personal traits, all entitle him to the unlimited confidence of our people.

The College has just closed a most successful year. Its prospects were never more flattering. The present organization of the institution combines all the best features for securing the thorough instruction and efficient discipline of its pupils. The Faculty contains none but tried and trained teachers, whose success has been tested by years of service. The boarding arrangements are under the immediate control of the president, who resides in the building, and supervises the social recreations and the professional duties of the pupils. The health of the girls is in charge of an experienced matron. The table, kitchen and laundry are in care of a thoroughly trained housekeeper. Miss Shelley, of Talladega, is the governess, and brings to the office high social position, experience as a teacher, liberal education, and matured Christian character. The pupils are trained in gymnastic and calisthenic exercises, thereby developing their physical powers, strengthening their constitutions, and imparting grace and dignity to their movements. Religion is the basis of the system of education, and girls are taught that "the truth as it is in Jesus" is the highest attainable wisdom.

WESLEYAN FEMALE INSTITUTE,

STAUNTON, VIRGINIA,

will begin its next session September 20, 1870, and close June 22, 1871.

REV. WILLIAM A. HARRIS, President.
With Thirteen Professors, Teachers, etc., etc.

Than this no College for Young Ladies ranks higher. System of teaching like that pursued in the University of Virginia. French is taught by a native master of the language. Professor in Department of Music has no superior in any school; among others, is assisted by the distinguished vocalist, Madam Bertha Ruhl. This is one of the healthiest climates in America, and young ladies who come here from the South with feeble constitutions are entirely restored to health. The grounds are large and beautiful; buildings stately and elegant, fanned by the purest breezes, overlooking the entire city, and commanding the most magnificent rural and mountain scenery for thirty miles along the beautiful Valley of Virginia, making it one of the most delightful college homes in the Union.

(From Judge John N. Hendren, M. A., University of Virginia.)

I regard the Wesleyan Female Institute in this place, under the management of Rev. William A. Harris, as one of the very best and most attractive schools in the State. * *

(From Hon. John B. Baldwin.

The Wesleyan Female Institute is surrounded by influences which make it in all respects a most desirable place for the care and education of the daughters of Christian parents.

(From Prof. William E. Peters, LL. D., University of Virginia.)

Young ladies committed to the care of Prof. Harris will enjoy advantages of an intellectual and moral training rarely found.

(From Rev. William E. Munsey, D. D.)

* * * From personal knowledge I believe that as the president of a female college Rev. William A. Harris has no superior; indeed within the purview of my acquaintance he has no equal.

(From Bishop E. M. Marvin, D. D.)

The Wesleyan Female Institute is an honor to the church. Instruction is thorough. All classes stand high. In music advantages are offered of a very high order. The most talented professors are employed, and neither pains nor expense are spared to make this department eminent. The school is very prosperous, and deserves to be so.

TERMS FOR THE ENTIRE SCHOLASTIC YEAR. Board and tuition in the Collegiate Course, $225. Music and other extra studies moderate.

Founded and supported by the State of Louisiana.

The fifth session, now in progress, will close last Wednesday in June, 1870. The next session will begin first Monday in September next, and will continue ten months.

The Academic Board consists of a full corps of able instructors in all branches of literature and science usually taught in the best Colleges and Universities.

The Course of Study embraces a Preparatory and an Academic Department, including a Literary, Scientific and Optional Course, a Special School of Civil Engineering and a Commercial School.

Library, Apparatus and Cabinets are well selected and valuable. The Geological and Mineralogical Cabinets, etc., the largest and most complete in the South, embracing the extensive collections of the late Col. Wailes, of Mississippi, and the Cabinets of the Topographical, Geological and Botanical Survey of Louisiana.

Admission granted to cadets not under fifteen years of age, who know arithmetic, English grammar and geography.

Expenses of every kind, except clothing, for ten months, $250; $200 payable in advance, balance February 1; or by accepted draft, at eight per cent., for ninety days. Payments may be made through the Canal or Citizens' Bank.

Cadets received at any time during the session and charged from date of entrance.

Discipline, military, with daily drill. A battery of four guns will afford facilities for instruction in artillery. Uniform of cadet: Gray cloth, to be had at the Institution at a cost of $25 per suit.

NEW ORLEANS MARKET.

From the N. O. Price Current.

The New Year holiday has interrupted the general movement, and the market has exhibited only a moderate degree of animation since our last review. Most branches of the wholesale trade have exhibited increased dullness, the demand from the country having subsided, and the local business being limited. Sugar has been in fair request at previous rates, but molasses has been less active, and ruled in favor of buyers until Tuesday, when it exhibited renewed firmness. Flour, corn, oats and bran have shown more animation, and commanded stiffer prices, but provisions have been quiet at about previous quotations.

Letters from the country report that the freedmen have quit picking, refusing to work either for cash or to meet their obligations for advances from planters and storekeepers. The indications are that we shall have a handsome increase in our receipts at this port, but whether in excess of the increased acreage is a question on which there is a great diversity of opinion. The accounts from the sugar parishes are more discouraging, the last freeze having destroyed the standing cane.

COTTON.—The following are the arrivals since the thirtieth ultimo:

Louisiana and Mississippi...bales..	22,889
Lake	12
Mobile	947
Texas	141
Total	23,989

On Saturday the demand was fair, and although the movement was checked by factors being more stringent in their pretensions for all desirable lists and the higher grades, yet the sales summed up 8,400 bales, at prices showing no quotable variation, but with the advantage on the side of the factors. On Monday operations were restricted by its being a holiday, but the business, nevertheless, comprised 5,800 bales, at rather stiffer prices in the morning, but easier subsequently, without any quotable variation. On Tuesday the market opened with a fair demand, which, notwithstanding unfavorable telegrams from Liverpool, and a decline in exchange, subsequently became more animated, and resulted in 9,850 bales changing hands at irregular and easier prices for mixed lists and the poorer qualities, but stiffer rates for strict good ordinary and strict low middling. The assortment included a large proportion of the lower grades, which exhibited more irregularity than the better qualities.

This makes an aggregate for the past three days of 24,050 bales.

The receipts at this port since the first of September (exclusive of the arrivals from Mobile, Florida and Texas) are 531,620 bales, against 465,523 bales to the same date last year, and the increase in the receipts at all the ports, up to the latest dates, as compared with last year, is 292,217 bales. In the exports from the United States to foreign countries, as compared with the same dates last year, there is an increase of 292,689 bales to Great Britain, 10,403 to other foreign ports, and a decrease of 119,124 to France.

Referring to our remarks above, we quote as follows:

Ordinary	12 to 12½
Good ordinary	13½ to 13¾
Low middling	13¾ to 14¼
Middling	14¾ to 14¾
Strict middling	15 to ..

$3 WATCH! ..... $3 WATCH!

THE GREAT EUROPEAN

Eureka Aluminum Gold Watch Co.

HAVE APPOINTED

L. V. DEFOREST & CO., JEWELERS,
40 and 42 Broadway, New York,

SOLE AGENTS FOR THE U. STATES,

and have authorized them to sell their Great EUREKA ALUMINUM GOLD WATCHES for $3, and to warrant each and every one to keep correct time for one year. This Watch is guaranteed to be the best and cheapest time-keeper that is now in use in any part of the globe. The works are in double cases, Ladies' and Gents' size, and are beautifully chased. The cases are made of the metal now widely known in Europe as Aluminum Gold. It has the exact color of gold, which it always retains; it will stand the test of the strongest acids; no one can tell it from gold only by weight, the Aluminum Gold being 1/3 lighter. The works are made by machinery, same as the well known American Watch. The Aluminum, being cheap metal, hence we can afford to sell the Watch for $3 and make a small profit. We pack the Watch safely in a small box and send it by mail to any part of the United States on receipt of $3.50—fifty cents for packing and postage. Address all orders to

The Sixth Annual Session will begin on WEDNESDAY, October 5, 1870, and close June 30, 1871.

The founders of this school have organized it on an elevated basis, and design that it shall afford to young ladies the means of a liberal collegiate education. It is empowered by law to confer degrees. The system of instruction seeks to train the mental powers to lucid, evident and accurate thinking, and to cultivate a refined taste. The teachers employed are well qualified for their work, and sufficient in number to give full attention to each pupil.

The Seminary buildings are spacious and airy and in a healthy district—have a beautiful location in a large grove, affording ample room for exercise. The school possesses high social advantages, and the nucleus of a library. It is accessible by railroad from the Mississippi river, at Bayon Sara—twenty-eight miles distant.

CHARGES FOR THE SCHOLASTIC YEAR.

THE NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE.

This paper has always been well known in this community as

The Very Best Advertising Medium

by which the business men of the city could bring their merchandise, trades, professions and the like, before country readers. The reason is easily understood when it is remembered that FOUR HUNDRED PREACHERS, scattered through all the Mississippi, Alabama and Louisiana Methodist Conferences, are more or less active agents for the paper; and when it is also remembered that our paper circulates among a large class of people who seldom see any other New Orleans paper.

ORGAN OF THE M. E. CHURCH SOUTH FOR THE MOBILE, MONTGOMERY, MISSISSIPPI AND LOUISIANA CONFERENCES

VOL. XVI. NEW ORLEANS, SATURDAY, JANUARY 14, 1871. NO. 52.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 10.—Late reports from Mr. Seward state that he has paralysis in both arms. His mind is unimpaired.

Papers filed with the Controller of the Currency by the State National Bank of New Orleans have been found in due form and the charter awarded. Notes will be issued to the bank as rapidly as bonds are lodged with the treasury.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 11.—There are half a dozen candidates for the United States Senate from Kansas. A Missouri Democrat correspondent telegraphs that Senator Ross, who voted against the impeachment of President Johnson, has no chance for re-election.

A correspondent writing from Aspinwall says: I am informed by a Cuban officer that a plan was organized to seize the steamer Ocean Queen, from New York, on the third instant.

General W. A. C. Ryan, of Cuban celebrity, sailed in the Ocean Queen under the assumed name of Ashbury.

After shipping upon the Ocean Queen two thousand cases of arms and ammunition, two or three hundred Cuban troops expected to go aboard as passengers, and during the voyage seize the steamer, land the troops and arms at some Cuban point, and then release the steamer.

Two hundred United States troops, who were sent by the Ocean Queen, Californiaward, alarmed the Cuban troops, who remained ashore. Ryan going alone to Aspinwall, where the stores were landed. Subsequently the Hornet arrived, shipped the stores, and departed for Cuba.

HARRISBURG, Pa., Jan. 11.—Hon. John Covode, a member of Congress, died here this morning of heart disease.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 11.—Postmaster General Creswell, with a delegation representing the element in Maryland opposed to the Democracy, called on the President to-day in relation to a movement on hand to inaugurate a consolidated movement against the Democracy of that State. They said nothing about offices.

There is authority for saying that all the rumors, since the resignation of Secretary Cox, of cabinet changes, are without a particle of foundation. Every member seems to be thoroughly satisfied with his position, and the President satisfied with them all.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 11.—The Tennessee, fitted out to carry the Dominican commissioners, has been ordered to Norfolk to await orders.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 11.—In the Senate, to-day, the question of concurring in the House amendment to the San Domingo investigation resolution was the pretext for a renewal, briefly, of a former debate upon the general merits of the annexation project.

The feature of the day was the speech of Senator Schurz, who, while disclaiming a factious opposition to the President, disputed every argument of the annexationists, opposing the project as wrong in principle, and as initiating a policy of unlimited territorial acquisition.

Carpenter inferred that in the opinion of Schurz slavery ought never to have been abolished.

Schurz replied that he was dealing with facts, which could not be denied by any Senator. He went on to show the necessity of preserving Northern preponderance, and the political danger of expansion in a southerly direction, and the propriety of Sumner's suggestion to reserve the West India Islands for the colored race exclusively.

Numerous amendments, by Turner, were rejected one by one, and also amendments naming the commissioners and including in the investigation the Sandwich Islands, and other foreign territory contiguous to our shores.

The House amendment was finally concurred in unanimously, and the resolution now goes to the President.

FOREIGN.

BORDEAUX, Jan. 9.—The following are the details of the fighting on Friday, near Vendome: About eleven o'clock A. M. the Germans attacked the French under General Corter, occupying the district of St. Cyr-ville, Borcher and Ville Thuree, and drove the French back to Nonville. General Corter then brought up his supports, recaptured all the positions, and repulsed the enemy beyond St. Roumaine, which the French re-entered at nightfall.

The German loss was considerable; the French trifling.

LONDON, Jan. 9.—A dispatch from Lille says the Germans are massing south of Bapume.

French sharpshooters successfully engaged a body of uhlans near Lille to-day, and captured forty-three prisoners.

The Prussians have raised the siege of Langres.

LONDON, Jan. 9.—Count Bernstoff, Prussian minister, received the following telegram from Orleans, dated Versailles, January 8: The report of the German commander at Rouen, respecting the sinking of the English colliers, has not arrived, but the facts are known. Tell Lord Granville that we sincerely regret that our troops, to avert imminent danger, were obliged to seize British ships. We admit the claim for indemnity. If unjustifiable excesses were also committed, we regret them, and will bring the guilty to account. BISMARCK.

Further explanations represent that three vessels were seized for fear the French would use them to land troops.

Right Hon. William Monsell, member of Parliament for Limerick, has offered the Pope a residence on his estate in Ireland.

STUTTGARDT, Jan. 9.—Count Von Tauhe has resigned the ministry of foreign affairs, and is succeeded by Von Wachter.

VERSAILLES, Jan. 9, night.—Last night the fire from our batteries south of Paris was increased, and the buildings inside Fort Montrouge were burning all night. To-day there is a dense fog and the bombardment is not so heavy. The return fire of the French is weak.

The German loss on Sunday was twenty-five men.

The column advancing on Lemans reached St. Calais yesterday, meeting with but slight resistance.

BERLIN, Jan. 9.—General Von Werder has been heavily reinforced.

The Prussians in the department of Yonne are concentrating at Joigny, on Paris and Lyons railway, and reinforcements have arrived there from Germany.

The fighting when Dunjontin was carried by storm is described as desperate on both sides. The German loss is heavy.

LONDON, Jan. 9.—La Patrie says the financial is worse than the military situation, and proposes to return to assignats.

Colonel Pratt, the director of the Anglo-American ambulance corps at Orleans, has gone to Bordeaux to negotiate an exchange of wounded prisoners, of whom there are now large numbers on both sides.

BERLIN, Jan. 10.—The second installment of the German loan has been taken by contractors at an advance.

LONDON, Jan. 10.—The Brussels Echo, of to-day, says: The militia have again been summoned to the Belgian frontier. Staff officers have already arrived in the neighborhood of Long Roy. The Prussians continue the investment of Givet, near the Belgian border.

Berlin letters to London journals assert that the London conference is likely to consider the question of peace, should Paris surrender during its session.

VIENNA, Jan. 10.—Semi-official organs here declare that the approaching conference must uphold the validity of treaties, and modifications are possible only through general consent. When the amendment to the treaty of Paris is proposed by Russia, it is essential that it should be accompanied by concessions compensating other powers.

VERSAILLES, Jan. 10.—The army of General Chanzy is retreating at all points. The Germans are in pursuit and have already taken one thousand prisoners. We have good news from the eastern departments. In an engagement on the eighth, with Garibaldi's forces, at Montbars, in the department of Cote D'or, our troops were victorious.

General Werder advanced on Villersexel yesterday and took it by storm. The twentieth French corps was engaged. It lost two staff officers, fourteen other officers, six hundred men and two eagles. The French attempted to retake the position, but failed.

LONDON, Jan. 11.—A Dresden journal says the Austrian railway officials refuse to forward goods and coal via Badenbach. The Saxon minister at Vienna has protested against this action.

General Faidherbe's cavalry had encounters with the enemy on the eighth and ninth instant, and met with some success.

The Germans represent that the return fire from the Parisian forts flags perceptibly.

LONDON, Jan. 11.—Great anxiety is felt in Liverpool for the safety of the City of Brooklyn, which was reported to have lost the fans of her screw and to be proceeding under sail. Nothing further has been heard of her.

BERLIN, Jan. 11.—It is reported that General Manteuffel will be transferred to the command of the army of the Vosges, and that General Goben will succeed him at the head of the army of the north.

LONDON, Jan. 11.—The bombardment of the Paris fortifications on the northeast and south sides was vigorously kept up all day Tuesday. The French returned a moderate fire.

LONDON, Jan. 11.—A scheme for a direct cable from London and Liverpool to New York has been brought ont by Messrs. Chadwick, Adamson & Co., of London, under the best auspices. The capital is to be $3,250,000, three-fourths of which has been subscribed here already, and if one-fourth be quickly taken up in America the cable will be laid in July.

MIXED SCHOOLS.

There was considerable excitement among the public this morning in consequence of some rumors that the question of admitting negro children into our public schools had been forced to an issue. Upon inquiries, which we instituted at several of the public schools, the rumors proved to be true in so far as colored pupils had been admitted into two white schools, as far as we could ascertain.

Into the Madison Girls' School, at the corner of Palmyra and Prieur streets, nineteen new pupils were admitted this week. Three of them are colored. They are Fanny and Emma Dunn and Charlotte Kennedy, adopted children of Lieutenant Governor Oscar J. Dunn. They were brought to the Madison school, yesterday, by the foster mother, Mrs. Dunn, and admitted by the principal, Miss Carry Kasson. Fanny Dunn and Charlotte Kennedy were admitted into the principal's department, and Emma Dunn into the second assistant's department. They are the first pupils known to be colored, who, as Miss Kasson informs us, have ever obtained admittance into the Madison Girls' School. In consequence of the mixed school question being thus suddenly brought to an issue, two pupils of Miss Kasson's department left the school this morning. Miss Kasson told us that they were her best pupils. As matters stand, it is suspected that other parents will also take their children from the Madison school.

From the principal of the Madison Girls' School we further learn that, on a written order of Thomas W. Conway, State Superintendent of Public Education, six colored boys have been admitted into the Bienville Boys' School.

In other schools, which we visited this morning, the attempt of having negroes admitted had not yet been made. Grave fears are, however, entertained, now that the outrageous work has been inaugurated.—Picayune, January 11.

UNITED STATES SENATORIAL STRUGGLE.—Election of General J. R. West. Shortly after noon, yesterday, the Legislature proceeded to ballot for a United States Senator from Louisiana to succeed Senator Harris.

General J. R. West, known as the candidate of Governor Warmoth, was elected upon the first ballot, both in the Senate and House.

The vote in the Senate was as follows: West, 19; Pinchback, 7; Thomas Green Davidson, 5; Kennedy, 2; McMillan, 1.

General West, after his election, received the congratulations of his friends and supporters in the Governor's parlor, where he received with the Governor. There is great rejoicing on the part of the friends of the Governor.

In the Senate General McMillan voted for Pinchback, and Senator Ray for Mr. Kennedy.

General West, the United States Senator elect, is at present holding the responsible position of Administrator of Improvements of this city, to which position he was appointed by Governor Warmoth.—Picayune, January 11.

INSINCERITY in a man's own heart must make all his enjoyments, all that concerns him, unreal; so that his whole life must seem like a merely dramatic representation. And this would be the case, even though he were surrounded by true-hearted relatives and friends.

ABOUT BERLIN.

To show the accuracy of their social statistics we state a few cases: There are 83,000 households with none but the members of their own family; 32,000 that employ servants, or have subordinates living with them; and 38,000 that rent rooms furnished to occupants, or accommodate lodgers. Forty-six per cent. of the population is unmarried, and forty-five married—the rest in widowhood or divorced. Seventy-eight per cent. have fixed residences, and twenty-two are moving about, as clerks, servants, lodgers, etc.; 344,000 are reported as earning their living, and 355,000 as living on these, or dependents. The whole population is quoted as having some religion, according to their confirmation; 630,271 are Protestants; 49,922 are Catholics; 27,565 are Jews, and only 197 are marked as of other creeds. The civil authorities know everything in the capital, as Von Moltke is said to have known every road, rock, eminence and tree in his march through France. Such noses, and eyes, and patience are possessed only by the Germans.

In the matter of religion Berlin is not much to boast of; they are enrolled on church registers, and with most of them it ends there. The parishes are enormously large; in some instances 25,000 souls to one pastor. About 12,000 of them, on an average, go to church on Sunday, and some 4,000 appear at communion in a month, and still the city bears the external appearance on the Sabbath of paying a passable degree of respect to church services, for during these the public resorts are closed, and all is quiet. The court is orthodox and religious, and the King himself is very fervent, as may be seen by his dispatches to his Queen and nation. The Catholics and Jews are gaining on the Protestants as a result of the liberal measures of the Protestant government to other confessions. The Jews of Berlin are very influential and intelligent, and their social position is high. Their "salons" have some of the choicest reunions of the capital, and their children visit the best schools in much greater proportion than the other confessions. Their synagogues are among the finest religious temples of the city, and they cluster around these with their dwellings, so as to form a "Jewish quarter."

In morals the Berliners are just twice as well behaved as the Parisians, having half the number of illegitimate births. Eight per cent. of children in Paris are still-born; in Berlin but three per cent. Paris, without additions from the provinces, would soon die out. Berlin increases from its own births at the rate of 6,000 per annum. Of the entire population in Berlin, one-half are born within its walls. Its rapid increase, however, is mainly owing to the immense immigration from the surrounding country. Thousands and thousands are yearly pouring in to fill up the great industrial establishments. The locomotive works of Borsig alone nearly fill and populate a suburb. And, what is very remarkable, of its entire population only one per cent. is not German.—Scribner's Monthly.

A RECENT publication—Evenings with the Sacred Poets—by Frederic Saunders, contains one good story. It is of the minister of a Methodist chapel in Georgia, who, having left his spectacles at home on one occasion, intended to announce to his congregation that the singing would be dispensed with. He arose and said:

"My eyes are dim, I cannot see," and immediately the chorister commenced singing the words to the "One Hundreth."

Surprise and mortification made him almost breathless, but he made an effort to stammer out:

"I meant but an apology."

This line was taken up by the congregation in the same manner, when the dominie, becoming much excited, exclaimed:

"Forbear, I pray; my eyes are dim."

But remonstrance was in vain, and the singers went on till, in accents of despair, he again cried out:

"I do not mean to read a hymn:"

a declaration so palpable that it silenced the vociferous singers.

LIVE BETTER.—Have you lived a wicked life? If so, live better. Have you lived a good life? If so, there is opportunity to live a little better. Yes, by all means do better. No one can do too well. No one can be too well prepared to depart this life, and to enter upon the one to come.

HE preaches well who lives well.

DEATH OF REV. ALBERT BARNES.—Rev. Albert Barnes, one of the most able, widely known and highly esteemed ministers of the Presbyterian Church, died suddenly in Philadelphia on Saturday last, aged seventy-two years. He left his home in that city on Saturday afternoon in excellent health and in fine spirits to make a pastoral visit. On the way he was seized with some serious difficulty, and only succeeded with his daughter's assistance in reaching his destination. Upon entering the house he seated himself beside his daughter, and, before any one else entered the room, his head dropped on his chair and he fell to the floor lifeless.

Mr. Barnes leaves a national reputation. As a biblical commentator and theological writer he had few equals. The circulation of his "Notes on the New Testament" is said to have reached a million of volumes. His "Life of St. Paul" and "Evidences of Christianity" have also had an extensive circulation. Mr. Barnes was a native of Rome, New York, an alumnus of Hamilton College of 1820, and of Princeton College of 1824. His first pastorate was in Morristown, New Jersey. In 1839 he was called to the First Presbyterian church, Philadelphia, over which church he presided until recently, when age compelled him to relinquish the burdens of the active pastorate. His notions of theology and social polity were of the progressive type. His death is a loss to the whole Protestant Church.—New York Christian Advocate, December 31.

FAMILY GOVERNMENT.—"William, stop that noise, I say! Won't you stop? Stop, I tell you, or I'll slap your mouth." William bawls a little louder. "William, I tell you, ain't you going to stop? Stop, I say! If you don't stop I'll whip you sure." William goes up a fifth and beats with his heels. "I never saw such a child! He's got temper enough for a whole town; I'm sure he didn't get it from me. Why don't you be still? Whist, whi-i-ist. Come, come, be still, won't you? Stop, stop, stop, I say! Don't you see this—don't you see this stick? See here now!" (Cuts the air with the stick.) William, more furious, kicks very manfully at his mother—grows redder in the face, lets out the last note, and begins to reel and shake, and twist, in a most spiteful manner.

"Come, William! come, dear—that's a darling—naughty William! Come, that's a good boy; don't cry, p-o-o-r little fellow; sant nb-o-o-se you, sall eh? Ma's little man, want a piece of sooger? Ma's little boy got cramp; p-o-o-r little sick boy," etc. William wipes up, and minds, and eats his sugar, and stops.

After Scene.—The minister is present, and a very nice talk is going on upon the necessity of governing children. "Too true," says mamma, "some people will give up to their children, and it ruins them—every child should be governed. But then it won't do to carry it too far; if one whips all the time, it will break a child's spirit. One ought to mix kindness and firmness together in managing children." "I think so," said the preacher; "firmness first, and then kindness." "Yes, sir; that's my practice exactly."—Beecher.

THE RAILROAD TO DESTRUCTION.—Charles Reade says: "No man and no woman is safe who has once formed the habit of looking to drink for solace, or cheerfulness, or comfort. While the world goes well, they will likely be temperate; but the habit is built, the railroad to destruction is cut ready for use, the rails are laid down, the station houses are erected, and the train is on the line, waiting only for the locomotive; it comes to us; it grapples us, and away we go in a moment down the line we have been constructing, like a flash of lightning, to destruction."

STATISTICS OF THE M. E. MISSION WORK IN SOUTH AMERICA.—The annual report made to the missionary secretaries by Rev. Henry G. Jackson, superintendent of our mission work in South America, gives the following summaries:

	Ministers.	Members.	Churches.	Value.	S. Schools.	Aver. Att.
Buenos Ayres	2	152	1	$100,000	4	265
Montevideo	1	53	1	12,000	2	110

LITTLE MINDS are tamed and subdued by misfortune, but great minds rise above it.

BORROWING.

In the sixth chapter of Second Kings there is a beautiful story told of a conscientious young man. He was a theological student, studying at a seminary of which the prophet Elisha was president. It seems to have been partly a manual labor school. Owing to the large number of students, the accommodations became inadequate, and some of the enterprising young men proposed that they and their fellow-students should change the site, and engaged to erect the necessary additional buildings. The plan was approved. But when they were ready to commence operations one good young man had no ax. So he was compelled to borrow. The students, with their venerable professor, went to the woods and began their operations.

The good young man with the borrowed ax undertook to fell a tree on the bank of the river Jordan. But his ax, as borrowed tools often are, was not in very good order. It was loose on the helve. This was not particularly noticed by the young woodman, until the ax came off the helve, and, to his dismay, fell into deep water. At such an event a lazy person would have found an excuse for working no more—an unprincipled person would have tried to practice concealment, and a criminally careless person would have said: "Well, I don't much care—it did not belong to me." But this good young man, loving and venerating Elisha, and confiding in him as a sympathizing friend and a good adviser, went directly to him and said: "Alas, master, for it was borrowed;" q. d. "If it had been my own I would have felt less concern. But it belonged to another man.' 'It was borrowed. Alas!'" What an example is this to all who may borrow tools, or books, or horses, or anything that is their neighbor's. We ought to be more careful of them because they are borrowed—borrowed for use, not for abuse—to be returned, not destroyed. Reader! how does your practice tally with the conduct of this young man?

It is pleasant to know that he recovered his ax, and was able to return it to its lawful owner. This was by miracle. And although we may not expect miracles to help us out of our distresses, yet God will generally enable the truly conscientious, in some way, to repair any unintentional injury done to others, and "to provide things honest in the sight of all men."

CIDER AND RHEUMATISM.—I heard the other day of an old man, a great sufferer from rheumatism, who had also "suffered many things from many physicians, and was nothing bettered, but rather grew worse;" and some one made him promise to try a new remedy before they told him what it was. When he learned that it was "only to give up the cider," he had no faith in it; but having promised, he tried it, and, to his great surprise, got rid of his rheumatism. I know of another case of an old-time cider toper in D—— county, who is almost helpless with rheumatism; but I do not suppose anybody could persuade him to give it up, if his cider had to go with it.

On the other hand, a dear, good brother told me that he had driven away the rheumatism dozens of times (!) with brandy. For my part, I think I should prefer a medicine that would permit me to stay cured a little better than that.—Temperance Advocate.

WHY is it that God suffers the motion of sin in such whom he loves, and knows to be his own, to be so exceedingly violent and dreadful? In general it is that the sin of our nature might always appear sin. First. Such a sight as this sets and keeps open a spring of repentance toward God alway. Second. Another use of the prevalency of corruptions is to divorce them from their own righteousness, and to slay carnal confidence in them all their life long. Third. It is to show the suitableness of Christ as the believer's surety, and to stir us up to more earnest believing every day. And, lastly, these workings of sin are of use to make us watchful in our Christian walk.

PETITIONS OF DR. CHALMERS.—Do thou, O Lord, break my hard heart, and then heal my broken one.

May thy grace, O Lord, open a way for thy word into our hearts, and strengthen us to act upon it.

Let me bridle my tongue, so that neither the impulses of passion shall hurry me into bitter, nor the sallies of humor betray me into idle words.

The Christian Advocate.

SATURDAY, JANUARY 14, 1871.

A GREAT MAN.

BY OWEN MEREDITH.

The man is great, and he alone,
Who serves a greatness not his own,
For neither praise nor pelf:
Content to know and be unknown,
Whole in himself.

Strong is that man, he only strong,
To whom well ordered will belongs
For service and delight,
All powers that, despite of wrongs,
Established right.

And free is he, and only he,
Who from his tyrant passions flees,
By Fortune unenslaved,
Hath power upon himself to be
By himself obeyed.

If such a man there be, wherever
Beneath the sun and moon he fare,
He cannot fare amiss:
Great nature hath him in her care,
Her cause is his.

Time cannot take him by surprise;
Fate cannot crush him; he shall rise
Stronger from overthrow,
Whose arms a heavenly Friend supplies
Against heaven's foe.

The merely great are all in all,
No more than what the merely small
Esteemed them; man's opinion
Neither conferred nor can recall
This man's dominion.

Lord of a lofty life is he,
Loftily living, tho' he be
Of lowly birth; tho' poor,
He lacks not wealth nor high degree;
In state obscure.

Though saddened, soiled not, broken not,
Tho' burdened by his mortal lot
To strive with mortal sin,
And scald away with tears the spot
That sinks not in.

Yet not with downward eyes morose
Bent on himself, nor ear so close
Held to his own heart's cell,
But what he sees, and hears, and knows,
And doth love well.

For though he lives aloof from ken,
The world's unwitnessed denizen,
The love within him stirs
Abroad, and with the hearts of men
His own confers.

The judge upon the justice seat
The brown-backed beggar in the street,
The spinner in the sun;
The reapers reaping in the wheat,
The wan-cheeked nun—

He nothing human, alien deems
Unto himself, nor disesteems
Man's meanest claims upon him;
And where he moves the mere sunbeams
Drop blessings on him.

THE OLD ALABAMA CONFERENCE.

MR. EDITOR: The session of 1853 was held at Tuskaloosa. In the absence of a Bishop, Rev. G. Garrett presided. At this session Rev. D. C. B. Connerly, since so distinguished as a teacher of young men, was admitted on trial. Bro. Blue opposed his admission on the ground that he was in the habit of reading his sermons. I went out and told Connerly what was going on, and he wanted to withdraw his application; but it was too late, for he was admitted. The sequel proved that Blue was right. Connerly soon found that his appropriate field was in the school room rather than the pulpit.

It was at this Conference that Linfield produced a tremendous effect by preaching on the effect of sin and death on our world. He described the world as one vast grave-yard with a high wall around it, and introduced Hope as an angel of mercy, sitting on the top of a monument in the midst of the scene. The effect was electric, and even the impassible Blue had to shout.

At this Conference the young men rather carried the day. They formed a sort of party in the Conference, calling itself "Young America," and the rest of the body "Old Fogy." Neely, Gillespie and Olin Capers were the leaders. Geo. W. Carter, from the Virginia Conference, was present helping us along. Cottrell and myself were on hand with the daguerreotypes of our future wives in our pockets, which we were very proud of showing. Wat. Harriss was our philosopher. Alas! what changes have come over the spirit of our dreams since that time. Affliction, temptation, death, have quenched our youthful ardor, and not one of us survives to-day but would condemn our indiscretions, and advise "young men to be sober-minded."

The next year was one of growth and prosperity. I was stationed at Eufaula, with the venerable Stephen Pilley for my presiding elder. Mark Andrews had preceded me. My charge was again blessed with a revival, and many were added. This year I was married. The church had received me as a single man, and when I carried my wife there some grumbling was heard: but the stewards manfully raised my salary, and I found a delightful home in the house of Sister McDonald. She was a childless widow, and had lived quite retired for a number of years after her husband's death. But for the love of Christ she took me and my wife to board, and was so pleased with the society of her preacher and his friends that she boarded my successors and their families for several years afterward. Bro. Motley and Bro. Cotten will join me in a tribute to the worth of this inestimable lady, who showed no little kindness to us and to the now departed wives who shared the toils of our itinerancy with us. In the order of nature she must soon stand before her Judge. She has the assurance that at least three of the excellent of the earth will stand up for her and say: "We were strangers and you took us in."

The General Conference of 1854 was held in Columbus, Georgia. As this was only fifty miles from Eufaula, I had the privilege of attending it. While there I witnessed the ordination of Bishops. I shall always regard the presentation of George Pierce, by his father, to the venerable Bishop Soule, when he utttered the solemn words of the Ritual, "Reverend father, I present you this holy man to be ordained Bishop," as the most sublime scene of my mortal life. Then I understood the meaning of Solomon when he said: "A wise son maketh a glad father." Bro. Andrews was sitting near me, and exclaimed that Bishop Soule was the grandest man on earth; but it was difficult to determine whether he or Dr. Pierce or George was the central figure of the group. "That Methodism has raised up such men in succeeding generations is proof sufficient that God has not yet forsaken her tabernacles.

Trenton Sunday School, Trenton, La.

MR. EDITOR: This school was first organized in 1867. Up to October, 1869, it never numbered over 40 pupils. Then there were 30 names upon the roll, with an average attendance of 20.

The following statistics will show the improvement made since October, 1869:

Number of scholars, 90; average attendance, 80; number of teachers and officers, 17; average attendance, 14; number of scholars over twelve years, 17; number of scholars under twelve years, 63; number of church members, 15; number of volumes in library, 1,200; number of Sunday School Visitors taken, 60; number of Our Little People taken, 20; number of Sunday School Magazines, 15; number of Lesson Papers, 90; amount of money raised for school purposes, $500; amount of money raised for missions by Sabbath School Juvenile Missionary Society, $285.

The census of 1870 exhibits only 72 children between the ages of 5 and 20 in Trenton.

Some of these scholars walk several miles to attend Sabbath school. A large proportion of the mission contribution was obtained from the just earnings of the children—some little girls making over $10 by sewing sacks for stores, and some little boys by working in the cotton field. Every child in Trenton that can talk and walk is a member of our Sunday school. Considering the circumstances, can any Sunday school in the South exhibit a better report?

THE FAMILY A SCHOOL FOR THE CHURCH.—Let every pious parent regard his family as a little school for the church, and act as a teacher designated by the Saviour, on purpose to train the children for his service, and we shall see a glorious result. Let parents neglect this duty, and their children will prove incompetent to meet the responsibilities awaiting them, and the parents must answer for the ruin that will come. The laws of Lycurgus required that all children of Sparta should be trained for the State. Jesus teaches his subjects to believe that children are a heritage of the Lord, and to be trained for the church.

FIRST CHAPTER OF GENESIS.

Third day, verse 9: "And God said, Let the waters under the heaven be gathered together into, one place, and let the dry land appear; and it was so." In the previous verse expansion is named heaven, and so it is to be understood in this. The waters are commanded to lessen their boundary, and let the dry land make its appearance. In the waters, implied above the heaven or expansion, we have those of the higher regions of the air. The proof is positive that the solid parts of the world were originally enveloped with water. Taking into consideration that it revolved, in this condition, about forty-eight hours previous to the rising of the earth out of the water, we would be amazingly surprised to find its interior otherwise than represented by geologists.

Verse 10: "And God called the dry land earth (arets) and the gathering together of the waters called he seas; and God saw that it was good." Prior to the third day, fossils, iron, copper, silver, gold, ground and water mixed together in chaotic mass, and were designated by the word arets. After the third day, arets was strictly confined to land or earth, including all things therein, and so it has come down to us.

Verse 11: "And God said, Let the earth bring forth grass, the herb yielding seed, and the fruit tree yielding fruit after its kind, whose seed is in itself, upon the earth; and it was so." What mysterious power was then imparted to the earth! Of this the life, growth, air-vessels, sap-vessels, leaves, flowers and fruit of a single apple tree are practical, truthful comments. The primrose, violet, rose and japonica are specimens of its beautiful, suggestive and profound poetry. Incomprehensibility as to their exact developments intensifies and heightens adoration to their Maker, leaving the mind lost in wonder, love and praise.

Verse 12: "And the earth brought forth grass," etc. Spring and harvest, with countless hills and plains robed in green, and adorned with flowers, are as so many volumes on the command given to the earth by him who upholds it, and all things, by laws immutable, in which the indescribable immensity of his knowledge, wisdom and power appear.

How peculiar the Mosaic narration of facts! The earth is addressed, and things are specified which it must yield us a task imposed on it. This is recorded, accompanied with the assurance that "the earth brought forth" accordingly. "Let there be expansion." Without any change in the subject we are informed: "And God made the expansion." The signification of made is regulated by the use of be, which, as we have elsewhere stated in another form of speech, indicates existence abidingly continued. Such the Hebraistic style of Moses, and such his teaching!

"And the evening and the morning were the third day," which was spent in gathering the waters into one place, causing the dry land to appear, naming the waters seas, bidding the earth to "bring forth grass, the herb and the fruit tree," and in seeing all good.

The reader should not forget that every yom (day) mentioned in making the world consisted of twelve hours. This we call the natural. The artificial is: "From even (ereb) to even (ereb) you shall celebrate your Sabbath."

ALEPH.

A BEAUTIFUL THOUGHT.—God knows what keys in the human soul to touch in order to draw out its sweeter and most perfect harmonies. They may be the minor strains of sadness and sorrow; they may be the loftier notes of joy and gladness. God knows where the melodies of our nature are, and what discipline will call them forth. Some with plaintive song must walk in the lowly vales of life's weary way; others in loftier hymns shall sing of nothing but joy as they tread the mountain-tops of life; but they all unite without a discord or jar as the ascending anthem of loving and believing hearts finds its way into the chorus of the redeemed in heaven.

EDUCATION OF OUR CHILDREN.

MR. EDITOR: It is often said the Methodists do more for the poor than any other church, and in many respects this is true; but in other respects we fail. Through Methodistic economy the gospel is preached all over the land, to rich and poor; but why do many circuits, and in some places whole districts, remain poor. In many places the preacher found the people ignorant, and that country for a whole generation has been under Methodist influence, and still they are not much wiser, while they are much better.

My observation is that in some of the churches there are but few poor. It may be explained by saying they do not preach to the poor and illiterate; but may there not be another cause? Do they not make a more decided effort to educate the poor of their congregations? What would the Catholic Church be without Catholic schools? It is in their schools where their children learn most to be Catholics. Suppose the Methodists had been wise on this subject as they were pious and laborious on other subjects. Thousands of our children have done the church and the world but little good. The gospel has been preached, and faithfully preached, among thorns, rocks and by the wayside. Why are our circuits failing all over the land? The war had something to do with their present condition; but they were not the most desirable appointments before the war. But few of the preachers desire circuit appointments; and why? From the experienced fact the labor is hard, and the support often meager. Many of the more wealthy leave their plantations, as Lot did, and seek homes in the towns and villages to educate their children. Plantations go to wreck. The boys grow up in idleness, because when out of school they have nothing to do. They fall into bad company and bad habits during the long, long vacations.

The towns are crowded; the country is wasted of much of its intelligence; the poor boys and girls are left without school privileges, and the circuit preacher, if he has no home of his own, is left to live in some out-of-the-way cabin, and get something to live on as best he can. His children, while trying to preach to others, grow up in ignorance, and may be reflect no credit on their father's profession. But where is the remedy? All see the evils and many feel them. Can a change for the better be worked out? Other denominations say only by working out Methodism, which they are in more ways than one trying to do. Some of our novices think the settled pastorate is what we need, but men of thought and experience know that policy would leave half the church without any pastor at all. The Methodist Church, more than any other, has a permanent pastorate. The Conference always provides a preacher, and the very best that can be had for every work. Some say the thing of trying to educate our children as a whole, by denominational schools, is not practicable—may do in some places. I suppose where all are Methodists, and no one of any other denomination wants the school. Others, and not a few, are opposed to denominational schools. This class is in opposition to anything that commits them to any decided effort. Such men are generally afraid of giving offense; they are always for peace, if it cost the enlightenment of ten thousand children.

The Saviour sent peace to all men, but a sword to some as the way to make peace. We readily find excuses when we refuse to do what our convictions teach us we ought to do. Nothing worth is lightly won. There is no palm without dust. We have tried, for several General Conferences past, to do by legislation for the church what can only be accomplished by self-denial and cross-bearing—by labor, earnest, persistent effort. We have, as a church, lost much by delay. Nearly all our changes, though not so intended, have been only to conciliate the rich and the few, without aiding permanently the many. The Methodist ministry have always been the friends of education. They have never been ignorant of its effect upon the masses. They have seen the seed which they have sown spring up and yield sixty and an hundred fold where the ground was fully prepared. They have felt, and more extensively so than any other class of ministers, the effect of sowing among thorns and by the wayside. It is time the Methodist Church should act not to build more colleges, but upon the more important subject of educating the thousands of her children. We cannot longer delay, with safety, on this vital subject. Others will clear off the land we have labored for an age in cutting down. They will fence it with the rails split by our fathers, which we have failed to lay up, and by a wiser policy reap a rich harvest, which justly belongs to us and our children.

Mr. Editor, there is a remedy—not an experiment. Let the preachers on their circuits abandon half their preaching places, and build churches at central points—I do not say cease preaching at the less important points—and build academies at those central churches, and put a competent corps of Methodist teachers in them; and by thus uniting, a permanent school of high grade can be supported by this policy. All the poor boys and girls can have the benefit of educational privileges. Some can work and others can go to school. Show me a good church building and a good academy by the side of it, and I will show you a flourishing Sunday school, full congregations, and a church which supports its minister, and citizens who do not want to move either to town or Texas. By our present management half the houses on our circuits, and in many of our villages, are of such a low order of building that they never impress our children or anybody else with the purity or greatness of the God we worship. Such houses in rich neighborhoods, where we too often find them, have a very great tendency to depreciate worship and the minister in the mind of those who pretend to worship in such places. One-half the vulgar jests about ministers are traceable to the shanty where such people worship. The log school house has had much to do with the character of our schools, and the general estimate put on teachers and education. Brick, when put in churches and school houses, mean more than brick. The Methodists in Alabama to-day ought to have five thousand children in Methodist schools and colleges; and it is our own fault we have not got them.

It may be said by some, and has been by those who have but little experience and less observation, that we cannot carry out denominational schools in the towns and villages. What are the facts all over the State? The schools are only flourishing where they are denominational. Compromise has ruined and killed out more than half the schools in the State. This fear of offense is all a mistake. Who ever thought less of any minister or church for trying to build themselves up by educating their own children in their own schools? Some men remind me, in their fear of offending, of a very poor old Methodist lady who came near dying for want of medical aid, because she would not send for the physician, lest she might offend the other doctors. So it is in the villages. The Methodists do not want to be called denominational; neither do the Baptists or Presbyterians. And amid their liberality they have no school, and their boys and girls grow up in ignorance—a fearful sacrifice to a foolish, morbid, pretended liberality which all know has no existence, only in mine. More anon. Very truly yours,

S. P. RICHARDSON.

SUMMERFIELD, ALA., Jan. 4, 1871.

THE Bible is so full of promises that I have sometimes wondered why God so often assures us of his help. Over the door of his storehouse has he written, "Ask and ye shall receive," and I think it may be so that we can have no excuse for being poor and unfed while the riches of his grace are so abundantly offered.

POLITENESS TO STRANGERS.

When you see a stranger in the vestibule of your church do not pass him coldly by with the thought that the sexton will see him, but speak to him yourself, give him a seat in your pew if you have room; if not, give him a good seat, and at the close of the service seek him out, invite him to come again, tell him about the Sabbath school and the prayer meeting, make him acquainted with the prominent men of your church, and show the stranger that you feel an interest in him. You may gain an earnest worker; and you certainly will do your duty. And this duty applies to the ladies also. It must be very embarrassing to a lady to go to a strange church and to be looked curiously at, her dress commented upon in tones loud enough to reach her ears, and no one except the sexton offer to show her a seat, or in any manner take any interest in her. It certainly would be sufficient to drive some people to another church and a more social people. Ladies, if you can in any way show courtesy to a stranger, do it; and in no place is it so much needed as in our churches. 'Tis a small thing to pass a hymn book to the stranger in the pew near you, who is sitting without one; but he appreciates it. 'Tis but a little act to ask that young lady, who has come here for the first time, to come and join your class in the Sabbath school; but it shows her you have an interest in her as a stranger, and would be her friend. There are as many ways which will suggest themselves to every reader, by which he or she can show the strangers that they are welcome, that I will not enumerate them. That this matter is of importance can easily be learned. On inquiry, I have found that many have made their decision as to what church they would go from the treatment received the first time they attended service at a particular church.

When a stranger comes to your prayer meeting for the first time, look after him. And at all social gatherings seek out the strangers and make them feel at home; do not introduce them to everybody at once, as is the custom in some places; a stranger, after running this gauntlet, comes away with very curious ideas of whom he has met, or their names; but gradually make him acquainted with the most social people in your society, and be sure and let him meet your pastor. He will know, in a few moments, just what hands to put him into to make him at home. Children, look after the stranger boys and girls, get them into your Sabbath school, and thus benefit them and yourself, your church and your school.—Zion's Herald.

BEWARE OF BAD COMPANY.—A minister was spending a few days at the house of a friend. This friend had a little son six or seven years of age, named Tommy, a bright, active little fellow, and a favorite with every one.

One Sabbath morning the minister was talking to Tommy about the commandments of God. The little boy listened attentively a moment, then looked up, and said:

"I swear sometimes."

The minister was much surprised, for Tommy's parents were good people, and they taught their little son to reverence the name of God.

How did it all come about? The minister soon learned. On the street where Tommy lived a track was being laid for a street railroad. The men who worked on this road were many of them bad men, who often took the name of God in vain. Tommy used to go out to play where the men were at work, and soon became a great favorite with the men; and as they took much notice of Tommy, laughing at all he said and praising all he did, the little boy soon began to like nothing better than to stay with them. He began to like their ways, too, and to try to be like them. In this way he had learned to swear. Looking out one day upon these men at work, Tommy said to the minister:

"I know all these men, and they are all my friends."

There was the secret. Tommy had been in bad company.—Sunday School Visitor.

RICH AND NOBLE RELATIVES.—I was reading lately of a very good answer made by a very little boy, who afterward became a very distinguished minister of the gospel. One of his school-fellows was boasting one day about the number of rich and noble relatives he had. Then he asked the future minister if there were any "lords" in his family.

"Yes," said the little fellow, "I know there is one at least, for I have often heard my mother say that Lord Jesus Christ is our elder brother."

THE errors of the good are often very difficult to eradicate, from being founded on mistaken views of duty.

SATURDAY, JANUARY 14, 1871.

BE ALWAYS GIVING.

The sun gives ever; so the earth
What it can give so much to us is worth.
The ocean gives in many ways—
Gives baths, gives fishes, rivers, bays.
So, too, the air—it gives us breath;
When it stops giving, comes in death.
Give, give, be always giving;
Who gives not is not living.
The more you give
The more you live.

God's love hath in its wealth untaxed;
Only by giving it is reaped.
The body withers, and the mind
Spent in by a selfish rind.
Give strength, give thought, give deeds, give self.
Give love, give tears, and give thyself.
Give, give, be always giving;
Who gives not is not living.
The more we give
The more we live.

PRECIOUS STONES.

Diamonds were first brought from the East, where the mine of Sumbulpour was the first known, and where the mines of Golconda were first discovered in the year 1584.

Although not considered as valuable, intrinsically, as the ruby, the diamond has always maintained its precedence as the first of crown-jewels. In Queen Victoria's crown there are thirteen hundred and sixty-three brilliant diamonds, twelve hundred and seventy-three rose-diamonds, and one hundred and forty-seven table-diamonds, besides one large ruby, seventeen sapphires, eleven emeralds, four small rubies, and two hundred and seventy-seven pearls.

The diamond is composed of pure carbon crystallized, and is the hardest known substance. The English were at one time famous as cutters of precious stones, but the art is now wholly lost to them, and most of the valuable stones are intrusted to Dutch Jews. The diamond is split easily with the grain, and cut upon a wheel smeared with diamond dust—the only material that effectually touches it—and it is polished in the same manner, a steel disk being employed for the purpose smeared with fine powder, and revolving at a great speed.

We may add that on the skill and success of the lapidary in the cutting of diamonds entirely depends the development of the true value of a stone. The first cutting of the celebrated Koh-i-noor diamond was a miserable failure, inasmuch as the brilliancy of the gem was in no adequate measure revealed, and a second cutting was necessitated to bring out the surpassing splendor of the stone. Although reduced in the latter process from one hundred and eighty-six to one hundred and six carats, so skillfully was the work performed by the famous Coster, of Amsterdam, that no visible reduction was noticeable, while the brilliancy of the gem was pronounced surpassingly wonderful in its renewed form.

To its hardness the diamond owes its name, which is derived from the Latin adamas—signifying invincible consistence.

While the ancients were aware of the property of its powder, or dust, for cutting, engraving and polishing other stones, with the art of cutting the diamond they were unacquainted, contenting themselves with such as were polished naturally. It was not until the fifteenth century that the art of cutting and polishing the diamond was known in Europe, having been invented and first practiced in 1456 by Louis de Berquen, a native of the city of Bruges, the capital of West Flanders.

Diamonds of the choicest kind are described as water or snow-white diamonds, and these are most sought and prized by jewelers because of their superior hardness, luster and refractory power. The rarest colored diamonds are blue, pink and dark brown; but yellow diamonds, when the color is uniform throughout, are very beautiful and highly valued. Pale-blue diamonds are also prized and rare, while deep-blue ones are still rarer.

Many persons suppose that diamonds are only used as jewelry, and that really they are of no essential value in the practical arts. This is a mistaken notion; they are used for a great number of purposes in the arts. The magnifying power of the diamond, in proportion to that of plate-glass ground to a similar form, is as eight to three. For drawing minute lines on hard steel and glass, to make micrometers, there is no substitute for the diamond point.

The rough diamond is called "vort," and the points used for glass-cutting are fragments of the verts. Great care and skill are necessary in selecting the cutting points, because the diamond that cuts the glass most successfully has the cutting edges of the crystal placed at right angles to each other, and passing through a point of intersection made by crossing the edges.

Sir David Brewster first noticed fluid cavities in the diamond, and explained the optical peculiarities of some diamonds by their presence. The diamond not only burns in oxygen gas, but in the air when heated to redness before the oxyhydrogen flame; it takes fire and burns like coal, but goes out when the heat is intermitted. It then becomes white, like ground glass, and does not blacken, nor swell up, nor splinter, unless previously cracked. Other experiments of a scientific character show that diamonds, with native lenticular faces and such as are used for glass-cutting, look, after having been strongly heated in the air, as if they were composed of so many prisms inclosed in triangles.

So accurately are diamonds imitated at the present time that none but those carefully skilled in the business can detect the real from the imitations.

Signor Massimo Levy, an Italian chemist, has afforded a source through which to accurately determine the difference between real and imitation diamonds, which is as follows:

"If you have a doubtful stone, put it into a leaden or platinum cup, with some powdered fluor-spar and a little oil of vitriol; warm the vessel with some lighted charcoal in a fireplace, or wherever there is a strong draught, to carry away the noxious vapors that will be copiously evolved. When these vapors have ceased rising, let the whole cool, and then stir the mixture with a glass rod to fish out the diamond. If you find it intact, it is a genuine stone; but, if it is false, it will be corroded by the hydrofluoric acid that has been generated around it. A small 'paste' diamond will disappear altogether under this treatment."

The ruby is the next hardest thing in nature after the diamond. The finest rubies are found in the East Indies; and the King of Burmah takes one of his titles from them—that of the "Lord of the Rubies." In old times the ruby was considered to possess many magical properties. It was thought to be an amulet against poison, plague, evil thoughts and evil spirits. The ruby depends upon its color for its value. The ruby, sapphire and Oriental topaz are composed identically of the same materials: the red sapphire is a ruby, the blue a sapphire, and the yellow ruby a topaz. They are all termed corundums, an Indian name. The finest rubies are found in Ava and Siam; they are also found in Ceylon and many parts of Europe.

In Burmah the gem is a royal monopoly, and none of any value are by law allowed to leave the kingdom. The finding of a fine ruby is made a state event, and a procession of grandees, with soldiers and elephants, are sent out to meet it. The color of the ruby varies from pale rose to deep red, but the tint that is most highly prized and valued is that of the "pigeon's blood." One of the largest rubies in Europe is a French crown jewel, at one time adorning the Order of the Golden Fleece. The King of Burmah is said to possess a ruby of the size of a pigeon's egg. A true "pigeon's blood" tinted ruby of one carat is valued at from $70 to $100; of two carats, at $300 and upward; and four carats, from $2,000 and upward. The diamond of similar weight would be valued at prices but little more than half these rates.

The emerald is classed next to the diamond and ruby, and possesses a brilliant green color. Emerald and beryl have the same chemical composition, and differ only in color. The finest colored emeralds are found in New Granada, embedded in limestone rock. It is also found in Salzburg and in Siberia. The Spaniards, it is asserted, came into possession of many hundred weight of emeralds when they conquered Peru; hence their value fell in the middle ages. The emerald is but rarely found in perfect form. Perfect gems of this class are valued at from twenty to forty pounds the carat, but they do not, like the diamond and ruby, advance in price with the size.

There are many large emeralds in Europe. There is one in the Austrian treasury weighing two thousand carats; and the Duke of Devonshire possesses one weighing nine ounces.

The value of the beryl, or aquamarine, is trifling. An enormous beryl has been found in this country weighing five tons!

The garnet has many varieties, and is found in many parts of the globe. When cut table-wise, convex and smooth at the top, and flat at the bottom, it is termed a carbuncle.

There are a large number of what may be termed valuable rather than precious stones, which belong to the quartz system. Among these are amethyst, cairngorn, onyx, sardonyx, cornelian, chalcedony, agate, jasper, blood stone and rock crystal. The onyx and sardonyx have long been used for cameos, and the value of the material is vastly enhanced by the art that is sometimes employed upon them. Some of the ancient cameos are very valuable. The art of engraving upon these stones has latterly greatly improved, and a taste has sprung up for fine cameos.

There are several kinds of opals, the chief of which are the precious, or "noble," opal, used by jewelers; the fire, or reddish, opal, the common opal and the Mexican opal. When the different tints in an opal are distributed evenly over its surface, it is known in the trade as Harlequin. This is a rude way of designating the exquisite blending of hues which make this jewel so beautiful. The iridescence is owing to minute lines on the surface of the gem which decompose the light, just in the same manner as they do in mother-of-pearl. The flashes of color in this precious stone are always most marked in a warm day; the knowledge that heat enhances the brilliancy of the stone always leads the dealer to hold it in his hand for some time before showing it to a customer.

Fine opals are very valuable. As much as one thousand pounds has been given for a large stone for a ring or brooch. The ancients prized them very highly; and Pliny relates that Nonnius, a Roman senator, was sent into exile by Marcus Antonius because he would not part with an opal of the size of a filbert, and valued at one hundred and seventy thousand pounds, which the latter coveted. The finest known opal is in the museum at Vienna, and it is said to be worth thirty thousand pounds.—H. K. W. Wilson, in Appletons' Journal.

KEEP TO THE TRUTH.

A HINT TO SUNDAY SCHOOL TALKERS.

We often impress the teachings of Scripture much more forcibly on the minds of children by a vivid description of places and circumstances. The story seems more real to them in our own words. But we cannot be too careful to have our statements all correspond strictly with the facts.

A gentleman relates that he actually heard a public speaker, addressing the children, describe pathetically the poverty of Jesus and Mary, stating that when they went up to Jerusalem "they were obliged to beg their way along, with a few cents they had to pay their tax tied up in the corner of a handkerchief."

The little ones, of course, would accept such a statement as fact, and those who knew better would naturally listen with little respect to any farther remarks from the speaker.

When one allows his fancy too great license he is soon apt to lose his strict conscientiousness with regard to the truth, and it is surprising to what lengths speakers will sometimes go in this sort of romancing.

I know a gentleman, who is held in great esteem by some as a "famous Sunday school man," who is chiefly famous for his Munchausen stories with which he delights the children. He once owned to a clergyman that he made them up as he went along. Very often he "did not know how he was going to come out when he began one." These stories, too, very often purported to be personal adventures, encounters with snakes, bears, and the like, in the Western wilds. Often, too, they were so improbable that even a child's credulity would be severely taxed by them.

Now such children's addresses are a folly in Israel. Better ten words of serious, earnest instruction, that would fasten itself on the child's heart and soul, than hours of such idle entertainment. Every thing that will give children false impressions of the truth, or tend to lower their standard of the truth, cannot be too scrupulously avoided. And if we turn to the word of truth we shall learn how displeasing they are in God's sight.—Sunday School Times.

A CHRISTIAN'S COMFORT.—The best ground of comfort and confidence which a man can feel, that he is God's son and abiding in his favor, is that he is "led by the Spirit of God." Nor is it difficult for any one to discover whether this be his case or no; since "the fruit of the Spirit is love, joy, peace, long suffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance." If, therefore, a man find these graces in his own heart and conduct, he may be sure that they must be planted there by God, the fruits of his good Spirit; and that he, being led by the Spirit, is the son of God. And as this is their support and comfort, so it is a caution to the best and wisest, that from that blessed eminence they may at any moment fall; and consequently no care can be too great to preserve themselves from the sin of grieving the Holy Spirit of God, by whose presence in their hearts they are sealed to the day of redemption. Be diligent, therefore, in using these outward means of grace, whereby God sanctifies his children from the world; be studious to walk where the Spirit leads, lest that blessed Spirit be withdrawn; and be lowly and humble before the Most High, since it is to such only that an increase or continuance of the divine favor is promised.—Bishop Heber.

Statistical Returns of the Methodist Episcopal Church for 1870.

From a very full and carefully prepared statement in the Christian Advocate of New York we have selected some of the more important items:

The official statistical returns made by the several Annual Conferences at their sessions held during the current year have been put in type, and will soon be issued from the Book Concern in a large octavo volume of over three hundred pages. From the proof-sheets we compile the interesting summaries which we give below. The figures show a year of noteworthy prosperity. Let us be profoundly grateful to Him whose servants we are, whose benedictions have thus far crowned our labors, and who now calls to renewed consecration and zeal in his work.

The general summaries, stated in the briefest form, are as follows:

	1870.	Increase over 1869.
Bishops	8	...
Annual Conferences	72	...
Traveling preachers	9,193	363
Local preachers	11,091	1,063
Total preachers	21,234	2,064
Members in full connection	1,173,099	58,587
Members on probation	191,035	9,809
Total lay members	1,367,134	68,196
Adult baptisms	105,181	5,334
Infant baptisms	50,143	2,914
Total baptisms	116,901	8,278
Number of churches	13,573	1,325
Number of parsonages	4,179	211
Value of church edifices	$52,611,551	$3,361,521
Value of parsonages	$7,291,513	$431,283
No. of Sunday schools	16,913	518
Sunday school teachers	189,414	4,816
Sunday school scholars	1,221,398	41,409
Benevolent collections	$967,883	$9,927

These figures are exclusive of the statistics of our foreign missions in China, Bulgaria and South America, the official returns from which having not yet reached us.

The Southern Conferences.—The following figures give the present membership of these Conferences, and show the increase or decrease of each for the year:

Net increase in Southern Conferences, 10,715.

The number of traveling preachers in these Conferences is 670, an increase of 80. The present number of local preachers, 2,660, an increase of 260.

German Conferences.—A collation of the figures giving the lay and ministerial force of these Conferences presents the following:

	Members.	Inc.	Tr. P.	L. P.
Central German	16,201	...	145	87
East German	3,147	282	38	26
German and Switzerland	7,259	305	50	37

S. W. German	8,769	301	99	127
Total	37,619	1,565	359	358

The increase of traveling preachers is 22, and of local preachers 19; total increase of ministerial force in the German Conferences, 41. The returns of the German district, Texas, are not included in these summaries, but are embraced in those of the Texas Conference.

Colored Conferences.—Only four of the Conferences are composed exclusively of colored people. Several of the others include a considerable colored membership, both of ministers and laymen. The four Conferences give the following summaries:

	Members.	Inc.	Trav. preachers.	Local preachers.
Delaware	16,967	698	18	154
Lexington	5,433	5,433	17	107

Washington	21,019	1,222	97	117
Total	45,245	7,785	150	419

The total number of traveling and local preachers in these Conferences is 629, an increase of 14 traveling preachers and 153 local preachers.

Benevolent Collections.—Seven of these are reported by the Conferences. The following are the summaries:

For—		Increase.

THE BIBLE IN HUNGARY.—With the re-establishment of the Hungarian Constitution in 1857, restrictions upon the circulation of the Bible and the ministration of missionaries were removed. Several Bible societies have long been at work, and the Evangelist says that that country now has a catalogue comprising nearly a hundred religious tracts and standard books in the Hungarian, Slavonian and Romanic languages, and thirty-four depositories, from which the colporteurs are able to meet the demands of the people for religious reading. About thirty colporteurs traverse the country without restriction, disposing of all the books and tracts by sale, and finding open doors wherever they go, even among the Catholic population, who are among the most ready purchasers. Their total sales last year amounted to over forty-nine thousand copies, and orders from the remotest parts of the Hungarian forests are daily received.

COMPLAINTS are made in some missionary circles in China of the theological laxity of some of the missionaries sent out by the London Society. One writer complains that they send out to market to buy provisions on Sunday, the same as on other days; and tells of an English chaplain sent by them to Hong Kong to supply a chapel for foreigners, who, on a visit to Fuhchau, happened to be in a Buddhist monastery at the time of their evening prayers, and followed the procession in sport around the room, bowing before the image of Buddha precisely as they did. The Chinese Recorder has within the past few months contained several papers on the Sabbath; and one missionary—not, we think, of the London board—took the ground that an unwillingness to observe the Sabbath was no valid reason to refuse church membership, as the extreme rigor in keeping the Sabbath was a burden which neither we nor our fathers have been able to bear. He would require of the converts nothing more than that they should attend worship twice on Sunday.

IN ENGLAND the government supports schools that are under denominational control. As a specimen of the character of the teaching which may be given in these rate-aided schools, we quote from Peter Payne's letter to the Watchman and Reflector a few extracts from a catechism prepared by Rev. F. A. Gace, for the schools in his parish:

"We have among us various sects and denominations who go by the general name of Dissenters. In what light are we to consider them? Ans. As heretics; and in our Litany we expressly pray to be delivered from the sins of false doctrine, heresy and schism. Is then their worship a laudable service? Ans. No. Because they worship God according to their own evil and corrupt imaginations, and not according to his revealed will; and therefore their worship is idolatrous. Why have not Dissenters been excommunicated? Because the law of the land does not allow the wholesome law of the church to be acted upon. What class of Dissenters should we be most upon our guard against? Ans. Those who imitate the most nearly the true church of Christ. Is it wicked, then, to enter a meeting house at all? Ans. Most assuredly."

CHINA.—The missionaries of our board and of the Southern Baptist board have felt impelled, by a sense of duty, to withdraw from Tungchow, and take refuge at Chefoo. Fears of violence similar to that exhibited at Tientsin have led to this step, which was a very painful alternative to those constrained to take it. No station in China presented greater evidence of the blessing of God on missionary labor than Tungchow, and it was left on this account with sad and poignant feelings. It is hoped, however, that their absence will prove to be a short one, and that the present causes of anxiety and apprehension regarding the disposition of the Chinese toward foreigners will soon disappear. Things, however, have yet a very unsettled look, and war between China and the nations demanding satisfaction for the Chinese perfidy is not wholly improbable. The churches at home will sympathize deeply with their missionaries in their seeming exclusion from this vast field, which seemed whitening for the harvest, but will not fail to trust him who has the hearts of nations in his hands, for overruling even this seeming disaster to the furtherance of his cause.—Interior.

A REMARKABLE REVIVAL has begun at No. 277 Water street, formerly a house of ill-fame, kept by Annie Russell. This woman has been attending the prayer meetings at the "Home for Women" occasionally, and, at the dinner at the Home on Thanksgiving day, expressed to the missionary her desire to leave the life of sin she had been living, and become a Christian. Last week she sent for the missionary to come and see her at her house, where she was in a wretched state of mind. As he entered her house he found her weeping, and she said: "My God! I can't stand this life any longer." She was taken to the Home. She ordered her house to be cleaned out and prepared for a house of God. The bar was taken out, the bottles broken, the furniture destroyed, and on Sunday last the house was dedicated as a chapel. The revival thus begun under these remarkable and gratifying circumstances, though not heralded with the excitement which John Allen occasioned, promises to be a great blessing to the miserable inhabitants of Water street.

It ought to be stated that the work has been carried on for some time as a Methodist mission by the Rev. William H. Boole, of the New York East Conference. Every effort has been made to avoid "sensation," and to conduct the mission in a sober spirit. The conversion here narrated has been surprising in its manifestation, but bears every mark of genuineness.—Methodist.

SOUTH AFRICA MISSION.—The Rev. Robert Moffat, at a private entertainment given by Mr. Fraser, an old friend of the venerable missionary, at Buckhurst Hill, England, a few weeks since, gave an interesting account of his missionary labors in South Africa, extending over fifty-four years. We give an extract or two from this account, as presented by the Sabbath Recorder:

"When we first went out to the Bechuana tribes they had no sign of a written language, and exhibited as much astonishment at the use of one as the South Sea Islanders, among whom Williams labored. It was a very long time before he could acquire any knowledge of their tongue, and his first attempts at its use involved very awkward and humorous mistakes. For instance, he was made to call a man a great rascal, or to ask an old woman to kiss him, while the natives stood by laughing at his blunders. It was a very earnest yearning of his heart to be able to speak to them in their own language of the love of God, although he soon found that new difficulties had to be encountered even here, for it was hard to convince them of the truth of his testimony. By degrees it was received by a few, and then eyes forever unused to weeping streamed with tears of penitence and love at the recital of the story of the cross. The venerable missionary recalled his early struggles in translation. It was touching to hear the old man utter the strong hope he cherished of meeting once again with the poor Africans who have listened to the gospel from his lips, when they shall be assembled before the presence of their God and Saviour."

WESLEY'S PRACTICAL NOTES.—In the early days of Methodism in England there was a preacher, Samuel Bradburn, of whom Wesley had a high opinion, which he once expressed in a very happy way. Bradburn being once in a state of impecuniosity—a state not peculiar to Methodist ministers—Wesley sent him five pound notes, with a letter:

Dear Sammy: Trust in the Lord and do good; so shalt thou dwell in the land, and verily thou shalt be fed. Yours affectionately,

JOHN WESLEY.

The reply was equally happy:

Rev. and Dear Sir: I have often been struck with the beauty of the passage of Scripture quoted in your letter, but I must confess that I never saw such useful expository notes upon it before. I am, reverend and dear sir, your obedient and grateful servant, S. BRADBURN.

WORLDLY ENJOYMENT.—Often, when in the full enjoyment of all this world could bestow, my conscience told me that, in the true sense of the word, I was not a Christian. I laughed, I sang, I was apparently gay and happy; but the thought would steal across me, "What madness is all this, to continue easy in a state in which a sudden call out of the world would consign me to everlasting misery."

To SUBSCRIBERS.—Any person wishing to subscribe for this paper can do so by paying the Methodist preacher in the circuit, and forwarding to us his receipt for $3, with the address of the subscriber upon it, stating Post Office, State, Circuit and Conference. The receipt ought to be taken in duplicate.

N. B.—Agents are requested, wherever practicable, to invest and remit funds in a POST OFFICE ORDER, DRAFT, or by EXPRESS. If this cannot be done, REGISTER the letter at our expense.

When money is forwarded in either of the above methods we will be responsible for it, but not otherwise.

POST OFFICES.

As changes are being made in the post offices of the preachers, they will greatly oblige us by furnishing their addresses as early as possible. Don't forget to give the post office from which your paper is to be changed, as well as that to which it is to be sent.

OUR PUBLISHING AGENT.

We are glad to announce that the Publishing Committee, at its recent meeting, have arranged with Rev. Robert J. Harp to take charge of the business department of the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE. Bro. Harp assumes the onerous duties of this position at the earnest desire and solicitation of the editor and the Publishing Committee, who regard him as the man for the place, and bespeak for him the hearty co-operation of all the agents and friends of the paper. Hereafter all communications of a BUSINESS NATURE should be addressed to Rev. R. J. Harp, 112 Camp street, New Orleans. All communications for the columns of the paper should be addressed, as heretofore, to Rev. Linus Parker.

EDITOR ELECTED.

The Publishing Committee have seen fit to continue the editorial conduct of the ADVOCATE in our hands. We are sorry that no way of escape has appeared, and we shall do the best we can. With much other labor upon us we do not hope to reach our ideal of what a religious journal should be, but we shall aim to do good, and to write and publish nothing for which we shall feel regret in the dying hour. Toil and sacrifice are all that we can promise ourself in the duties which the authorities of the church have devolved upon us, and these will be cheerfully met, if we can in any measure contribute to the spread of scriptural holiness and the advancement of the divine kingdom in the world. We ask our brethren in the ministry to stand by their publishing agent and editor, and to co-operate with them in placing the ADVOCATE upon a firm and prosperous footing. We are persuaded that a thorough canvass of our territory will result in doubling our subscription list during the next six months.

BULLARD'S great Panorama of New York City exhibits at the Methodist church in Algiers, on Monday and Tuesday next, the sixteenth and seventeenth instant, at two and half-past seven o'clock P. M., for the benefit of the church.

LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.

This Conference, after a harmonious and pleasant session, adjourned at midday on the tenth instant. On Sunday most of the Presbyterian and Baptist pulpits were filled by members of the Conference. Bishop Doggett preached three times during his stay with us, and more than sustained his reputation as one of the greatest preachers of the age. His official duties were discharged with ability, and he bears away with him the admiring and affectionate regards of our preachers and people. Bishop Marvin was with us in labors abundant, preaching to the delight and spiritual edification of our congregations, and Bishop Keener was at home among us, contributing to the interest of the occasion by his presence and counsels. Dr. McFerrin more than ever endeared himself to the Conference, and his ministrations were signally blessed to both preachers and people.

The Conference was assessed $1,250 for the old missionary debt, and on Saturday, after a stirring appeal by Dr. McFerrin, $1,345 was pledged, and nearly one-half paid on the spot. The anniversary on Saturday night yielded $617.50. The missionary collections, exclusive of the old debt, amount to $3,318.25. The preachers probably lack about twenty-five per cent. of having received their full allowances. On Monday night the report of the Committee on Ministerial Support showed a deficiency of nine per cent. in the amount due the widows, orphans and superannuates. This deficit was immediately made up by a few gentlemen and ladies present, so that the Conference records exhibit this most important claim as fully met.

Philip Allen was admitted on trial.

Remaining on Trial.—John A. G. Rabe, Joseph W. Medlock, Joseph Gorton Miller, J. Lano Borden and Richard H. Adair.

Admitted into full Connection.—James M. McKee and Robert Randle.

Readmitted.—John W. Hearn.

Received by Transfer from other Conferences.—Robert A. Davis, from Mississippi Conference; Amicus W. Williams, from North Georgia Conference; John Mathews, from Alabama Conference; Robert Parvin, from Little Rock Conference; W. D. Stayton, from Memphis Conference.

Traveling Preachers Elected and Ordained Deacons.—Richard H. Adair, John A. G. Rabe, J. Gorton Miller, J. Lane Borden, Joseph W. Medlock and Robert Randle.

Local Preachers Elected and Ordained Deacons.—William Shopard, Joseph Moore, colored, John Fopp, colored, Monroe Evans, colored, and John Lewis Burton, colored.

Local Preachers Elected and Ordained Elders.—C. A. C. Herlong, Jacob Kile, Cyrus Alexander, colored, Warren Williams, colored, and William Banks, colored.

Located this Year.—A. W. Moore and J. L. Chapman.

Supernumerary.—S. J. Graves and John S. Davis.

Superannuated.—H. C. Thweatt, Joel Saunders, Thomas Samford, W. E. Doty and Almarin G. Miller.

Died During the Year.—Charles John Hallberg. Obituaries of Bro. Hallberg were published in the ADVOCATE last summer.

William H. Foster and John Wilkinson were elected delegates to the Sunday School Convention to be held at Nashville, in May. C. W. Carter and T. C. Standifer were elected as reserves.

W. C. Haislip was elected corresponding Sunday school secretary.

N. A. Cravens was appointed to preach the next Conference sermon.

The resolution of the General Conference, in reference to the veto power of the Bishops, was concurred in by a vote of thirty-one ayes and two nays.

The amount required for the widows, orphans and worn-out preachers was $2,250, the whole of which was raised and paid over to the claimants.

The amount of Bishops' claims apportioned to the Conference, including traveling expenses, was $1,220. The amount collected was $1,002.45, leaving a deficiency of $227.55.

The following report was submitted by a committee appointed to confer with a committee from the Mississippi Conference in reference to the establishment of an Orphans' Home:

1. Resolved, That we recommend to the Louisiana and Mississippi Annual Conferences the establishment of an Orphans' Home conjointly.

2. Resolved, That we recommend to the Conference the establishment of said Orphans' Home at the town of Jackson, Louisiana.

3. Resolved, That a committee of two shall be appointed, who shall ascertain at what price and on what terms properties suitable for an Orphans' Home can be obtained in Jackson, Louisiana, and report to the chairman, Dr. W. H. Watkins, at Natchez, Mississippi, with whose concurrence they shall be authorized to purchase the property.

4. Resolved, That Rev. J. A. Godfrey and the preacher in charge of Baton Rouge station be appointed said committee.

5. Resolved, That the presiding Bishop of the Louisiana and Mississippi Conferences be requested to instruct the preachers of the Conference to act as agents for the Orphans' Home, and make personal application to their people for funds to establish and sustain the institution, and report and remit quarterly to the treasurer, W. H. Foster, New Orleans.

6. Resolved, That W. H. Foster be appointed permanent treasurer and secretary.

7. Resolved, That the name of the Orphans' Home shall be "The Orphans' Home of the Louisiana and Mississippi Conferences."

8. Resolved, That this Conference appoint three clerical and three lay members as members of a permanent board of trustees of the proposed Orphans' Home.

The following trustees were elected, to wit—Clerical: L. Parker, J. Mathews and J. A. Ivy. Lay: W. H. Foster, J. O. Fuqua and E. Booth.

Total number of white members, 9,044, being an increase of 976 this year. Colored members, 2,343, being an increase of 444. Baptisms, adults, 720; infants, 726. Other statistical matters will be reported hereafter.

The Conference gains several excellent transfers, but it also loses much in the same way. W. H. Moss, one of our best men, and one of our most effective preachers, leaves us to serve the Marshall station, East Texas Conference; and Dr. J. B. Walker, the beloved and honored, who has so long served the churches in New Orleans, is transferred to the Texas Conference, and stationed by Bishop Marvin at Galveston. The following resolutions were passed by a rising vote:

1. Resolved, That we hail with pleasure the advent of transfers to our Conference to supply the pressing necessities and exigencies of our increasing and extending work.

2. Resolved, That we reluctantly part with our beloved Bro. Walker, who has so long stood among us as a brother beloved; and feeling that the necessities of our Conference require his continuance on the same, our reluctance is increased.

3. Resolved, That we hereby commend our brother to the confidence and esteem of that part of our common Zion where his lot may fall, and that our earnest desire and prayer is that his bow may abide in strength, and that many souls may be saved through his instrumentality.

The next Conference meets at Monroe, Louisiana.

Before reading the appointments Bishop Doggett delivered an impressive and melting address, which touched and comforted and braced the hearts of all.

BISHOP KAVANAUGH.

We regret that Bishop Kavanaugh's injury has proved more serious than was at first supposed. He has been prevented from attending the Conferences at which he was expected. We devoutly hope that he will soon be restored to his work, and that his valuable life will long be preserved to the church. The Rev. Dr. Henderson writes:

"Bishop Kavanaugh is still confined to his house by the injury which he received six weeks ago, and it is not probable that he will get out before the winter closes. The injury at first seemed to be of trifling importance. We were with him when it happened, and afterward made several visits with the Bishop, the same day, and one of them several miles in the country. We had visited together a sick member of the church, and as we were leaving the place the Bishop, in getting into his rockaway, placed his foot upon the iron step in front, and as he lifted himself from the ground his foot slipped off, and he came down, wedged in between the step and the front wheel, bruising the skin, and, perhaps, injuring the tibia bone. The bruise has obstinately refused to heal, and continues to present an ugly, inflamed appearance. The Bishop suffers but little pain from it, but exceedingly regrets his inability to have attended his Annual Conferences. He is patient, however, under the trial, and employs himself in conversation with his family and friends, reading and vigorous thinking upon ponderous themes. We hope it will be our privilege to hear him preach the first sermon after his recovery.

"'For along.
From peak to peak, the rattling crags among,
Will leap the live thunder.'"

DEPARTURES.

BISHOP DOGGETT left this city, for his home in Richmond, Virginia, on Tuesday evening, the tenth instant. On the same evening Bishops Marvin and Keener left for St. Louis, whither they go to attend the semi-centennial celebration. At the same hour and by the same route—the Jackson railroad—Dr. McFerrin took his departure for his home in Nashville.

REV. DR. J. B. WALKER.—As will be seen in the reported proceedings of the Conference, Dr. Walker has been transferred to Texas, and by authority of Bishop Marvin stationed in the city of Galveston. His flock part with him with deep regret, as do also his brethren in the ministry; but it is with a double sorrow that we give him up. For years he has been associated with us as one of the Publishing Committee of the ADVOCATE, and as one of our regular editorial contributors. He has shared with us the toils and responsibilities of conducting the paper, and has largely contributed to the interest of its columns. We shall not, however, relinquish our claims upon his ready and versatile pen, but shall insist upon at least occasional articles for the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE. The doctor left for Galveston, with his family, on Thursday, the twelfth instant, followed by the prayers and good wishes of hundreds who have long known and loved him.

REV. DR. H. C. THWEATT.—Among the chief gratifications of the session of our Conference was the attendance of this beloved brother. Dr. Thweatt has been so afflicted for years with rheumatism as to be unable to preach, or to walk except with much pain and inconvenience. He is now residing with his son-in-law, Mr. Block, at 178 Annunciation street, where he proposes to teach a limited number of pupils. Dr. Thweatt is an experienced teacher, has been at the head of some of our best institutions of learning, and we doubt not that many will be glad to hear of his intention to take charge of a select number of scholars. No better opportunity could be desired for the preparation of boys for college.

MINUTES OF THE MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

MR. EDITOR: Please publish, for the benefit of the members of the Mississippi Conference, that the manuscripts of the minutes of their last session have been forwarded to Dr. Redford, Nashville, for publication in pamphlet form.

The committee decided to publish three thousand copies, and to distribute them among the districts in the same proportion as is the assessment for the Conference collection. They thought this an equitable apportionment, as the minutes are to be paid for half from Conference collection and half from Missionary Society; besides, it approximates the ratio of membership about as nearly as it can be done.

This will make the pro rata of each district as follows, viz: To the Woodville district, 450 copies; Summit, 188; Seashore, 187; Brookhaven, 450; Jackson, 600; Vicksburg, 525; Brandon, 225; Meridian, 375.

The presiding elders can consult with their preachers, and have the minutes for each district sent to some convenient point by express; or, which is perhaps better, after determining what number each preacher on the district is entitled to, let him write to Dr. Redford, stating the number he wishes, giving his address, and let them be forwarded by mail.

C. G. ANDREWS.

DR. VANDYKE.—We take the following from one of our exchanges:

"Rev. Dr. Vandyke, of Brooklyn, New York, has received a call to the Chestnut street Presbyterian church, Louisville. He had previously written a letter, stating that if a unanimous call were made upon him by the congregation he would entertain it favorably. His salary is to be $5,000 in gold."

The church referred to is the one of which Rev. Mr. McKee was pastor. It is in connection with the Northern Assembly, and the congregation is a large and interesting one.

Our readers will read with surprise that the Brooklyn pastor contemplates leaving the conspicuous and commanding position he is thought to occupy in order to accept a pastorate in an inland town. But, doubtless, there are sufficient reasons to justify the step.—Southwestern Presbyterian.

OUR COLORED BRETHREN.

In another part of this paper will be found an interesting account of the organization of the General Conference of the Colored Methodist Episcopal Church in America. We have only to say that all that was done at Jackson was done according to our mind. We can confidently implore the blessing of heaven upon this new development of American Methodism. We think our colored brethren acted wisely in reverting to the original name of the church—with the simple prefix "Colored"—thus identifying their organization with that which Wesley founded by Bishops Coke and Asbury in 1784. We send them forth with our blessing, sympathy and devout wishes for their prosperity. We are prepared to turn over to them all the church property which we have set apart for their use, and the General Conference ordered local boards of trustees to be organized for its reception. Judge Milton Brown, who is greatly interested in this movement, advises that every Annual Conference should be incorporated. This, we suppose, will be done. We have printed for them Bishops', elders' and deacons' credentials. The Discipline adapted to the new organization is soon to be published by their agent, together with such other works as they need. Bishop Miles has made us a visit. He preached in Nashville on New Year's day. The credentials of his ordination as Bishop read as follows:

"Know all men by these presents, that we, Robert Paine and Holland N. McTyeire, Bishops of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, acting under a special provision of the General Conference of said church, at its sessions in New Orleans, Louisiana, April, 1866, and in Memphis, Tennessee, May, 1870, and under the protection of almighty God, and with a single eye to his glory, by the imposition of our hands and prayer—being assisted by the elders present—have this day set apart William Henry Miles for the office of Bishop in the Colored Methodist Episcopal Church in America, a man who, in the judgment of the General Conference of said church, is well qualified for that office, and he is hereby recommended to all whom it may concern, to exercise the functions of said office, according to the Discipline of said church, so long as his spirit and practice be such as become the gospel of Christ, and he continueth to hold fast the form of sound words, according to the established doctrines of the gospel.

"In testimony whereof, we have hereunto set our hands and seals, this twenty-first day of December, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and seventy.

ROBERT PAINE.
H. N. McTYEIRE."

Nashville Christian Advocate.

DR. W. A. SMITH.

The Richmond Christian Advocate says: We find the following in the St. Louis Advocate. The name of Dr. Smith and his labors in behalf of Central College give a rich but sad legacy to that institution. The life of one of the noblest men of this or any other age was the price of its endowment. Well may Missourians cherish his memory, and unite with us in erecting a monument to his noble toil in their behalf.

"The Virginia Conference, at its late session, took action appropriately in reference to the death of Dr. Smith. He had been for more than forty years a member of that Conference prior to his transfer to the St. Louis Conference four years ago. Rev. Dr. Granbery presented a very appropriate memoir, which was ordered to be spread upon the Conference journal.

"The Conference also resolved to erect a suitable monument over his grave, and Rev. Dr. J. E. Edwards and Asa Snyder were appointed a committee to raise funds for this purpose. In the absence of action of our Conferences upon the subject, we are not authorized to make any pledges, but do not hesitate to say that there are very many in Missouri who would unite in this fitting memorial tribute. Missouri Methodism is indebted to him inestimably, and knowing, as we do, the history, we are warranted in saying that our Central College owes its happy fortune to his interposition in its behalf at the critical juncture of the enterprise. There was at the time a new-born interest in it awakened, which might have passed away as an effervescence if it had not been crystallized into practical forms. There was before it an hour of auspicious opportunity; the occasion required a leader. A successful movement would be the foundation laid of Christian benefaction, which would be a present and a perpetual blessing to the Church and State. Upon the apprehension of these views Dr. Smith did not hesitate a moment to reverse a purpose considered by himself theretofore not open to review, and, without awaiting consultation even with his wife, he promptly decided to accept the presidency of the college and underake to raise an endowment of $100,000. It was done on the high ground of responsibility to God and devotion to the church, subordinating all selfish and personal considerations. The writer of this, with Bishop Marvin, in retiring from the interview, had a common sentiment. We had been in the presence of the morally sublime. Gigantic intellectual power had long towered before us, but this was the greatness of goodness.

"His enthusiastic ardor, what the energy of argument, what the pathos of his plea, even with tears—all are known throughout the extent of his laborious travels. He had carried the enterprise to a point which assured its consummation before physical prostration interrupted his labors. He filled with it in his mind and on his heart. This week's issue announces the completion of endowment. If he were alive this formal announcement would have been made over his honored name. In a higher association with it than in a mere formality, the name of Dr. Smith is inwrought into that of Central College the good genius of its fortunes. It is a nobler monument than the sculptured stone, and the last and one of the brightest of the inscriptions which compose the epitaph of a great and good man."

NEW PUBLICATIONS.

THE GREEK MAID AT THE COURT OF THE EMPEROR NERO. From the German. By L. C. Sheip. Philadelphia: Alfred Martin. 1871.

A 12mo of two hundred and thirteen pages, unique in its structure, and of captivating interest to the young, giving a most graphic view of Nero, and of ancient Roman society and customs.

ANNE'S BEACH PARTY. By Mary A. Dennison. Philadelphia: Alfred Martin. 1870.

A capital little book for a six-year old boy or girl. The story is well told, adapted to a child's understanding, and contains a good deal of religious instruction and application.

WE HAVE received "The Greek Maid" and "Anne's Beach Party" from the publishers, through R. L. Harp, of the Depository, 112 Camp street, New Orleans.

PUSS-CUT MEW AND OTHER STORIES FOR MY CHILDREN. By E. H. Knatchbull-Hugessen, M. P. New York: Harper & Brothers, publishers. 1871.

Here are over three hundred pages of stories for children, put up in the most beautiful binding, and containing eight most striking pictures. The book will prove an endless delight to young readers, and an invaluable repository of material for those who have occasion to entertain the little ones. For sale by G. Ellis & Brother, 82 Camp street, New Orleans.

MORNING AND EVENING EXERCISES. Selected from the published and unpublished writings of the Rev. Henry Ward Beecher. Edited by Lyman Abbott. New York: Harper & Brothers, publishers. 1871.

This volume is bound in muslin, and contains five hundred and sixty octavo pages. It is entirely compiled from Mr. Beecher's writings and talkings, and contains fair specimens of the eminent preacher's style and thought. As a book of devotional exercises we should infinitely prefer Mr. Jay's, or almost any other for that matter. We have received a copy of the work from G. Ellis & Brother, 82 Camp street, New Orleans.

FROM EYRICH, 130 Canal street, we have received a copy of "Fernyhurst Court; An Every-day Story." It is in paper cover, one hundred and three pages, published by J. B. Lippincott & Co., Philadelphia. We believe that the work first appeared in numbers in Good Words.

FROM GEORGE ELLIS & BROTHER, 82 Camp street, we have received "A Rent in a Cloud," by Charles Lever. It is published by T. B. Peterson & Brothers, Philadelphia. We know nothing of the character of the work. The author is widely known, and is a most prolific writer.

THE third number of the Methodist Miscellany, published at Covington, Kentucky, has reached us. Its appearance and contents improve with each issue, and the marks of careful editing are apparent. We observe that the publisher proposes, on certain conditions, to convert the Miscellany into a weekly paper, to be the organ of the Kentucky Conference. We wish the enterprise success, but the worthy publisher should count the cost with care.

THE NINETEENTH CENTURY.—The December number is on our table. The article defending "Round Dancing" is very weak, and not worthy of a place in the magazine. The article on "The Duty of Doubt" is suggestive, subtle, and not without a good deal of incisive vigor and acumen.

THE GALAXY, for January, 1871, has, as usual, several solid and instructive articles, besides the ordinary amount of "Drift Wood," "Scientific Miscellany," "Current Literature," "Memoranda," by Mark Twain, and "Nebuke," by the editor. We have read with much interest the article on "Louis Adolphe Thiers," by Justin McCarthy. "David, King of Israel," part 2, is a finished specimen of smooth and polished narrative, in which we have the events rendered from the simple Bible history.

GALVESTON GERMAN MISSION.

We attended last Sabbath a most interesting service in the German Methodist church in this city. Years ago this house had been thronged with worshipers, but for causes we need not name the society had been broken up, and our German mission at this point had been abandoned. Bishop Marvin, at the late session of the Texas Conference, appointed Bro. Albright to the charge, and the work was reorganized on Sunday afternoon by the Bishop and missionary under the most cheering auspices. The Bishop preached one of those sermons full of deep, earnest thought, and alive with that divine unction which will live long in the lives of his hearers. The congregation, both American and German, felt that they were listening to the gospel. Bro. Albright then spoke both in German and English. We understood more of the latter, but we felt a great deal of the former. He then proceeded to reorganize the church, and we all felt really as glad as he did when twelve responded. That is the apostolic number: we hope it will soon swell to hundreds. As many more will join next Sunday. Bro. Albright is hard at work, and his faithful visits and earnest prayers in the homes of the people will do more than win for him a warm place in their hearts—it will win precious souls to the cross of Christ.

We secured an invitation from the missionary to come to his church as often as possible, and shall avail ourselves of his kindness. There is a heartiness about the religion of our German Methodist brethren which makes us feel at home among them. We cannot understand as much as we would like, but the tearful eye, the beaming smile, the hearty response can be easily interpreted by any one who loves the cause of Christ.

Another good result of the service was the cordial feeling that was called forth toward the German work from the American brethren present. This is just as it should be. Let the missionary and his members feel that they have the sympathy of the entire church.—Galveston Christian Advocate, January 5.

DEATH OF MRS. SALLIE D. DUNCAN. This excellent Christian woman, wife of Rev. Dr. Duncan, president of Randolph Macon College, died on Friday, the twenty-third of December. She had been sick, with brief intervals of improvement, for eight months. All that time her strong religious character was shown in its completeness. Faith, hope, charity, grew stronger and purer in her heart as it beat more and more feebly. All that love could suggest or medical skill devise failed to stop the destroyer. By unremitting watchfulness, and the tenderest and most careful nursing, a few months were added to her life. But nature, worn and wearied, could stand the fight no longer, and just before the natal morn of Christ was ushered in she went up to greet him in heaven. Gently, as when a tired child falls asleep on its mother's breast, her mortal life ceased.

This announcement, though not unlooked for, will carry sorrow to all that knew Mrs. Duncan. Her friends are numbered by hundreds, and she was worthy of them by reason of her generous nature, her warm heart, her amiable temper, her cheerful disposition, her sympathy with the suffering, and her sincere, unobtrusive piety. A cloud rests upon her household, but it has a silver lining. The loss of her family is great, but her gain is heaven.

Appropriate funeral services were held on Monday, the twenty-sixth of December, in the college chapel, conducted by Rev. John C. Granberry and Rev. L. M. Lee. At the conclusion of the services the remains were brought to this city and buried in the Hollywood cemetery. Richmond Christian Advocate.

TENDENCY OF GRAPE CULTURE.—The people in the grape-growing and wine-making districts of central New York are protesting through the local press against the establishment of more wine-cellars. In the town of Naples, which is situated in the center of one of the most favored grape regions in the State, it is said that one man has drank within the past year twenty barrels of wine, and would have consumed more had he been able to get it. It is estimated by Prof. Baird that the native wines are one-eighth part alcohol. This estimate would make it appear that this lover of pure native wine, which is so often called harmless, has consumed considerably more than a hogshead of alcohol within the year. Modifying the estimate so that the supposed alcohol shall contain only the strength of whisky, and we still find that this bibulous Neapolitan has drank the equivalent of about one quart of whisky for every day in the year.

TRIALS.—I believe that some Christians have more trials and afflictions than others, because there is more pride and stubbornness in them. The Lord will have these to be subdued, and suits his chastisements with great and unerring wisdom to the occasion. If believers thought of this aright, they would not be so much in care to get rid of the visitation as to have the design of it answered within them.—Serle.

TRIBUTE OF RESPECT TO MY MOTHER.

NANCY RUTLAND, distinguished for her piety, daughter of James and Nancy Sessoms, was born in the fall of 1808, in Humphreys county, middle Tennessee, and was converted and joined the Baptist Church in her fourteenth year; was raised up in this belief, but afterward joined the Methodist Episcopal Church South, of which she lived a consistent member until her death.

She was married to George M. Kirk, of Hardeman county, Tennessee, August 10, 1826, where they lived till the winter of 1845, and then removed to Dallas county, Arkansas. She was the mother of eleven children, but was early bereaved of three. Being left a widow in 1848, with a family of eight children, among strangers, many and arduous were the duties she had to perform. To prevent being separated from any of her children, she removed to Biloxi, Mississippi, in 1859. Here she resided until the war compelled her to seek refuge for herself and family in the country. She was again thrown among strangers, and was bereaved of her oldest son, a promising young man, in 1863. Being homeless, her property sacrificed, she accepted an offer of marriage with John Rutland, of Lawrence county, Mississippi, where she spent the remainder of her days.

She was an invalid for two years before her death, being paralyzed in her left side, and was unable to walk for several months, during which time she often said: "I am ready to go. I will rejoice when I am relieved from my bodily afflictions."

Much could be said by the seven surviving children of the many virtues, the deep and ardent piety, which were the spring of all the actions of this Christian mother. But suffice it to say, her light shone brightest as it was going out. While struggling with the last enemy she was speechless for about an hour; a thick film obscured her eyes during the time. Then she revived; her eyes sparkled with unusual brilliancy, her tongue was loosed, and she talked beautifully about her future welfare, repeatedly saying:—"Bless the Lord, my pain has all left me now." Looking around upon her weeping friends, two daughters and a husband, she said: "Don't weep for me; there is no sorrow there." Her last words were: "Bless God!" Thus she expired, without a groan, in the arms of Jesus, and her sanctified spirit went home to God, who gave it, on the sixth of October, 1870. May our last end be like hers.

The Child's Corner.

COME TO ME.

Little children, come to Jesus;
Hear him saying, "Come to me!"
Blessed Jesus, who to save us
Shed his blood on Calvary!
Little souls were made to serve him,
All his holy law fulfill;
Little hearts were made to love him,
Little hands to do his will.

Little eyes to read the Bible,
Given from the heaven above;
Little ears to hear the story
Of the Saviour's wondrous love;
Little tongues to sing his praises,
Little feet to walk his ways;
Little bodies to be temples
Where the Holy Spirit stays!

There are little crowns in heaven,
There are little harps of gold;
There are little shining dresses,
There are gems and joys untold;
Jesus gave his blood to buy them;
He has bought enough for all.
Little children, come to Jesus,
He has love for great and small.

JAPANESE NURSERY TALES.

Human nature is very nearly the same all the world over, and no race has any characteristics for which the counterparts may not be found in other races. The Japanese, as rude and unpoetical as they seem to be, have their fairies, genii, peris and imps, answering to those of which our own juveniles hear such wonderful tales. Some of these stories are very ingenious, and would bear copying into the fairy lore of America, while others would be far from acceptable, owing to the great difference in customs or religion. I do not know that the subjoined tales, which were told by a Jap nurse to some European children at Hiago, are really part of the fairy literature of the country, or made up by her for the present amusement of the children. In either case the young ones were pleased, and when they repeated some of these stories to me, they were enthusiastic in praise of the old Japanese grandmother who had thus entertained them.

THE TURNIP PULLER.

Once there was a little Jap boy dressed in a nice suit of black linen, and he said to himself one day: "I will be a great Damio. I will have big swords and fine dress, and my father and mother shall be happy with plenty of rice and jewel rings."

But the little boy was poor, and he had but one suit of clothes. He was walking by the side of the Fusiyama one day, thinking how he should be great, when the mountain shook and great smoke-devils came out of the top. The boy was afraid, until a little fairy, awakened by the noise, rose up at his feet, and, taking him by the hand, led him away from the mountain. When the fairy was going the boy said:

"You know how to save me from the smoke-devils, and you must know how to make me a great Damio. Will you tell me?"

"Go and pull a turnip," said the fairy, as she took her way back to the sacred mountains.

So the boy looked about him for a garden, and when he found one he searched for a turnip. He soon got a fine one with tall leaves, and went to digging around its roots.

"No, no!" said the turnip, "my root is deep, and you cannot dig so low; but take hold of my head and pull, for my root will follow where my head goes."

So he laid hold of the top and pulled. Lo! it came so easy that the boy fell over in the mud.

"Ho, ho!" laughed the turnip; "you have something to learn if you would be a great Damio. Men, like turnips, pull easiest by the head; but you had better leave them alone where they have taken root than to overturn yourself in trying to pull them up."

The little boy took the advice, and made the acquaintance of leaders only. He was never, however, over anxious to be in the company of the great, and soon the Tycoon, seeing his great care and wisdom, made him a prince. So he had two big swords and plenty of rice.

THE DISOBEDIENT GIRL.

Once a little girl was told by her mother to make rice cakes. But she wanted to play shuttle-cock, and so she left the dough in the bowl. An imp, in the shape of a frog, came in; and when the girl was about to hit the cork a blow, he threw the dough into the air. It fell upon her head, and streamed down over her shoulders until she was all covered up.

Her mother came in, and, supposing it was all dough, threw her into the oven, and so the naughty girl was baked.

THE INDUSTRIOUS MAN.

One man worked in his rice and wheat fields, while his neighbors spent their time in wrestling, playing ball and drinking sacky.

Winter came, and they had nothing to eat. Then they went to the industrious man, and said: "Give us rice and bread."

But the other said: "No; you serve the spirit of amusement, and I serve the spirit of work. Go you to your spirit for food, and I will go to mine." So they all starved.

HOW TO CURE A BAD TEMPER.

"Well, if I have a bad temper, how can I help it! A little thing puts me out, and then I am sure to be very angry." Such were the words of a little boy named Fred Smith. And as he spoke them a frown rested on his face.

A lady, who was on a visit at the house of Fred's father, heard these words. The few days she had been in the family had brought to her notice the bad conduct of the little boy. As she had been much grieved about it, she felt it was her duty to speak to him on the subject.

One evening they were together in the library. Soon she began to talk to him about the folly and sin of allowing his angry temper to overcome him. "Try to cure it, Fred," said she, "for it must make you unhappy in your own mind, as it makes you unlovely in the eyes of your friends. Consider, too, how wicked it is in the sight of God. If you would see how such conduct appears, and what it leads to, read the story of Cain in Genesis iv, 3-15, and then turn to Matthew v, 21-24, and hear what our Lord says of anger."

"I will try to cure my bad temper—that I am resolved," said Fred; but he made the resolve in his own strength. The next day showed him how weak he was in himself; for only a slight affront he flew into a passion with his cousin Charles, who got before him in class; he scolded his sister Mary, who had by accident broken the tail of his kite; and he burst into a fit of anger when he stumbled over the yard dog as it lay basking in the sunshine.

A few weeks after the lady had left, he sat down and wrote her a letter, in which he said:

"To-day is my birth-day, and I mean to turn over a new leaf, as father calls it. I have quite made up my mind to attend to what you told me. I will never more be angry. I will always fight against my naughty temper. It makes me very unhappy, and my parents too. And you said that it offends the holy God."

Now this was quite right, but then Fred had forgotten to pray. He had again resolved in his own strength to fight against his temper. He had not asked to be forgiven his past sins, nor sought help from God to overcome his evil passions.

The kind lady to whom he wrote sent a reply, in which were these words:

"I am glad to hear that you have made up your mind boldly to resist all bad temper. This is as it should be; but we can do nothing without the help of the Holy Spirit, nor can we hope to be pardoned except we believe in our Lord Jesus Christ. The Apostle Paul felt that he could do all things if Christ gave him strength; and we know what he overcame and what he did through the grace of his Saviour. Do not forget, then, to seek of God for that help you need. If you seek it, you shall find it."

Fred did indeed pray, and God heard his prayer. From that time he began to "watch and pray." He then fought with success, and became known among all his friends as "little Fred, the kind-tempered boy."

So let us all watch against whatever may lead us into evil or awaken bad tempers within us. Let us watch against the first risings of passion in our hearts, and watch unto prayer. Whilst we pray that we enter not into temptation, we must "avoid it, pass not by it, and pass away." (Prov. iv, 15.) And if we are at any time overcome by an evil heart leading us astray, let us truly repent of our sin, and ask for more grace for the time to come, while we look to faith in Jesus, that, for his sake, we may be forgiven.

When, for some little insult given,
My angry passions rise,
I'll think how Jesus came from heaven
And bore his injuries.

When upon the cross he bled,
With all his foes in view,
"Father, forgive them," 'twas he said;
"They know not what they do."

What moments, hours, days of exquisite felicity must Christ, our Redeemer, have had, though it has become too customary to place him before us only in the attitude of pain and sorrow! Why should he be always crowned with thorns, bleeding with wounds, weeping over the world he was appointed to heal, to save, to reconcile with God? The radiant head of Christ in Raphael's Transfiguration should rather be our ideal of him who came to bind up the broken-hearted, to preach the acceptable year of the Lord.—Mrs. Jameson.

A HARD WAY.—The sinner has a hard way. It is not so easy as some imagine. "He who follows the world, as much as he who follows Christ, must take up his cross; and assuredly it will prove a more oppressive burden. Vice allows all our passions to range uncontrolled, and where each claims to be superior it is impossible to gratify all. The predominant desire can only be indulged at the expense of its rival."

The Farm and Garden.

How Clover Fertilizes and How Plaster Acts.

We publish below the opinion, derived from practical experience, on this important subject, of Mr. Geddes, one of the most skillful and successful farmers in New York. The article will richly repay perusal.

I had not intended to say more on this subject, but the reading of Dr. Boyd's article in the Weekly Tribune, of the sixteenth, impels me to remark that he is entirely correct in saying: "Such is the constitution of the human mind that we only, as it were, believe that a phenomenon in nature exists until we know the reason for its existence." I have been so long trying, by experiments, to determine whether clover really added to the fertility of the soil that produced it, or whether the clover plant was all the while exhausting the subsoil, and merely lifting the fertilizing qualities that there might be in the subsoil to the surface by its long tap-roots, that I had to some degree lost sight of the great truth embraced in the quotation I have made from Mr. Boyd's last article. I thank him for calling attention to it.

My experimental field, that has now had the crops of seventy years of grass and grain taken off it, during which time it has been under the cultivation of my father, myself and my son, having for all that time received no manure except clover seed and plaster, and has constantly improved in fertility, I suppose to be the most perfect practical test to which this question has ever been subjected. During the last thirty years this field has been visited by men eminent as writers upon agricultural science. All of them have said that in time I would impoverish the soil by my manner of treating it. Prof. James F. W. Johnson, twenty years since, while visiting this country, examined this field, and said that "such severe—what we should call scourging—treatment may be continued a great many years with apparent impunity, although it tells very soon on land of inferior quality. But even on this land it tells at last."—Johnson's Notes on North America, vol. 1, page 172.

"Determined, as I have been, if life lasted long enough, to test the truth of these theories of scientific men, we have drawn our barnyard manure, at some inconvenience, to fields lying beyond it, and have depended for this one field entirely on clover and plaster, with the result I have stated, not entirely free from lingering fears that the book men might be right after all—"that it would tell in time."

Prof. Voelcker, so far as I know, was the first man who had any reputation for scientific knowledge, who attempted to grapple with the question, and who could be persuaded to admit the possibility of clover adding to the productiveness of the soil on which it grew by fertilizing matters drawn from the atmosphere. I hailed his lecture on this subject with a gratification I will not try to express. He may not have hit on the true explanation of the way in which clover fertilizes the soil. Mr. Boyd's may be the better theory—I cannot decide between two such able men in regard to a question in science—but I do congratulate the farmers upon the fact that such men are thinking and reasoning in regard to this matter, and these are not the only thinkers who are now employing themselves in this investigation.—Southern Farm and Home.

PRICKLY PEAR HEDGES.—Although the majority of our readers will not be able to use the prickly pear for hedging purposes on their farms, we have enough readers in lower latitudes to justify us in printing some account of these hedges, of which the Rural Carolinian lately published an elaborate description. This species of cactus is indigenous in Texas and Mexico, but grows readily all over the Southern States. Its lobes are about eight inches wide and twelve long. The method of propagating is extremely simple. The ground has simply to be thrown up so as to prevent water standing on it. Upon this heap the lobes are laid with enough earth scattered over them to prevent their being blown away by the wind. April or July are the most favorable months for planting. The only condition necessary is that the ground where the lobes are laid shall be clear of grass and weeds. The hedge will be strong enough in three years to stand alone and form a barrier impassable by large or small animals. With a little cutting it can be kept in any desired shape, and the cuttings can be used for propagation or simply thrown in the line of the hedge, where they may grow or not, as the case may be. As the cactus is to a great extent an air-plant, it draws comparatively little richness from the soil, which is of course an advantage to the neighboring crops. In the spring and early summer the hedge is covered with bright yellow blossoms, and in the autumn and winter it is loaded with a magenta-colored fruit, which may be eaten by those who like it, and, which is excellent food for poultry of all kinds. The color of the pulp of this fruit is cochineal, and is used as a dye, while, if pressed and properly treated, it may be made into sirup, like sorghum, or into vinegar. Surely, if this plant possesses all these virtues, it deserves a better character than it has hitherto borne. A smaller variety of the prickly pear is found in many parts of the Northern States, but it is hardly available for any useful purpose.—Church Union.

LIME AROUND APPLE TREES.—We have known some farmers make it a regular practice for a succession of years to throw caustic lime around their apple trees in the spring and summer. We once noticed that a tree standing in the immediate vicinity of our dwelling had all at once put forth with renewed energy, and we were at a loss for some time to define the cause. On examination we found that a quantity of lime, which had accidentally been spilled, and rendered worthless by becoming mixed with the refuse on the stable floor, had been thrown at the foot and around the tree, and to this, as the principal cause, we immediately accredited the revivescence and renewed fructification of the tree.

Taking the hint from the incident, we purchased twelve casks of lime, and applied half a bushel to each of the trees in our orchard, and found that it produced immediate beneficial effects. Not the health of the tree only, but the quality of the fruit also was greatly improved. This application will be especially beneficial in soils where there is a redundancy of vegetable matter. We would advise our farmers in some places, especially in new forest lands recently cleared, and on low lands, to make a trial of this experiment, and see whether it is not deserving of the high recommendation it secures.—Rural World.

BE FAITHFUL AT HOME.—We have met with Sabbath school teachers who have studied hard on Saturdays to prepare for their class, and who have urged the young people to come to the marriage feast and partake of the heavenly food, but alas! their own children, for whom they are responsible, are left to the care of others, and no kind words are spoken to them about Jesus. Whilst the father is keeping the garden of others, his own garden lies neglected, and his children grow up in sin and shame, and bring his gray hairs with sorrow to the grave.

This sin, I greatly fear, is universal, and parents neglect to educate their children themselves, allowing them to grow up in ignorance of the gospel, or leave them to the compassion of others. It is a heavenly sight to behold the head of a family gathering his children around him in the silence of the evening, interesting them in Bible truths and Bible history, and thus educating them for heaven.

Christian father, Christian mother, have you dealt personally with your children, and spoken to them of Christ? If not, begin now! Remember the promise: "Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shalt be saved, and thy house."—Rev. G. C. Needham.

METHODISTS IN THE SCHOOL BOARD, LONDON.—One of the most noteworthy recent events is the election of a Metropolitan School Board, whose work will be to supervise the whole school system of that great city. The new education act provides for the appointment of a board of forty-nine members. There were one hundred and fifty candidates put in nomination, ten of whom were Methodists whose names are widely known. Seven of these were elected, namely: Sir Francis Lycett, Rev. Dr. Rigg, Alexander McArthur, Esq., and Messrs. Ingle, Kiell, Pearce and Smithers. The Watchman states that of the three gentlemen who were not elected, one failed chiefly through the numerical inferiority of the Methodists resident in the city, while the rival candidates were supported by an intensely denominational combination. The other two suffered from the sudden furor which seized a certain class of electors in two of the districts to give cumulative votes in favor of the ladies, who polled more votes than any other candidates.

WE LIVE in a wonderful age, and all the events of history as they are accomplishing are giving us more and more confidence in the truth of God's word, and the power of Christ's gospel. Look over the countries of Europe and see how the word of God is making its way where once it was under the ban of tyranny and priestcraft.

THE mass of mankind refuse to do their own thinking, and therefore must be content to be ruled by the small fraction who think for them.

CHARACTER is the essence of destiny, and habits soon form and fix character.

THE ARROW TIE.

FOR BALING COTTON THE ARROW TIE is the most popular, being the best Cotton Tie in use.

Planters and Cotton Press men everywhere prefer it to all others.

THE ARROW TIE

was used to cover MORE THAN HALF THE CROP OF 1869, giving entire satisfaction.

The patentee and manufacturer of the celebrated ARROW TIE, J. J. McComb, formerly of New Orleans, now residing in Liverpool, having control of the best and most extensive Rolling Mills in Europe, is constantly importing large stocks of this popular Tie, manufactured of the very best quality of English iron, to meet the increasing demand for it throughout all the Cotton States.

Planters can buy or order the ARROW TIE of all dealers in Iron Ties, and of country merchants generally, at the lowest market price; and we respectfully solicit the patronage of Planters and Factors everywhere.

BRACES AND TRUSSES.—DR. JOHN G. BANGELL informs the medical profession and others that he has constantly on hand and for sale a complete assortment of BANGS' TRUSSES, Spinal and Shoulder Braces, and other appliances for the prevention, relief and cure of general debility, vocal weakness and derangements of public speakers and singers, palpitation of the heart, bronchitis and weakness of the lungs, spinal weakness and deformity, dyspepsia and nervous affections, constipation and chronic diarrhea, female derangements and extreme displacements of the womb, RUPTURE, PILES, prolapsus ani, and weakness of the male and female system.

These light, cool and springy auxiliaries are the special favorites of the profession, are intensely common-sense and rational in their action; supply a missing link in treatment; place the above affections in a new and more hopeful light, and often complete cures where medicine can only mitigate, and more than it can cure a hernia or a dislocated joint.

He specially desires an examination of these appliances by the profession and sufferers. Where necessary the professional application of the above braces will be under our supervision or that of the family physician.

These valuable appliances are sanctioned by a large number of the medical profession in the United States and Europe as the best adapted to fulfill the purpose for which they are intended, and the Trusses and Braces are adopted by the United States government for the use of the army and navy. THE BOTTOMS HORSE POWER GIN GEAR.

This Power is now put up in three different forms—stationary, movable and mounted on wheels—all having the same motion and capacity, differing only in peculiar movements and arrangements, all of which are covered by patents and caveats. Models and Patents of the same may be seen by all interested by calling on me at the St. Charles Hotel; and to any one desiring to enter, with a small capital, a new business, which will yield a sure fortune, I will give undoubted and unparalleled inducements, if immediate application is made.

HOME WORK FOR MOTHERS.

Are thou a mother? Then in thee are given
Souls weighing more than all the stars of heaven.
Guard thou the treasure with a sleepless eye;
The Master watches from his throne on high.
Lose thou no suffering, count no toil a cross;
To lose thy jewels is eternal loss."

The parent that stays at home and takes care of the children is doing a work as boundless as God's heart. As when the time for seed-sowing is past, if the seed is not, sown no industry or regret can avail; so when a child has gone forth from under the parental care, if the work is not done, you cannot follow it or change it. Some alleviation there may be, and some after-refuge, but there can be no complete remedy. There is no way of compensating the neglect to sow the seed at the proper time. The seed-sowing time is when your children are at home, in your family; and if you are going to do anything for them, you must do it then. Then take heed. The time is flying. What you do for your children do quickly, or it will be too late. You may be taken from them, or if they are taken from you, thank God. Happy is that family that has cherubs in heaven. Blessed are they whose care and responsibility are ended because Christ hath taken their darling. Better teachers than you are, are angels. A better parent than you are, is God. And blessed are those of your children that have gone to be with him. But what is done for those that yet remain with you, must be done speedily. Your days are ages in their effect, and yet they are fugitive as the arrow that flies through the air.

It has been said of John Williams' mother: "Little did she imagine when her children were clustering around her knees, and listening to the words that fell from her lips, that she was training up one of the most influential missionaries of the cross, and that distant tribes and future generations would rise up and call her blessed." A very similar testimony may be borne to thousands of other godly parents.

"Sometimes mothers think it is hard to be shut up at home with the care of little children. But she that takes care of the little children takes care of great eternities. She that takes care of a little child takes care of an empire that knows no bounds and no dimensions."

"It on earth not toil in vain;
Cold, heat, and moist, and dry,
Shall foster and mature the grain
For garners in the sky."

—Author of "Angels of Gold."

SAVING PARENTS.—The great thing now is to make men know what wickedness is. The tables of the law want brightening up. The old lettering has been so often and so badly washed over with modern gilt that men can hardly make out the true reading. The age is intelligent enough, but its moral perceptions are woefully confused. Men lie, steal, commit adultery, commit murder without knowing it. Conscience scarcely stirs under a load of guilt which, if it were rightly felt, would wring from it a sweat of blood. But fashion has made it common, and sophistry has filed off its sharp edges, and it lies comfortable upon the poor soul which it is sinking into a gulf of perdition. There is no remedy for this but plain speaking. The finger of the preacher must be put upon the very sin. This which you call the course of law or the custom of trade, is stealing. This skillful evasion of the truth is lying. This defeating of the law of nature is murder. This invasion of your neighbor's domestic rights, though sanctioned by human law, is adultery. This use of the Lord's day for your own pleasure is Sabbath breaking. And not only should these things be plainly said, but they should be strongly proved. The commandment and its breach should be laid side by side, and the utter repugnancy of the principles upon which they severally move be demonstrated, so that none can sin in ignorance. Then when the conscience is torn and smitten with a sense of guilt, and the soul lies humbled in the dust before its God, the gospel will find place for its gentle ministries, and Christ be looked to, not "as a minister of sin," but as a Saviour from sin.

WE LIVE in the midst of blessings that we are utterly insensible to their greatness, and of the source from whence they flow. We speak of our civilization, our arts, our freedom, our laws, and forget how large a portion is due to Christianity. Blot Christianity out of the pages of man's history, and what would his story have been? what his civilization? Christianity is mixed up with our very being and our daily life; it is not a familiar object around us which does not wear a different look because the light of Christ's love is on it—not a law which does not owe its truth and gentleness to Christianity—not a custom which cannot be traced, in all its more healthful parts, to the gospel. —Park.

WOMEN IN THE MIDDLE AGES.—The early marriage ceremony among the Anglo-Saxons was of a very primitive character; it consisted merely of hand-fastening (hand festnung,) or taking each other by the hand, and pledging love and affection, in the presence of friends and relations. The bridegroom paid the father a sum of money, called a fæsten beag, or payment for nourishing. At a later period the early custom of espousals was reduced to a regular system, and the lover was required to give a wed, or security for the performance of his contract; hence our word wedding. Under the influence of Christianity the bride was allowed to have a voice in the contract before her tenth year; and the father had not to return the money paid by the lover. If the lady wished to refuse before the twelfth year, the father had to return the money or pay a fine. By this means a father could espouse his daughter to several lovers, obtaining their money, and persuading her to cancel the contract. The church soon saw the impropriety of this, and ordered a girl who had refused the husband provided for her, to retire into a convent. Rather a harsh measure! The clergy soon introduced more formalities into the marriage ceremony. The Anglo-Saxon bridegroom put a ring on the maiden's right hand at the espousals, which, at the marriage, was removed to her left, on the first finger. The father at the same time delivered the bride's shoe to the bridegroom; and the latter touched her on the head with it, to show his authority. The ceremony is still preserved now in the popular custom of throwing shoes after a newly married couple. It has been supposed that the gift of the shoe had its origin in that of placing the foot on the neck of the prisoner or slave. The morning after the marriage the husband presented the wife with a valuable present, called the morning gift; and in later times the amount was stipulated before the ceremony. At the close of the tenth century the Lady Wynflæd left an estate to a relation, which she states had been her morning gift. When Athelstan's sister, Eadgith, married Otho, Emperor of Germany, he gave her the city of Madgeburg as her morning gift. If a widow married within a year of her husband's death she forfeited everything she had received from him—the origin, doubtless, of our feeling that a widow ought to wait a year before marrying again.

THE RESPONSIBILITY OF PHYSICIANS. We were told only yesterday, on the very best authority, that the most popular physician in a New England city has gained his large practice very largely by becoming known as the liquor doctor. Intoxicating drinks in some form are almost certain to be a part of his prescription. The result is that many of his patients, including several ladies of high position, are on the high road to habitual drunkenness. How different from the practice of the eminent Dr. Rush. The Medical and Surgical Reporter states that long before the temperance reform became prominent in America, a missionary from the West Indies sought medical advice from the famous Dr. Rush, and when a very unpalatable medicine was prescribed the patient asked if he could not take a little "good old Jamaica" with it.

"No, sir," the doctor decidedly replied.

"Why, sir, what harm will it do?" demanded the West Indian.

"What harm will it do?" continued Dr. Rush; "I am determined no man shall rise on the day of judgment and say: 'Dr. Rush made me a drunkard!'"

If Dr. Rush feared to meet a throng of liquor-drinking patients in the day of judgment, what will be the condition of those doctors who prescribe spirituous liquors for almost every disease, or those nostrum makers who sell thousands of barrels of ardent spirits under the form of patent medicines; or of those religious editors whose papers advertise these mixtures far and wide, and thus lure thousands of the unwary to intemperance and perdition?

NO ONE can ever take in the meaning of Christ's life who does not feel the combination of these two seemingly discordant elements—a transcendent and rigorous ideal, with the utmost tenderness and helpfulness in assisting men to attain unto it. Not alone in the great sacrificial act did Christ bear our sins, but every day and hour, along the series of ages, on him is cast the burden of men. He is the helpful one!—Christian Union.

NOT AFRAID OF THE DARK.—A little boy, four years old, was returning home one winter's evening with his maid, who carried a lantern in her hand. The wind blew out the candle, and they were left in the dark. "Do not be afraid, Betty," said the little boy; "the great and good God takes care of us in the dark as well as in the light—by night as well as by day."

Guyot's Geographical Text-Books.

"Incomparably superior to anything published."—Louisville Journal.

Introduction to the Study of Geography.
Elementary Geography.
Intermediate Geography.
Common School Geography.

Guyot's System is approved and indorsed by the most distinguished literary and scientific men of our nation; such as Profs. Agassiz, Dana, Tenney, Henry and others, celebrated in science throughout Europe as well as at home.

The fact that ONE MILLION (1,000,000) copies of the works are in use in the schools of our country, at the present time, is proof of the unparalleled success attending the New System. For no other series of books ever published in America have ever secured so rapid and extensive introduction. They are the text-books in nearly all the colleges, seminaries, normal schools, etc., in the United States; in the public schools of the cities of New York, Brooklyn, Rochester, and most of the cities and towns of the Eastern States; Cincinnati, Cleveland, Columbus, Springfield, Toledo, Marietta, and most of the other important towns and cities, numbering nine thousand schools in Ohio, and hundreds of towns and cities in the other Western States, while in the Southern States and California they are being extensively adopted.

Believing that the publication of Professor Guyot's series has marked a new and better era in the presentation of geographical science, that by it the pupils of this generation will obtain a clearer, more definite and extended knowledge of the world on which they live, and that it is so systematized as to render that knowledge more valuable and permanent, we commend it to the attention of all interested in educational improvements and progress.

FLORENCE WESLEYAN UNIVERSITY,

FLORENCE, ALABAMA.

W. H. ANDERSON, D. D., PRESIDENT.

This institution of learning, so widely known through the South, will begin its next session on WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 14, 1870.

The Faculty is composed of men of experience and ability. The curriculum of studies is comprised in the Literary Department, Law Department, Department of Biblical Literature and Commercial Department. The advantages of this University are seen in its healthful and attractive location, thorough course of study, excellent discipline, the character and success of its instructors, and the reasonable rates at which board and tuition are furnished.

Licentiates in the ministry and sons of ministers in the regular work are admitted to recitation on paying the incidental fees.

EXPENSES PER SESSION OF FIVE MONTHS.

Tuition in the University classes	$30 00
Tuition in Grammar School	25 00
Tuition in Law Department	40 00
Incidental fee	2 00

Tuition and incidental fee required in advance.

Chemical fee, paid once	5 00

Boarding can be had in the best families at from $16 to $20 per month.

For particulars see circular, or apply to the president, Rev. Dr. Anderson, or to Hon. W. R. Wood. GEO. W. FOSTER, jy25 1y President Board of Trustees.

TUSKEGEE FEMALE COLLEGE,

TUSKEGEE, ALABAMA.

The Fifteenth Annual Session begins SEPTEMBER 15, 1870, and continues forty weeks; divided into two equal terms.

REV. GEO. W. F. PRICE, M. A., President.
REV. H. B. ROSS, M. A., Professor of Latin and Mathematics.
DR. S. M. BARTLETT, Director of Music, with Nine Assistants in the various departments of instruction and discipline.

The president calls particular attention to the fact that Rev. H. B. Ross, of the Alabama Conference, has accepted the professorship of Latin and Mathematics in the institution. Brother Ross is a graduate of Lagrange College, Alabama. He was professor of Mixed Mathematics in that institution for two years. Subsequently he was president of Talladega Female Institute. His classical education, his experience in the practical business of teaching, his acceptable career of itinerant service, his many excellent personal traits, all entitle him to the unlimited confidence of our people.

The College has just closed a most successful year. Its prospects were never more flattering. The present organization of the institution combines all the best features for securing the thorough instruction and efficient discipline of its pupils. The Faculty contains none but tried and trained teachers, whose success has been tested by years of service. The boarding arrangements are under the immediate control of the president, who resides in the building, and supervises the social recreations and the professional duties of the pupils. The health of the girls is in charge of an experienced matron. The table, kitchen and laundry are in care of a thoroughly trained housekeeper. Miss Shelby, of Talladega, is the governess, and brings to the office high social position, experience as a teacher, liberal education, and matured Christian character. The pupils are trained in gymnastic and calisthenic exercises, thereby developing their physical powers, strengthening their constitutions, and imparting grace and dignity to their movements. Religion is the basis of the system of education, and girls are taught that "the truth as it is in Jesus" is the highest attainable wisdom.

CHARGES FOR SCHOLASTIC YEAR OF FORTY WEEKS.

Tuition, according to grade, from $25 to	$60 00
Tuition in music	60 00
Tuition in art, from $20 to	40 00

WESLEYAN FEMALE INSTITUTE,

STAUNTON, VIRGINIA,

will begin its next session September 26, 1870, and close June 22, 1871.

REV. WILLIAM A. HARRIS, President.

With Thirteen Professors, Teachers, etc., etc.

Than this no College for Young Ladies ranks higher. System of teaching like that pursued in the University of Virginia. French is taught by a native master of the language. Professor in Department of Music has no superior in any school; among others, is assisted by the distinguished vocalist, Madam Bertha Ruhl. This is one of the healthiest climates in America, and young ladies who come here from the South with feeble constitutions are entirely restored to health. The grounds are large and beautiful; buildings stately and elegant, fanned by the purest breezes, overlooking the entire city, and commanding the most magnificent rural and mountain scenery for thirty miles along the beautiful Valley of Virginia, making it one of the most delightful college homes in the Union.

(From Judge John N. Hendren, M. A., University of Virginia.)

I regard the Wesleyan Female Institute in this place, under the management of Rev. William A. Harris, as one of the very best and most attractive schools in the State. * *

(From Hon. John B. Baldwin.

The Wesleyan Female Institute is surrounded by influences which make it in all respects a most desirable place for the care and education of the daughters of Christian parents.

(From Prof. William E. Peters, LL. D., University of Virginia.)

Young ladies committed to the care of Prof. Harris will enjoy advantages of an intellectual and moral training rarely found.

(From Rev. William E. Munsey, D. D.)

* * * From personal knowledge I believe that as the president of a female college Rev. William A. Harris has no superior; indeed within the purview of my acquaintance he has no equal.

(From Bishop E. M. Marvin, D. D.)

The Wesleyan Female Institute is an honor to the church. Instruction is thorough. All classes stand high. In music advantages are offered of a very high order. The most talented professors are employed, and neither pains nor expense are spared to make this department eminent. The school is very prosperous, and deserves to be so.

TERMS FOR THE ENTIRE SCHOLASTIC YEAR. Board and tuition in the Collegiate Course, $225. Music and other extra studies moderate.

Founded and supported by the State of Louisiana.

The ninth session, now in progress, will close last Wednesday in June, 1870. The next session will begin first Monday in September next, and will continue ten months.

The Academic Board consists of a full corps of able instructors in all branches of literature and science usually taught in the best Colleges and Universities.

The Course of Study embraces a Preparatory and an Academic Department, including a Literary, Scientific and Optional Course, a Special School of Civil Engineering and a Commercial School.

Library, Apparatus and Cabinets are well selected and valuable. The Geological and Mineralogical Cabinets, etc., the largest and most complete in the South, embracing the extensive collections of the late D. D. Wallis, of Mississippi, and the Cabinets of the Topographical, Geological and Botanical Survey of Louisiana.

Admission granted to cadets not under fifteen years of age, who know arithmetic, English grammar and geography.

Expenses of every kind, except clothing, for ten months, $200; $200 payable in advance, balance February 1; or by accepted draft, at eight per cent., for ninety days. Payments may be made through the Canal or Citizens' Bank.

Cadets received at any time during the session and charged from date of entrance.

Discipline, military, with daily drill. A battery of four guns will afford facilities for instruction in artillery. Uniform of cadet: Gray cloth, to be had at the Institution at a cost of $25 per suit.

VIRGINIA FEMALE INSTITUTE,

STAUNTON, VIRGINIA.

REV. R. H. PHILLIPS, M. A., Principal.

With Nineteen Assistants.

The Twenty-sixth annual session will open SEPTEMBER 11, 1870.

From over a thousand testimonials from Southern patrons we select the following, from General Robert E. Lee, president of Washington College; General Francis H. Smith, president of the Virginia Military Institute, and General W. N. Pendleton, Lexington, Virginia:

"We, the undersigned, have had daughters educated at the Virginia Female Institute, in Staunton, under the care of Rev. R. H. Phillips. They therefore know it to be an admirably conducted and superior institution for young ladies, and they cordially recommend it to favor, even beyond its past extensive patronage. R. E. LEE.
FRANCIS H. SMITH.
WM. N. PENDLETON.

LEXINGTON, VA., March 14, 1870."

For circulars, with full information, address Rev. R. H. PHILLIPS, Principal, or Rev. J. C. WHEAT, Vice Principal, Staunton, Virginia. jel1 3m

HOMER COLLEGE.

The scholastic exercises of the Fall Session of this College, located at Homer, Louisiana, under the care of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, will begin on the FIRST TUESDAY of September next.

FACULTY.

Rev. J. E. Cobb, President and Professor of Mental and Moral Science, Greek Language and Literature.

J. W. Nicholson, Professor of Pure and Mixed Mathematics, and Natural Science.

——, Professor of Civil Engineering.

A. C. Calhoun, A. B., Adjunct Professor of Languages and English Literature.

The Preparatory Department is under the care of all the Faculty.

TERMS PER SESSION OF FIVE MONTHS.

Tuition in Collegiate Department	$25 00
Preparatory studies	$15 00 and 20 00
Contingent fee	1 50

Board in private families, per month, $14. Board with room furnished, $15.

Total expenses for board and tuition will range from $85 to $105 per session, while the course of studies is as full and thorough as that of any college in the land.

Active measures have been taken for a full and permanent endowment.

For health and association it is believed that the location cannot be surpassed.

It is the aim of the Trustees to place Homer College in the front rank.

For further particulars address

STONEWALL INSTITUTE,

Thirteen Miles North of Selma, Ala.

This School for Boys opens its sixth annual session OCTOBER 3, 1870.

D. C. B. CONNERLY, Principal and Teacher of Languages.

JOHN P. SEABROOK, Teacher of Mathematics.

But few schools accomplish as much for its pupils as this does.

It is in the quiet country. Its teachers give instruction nine hours per day, including two at night.

The Institute belongs entirely to the Principal.

Two Hundred and Sixty Dollars will cover nine months' board, tuition and washing.

Transportation from Selma to the Institute on every Wednesday and Saturday in October to the twenty-second, free of charge.

Refer to Bishop J. C. Keener and John M. Bonner, Esq., New Orleans, Louisiana.

For further particulars apply to the proprietor, D. C. B. CONNERLY, au27 6t Near Selma, Ala.

ROANOKE COLLEGE, SALEM, VA.

Next Session Begins September 5.

This Institution has a full corps of instructors, a thorough course of studies, and aims at a high grade of scholarship. Its superior educational advantages, moderate expenses, healthy location, and excellent mail, traveling and telegraphic facilities, render it well worthy the attention and patronage of the South.

Expenses for session of ten months, about.....$210 00

This estimate includes board and tuition, embracing modern languages. A slight advance on the above for students boarding in private families.

jy16 3m President of the College.

TENNESSEE FEMALE COLLEGE,

FRANKLIN, TENNESSEE.

Fall Session for 1870 Begins Monday September 5.

The claims of this institution rest on the style, extent and thoroughness of the culture it bestows. The climate is favorable for study, the only magic that makes scholars.

It refers to its patrons, including distinguished educators and gentlemen eminent in the pulpit and in the professions.

Catalogues sent on application.

jy23 3m President

NEW ORLEANS MARKETS.

From the N. O. Price Current.

We have no material change to notice in the general market since our last review. Only a moderate business has been done in most branches of the wholesale trade. The movement in Western produce has been mainly confined to supplying the local and plantation demand, but, owing to the interruption to navigation in the river above Cairo, the receipts have been limited, and grain has advanced. Pork also, under orders from the West, has sold at fuller prices. Sugar and molasses have come forward freely, and met a fair demand for the better qualities, while the poorer descriptions have been dull and drooping.

COTTON.—The following are the arrivals since the sixth instant:

Louisiana and Mississippi	bales.	14,028
Lake		181
Arkansas		1,586
Mobile		1,245
Texas		271
Total		17,311

On Saturday, under the market decline reported at Liverpool, factors were compelled to give way ⅛c. in the medium grades, but the demand was quite active at the reduction, and the business embraced 9,000 bales, low middling closing at 13½ to 13⅞c., and middling at 14¼ to 14½c. On Monday buyers came forward with still more spirit, and took 11,350 bales, partly at previous rates, but mostly at an improvement of ⅛c. in good ordinary to middling, inclusive, low middling closing at 13⅝ to 14c., and middling at 14⅜ to 14⅝c., but with very little to be had toward the close at the inside figures. Prices were stiffened by the accounts from New York. On Tuesday the market opened under the stimulating influence of favorable dispatches from New York and Liverpool, and although factors raised their pretensions ⅛ to ¼c., the demand was active throughout the day, resulting in sales of 10,000 bales, at a general advance of ¼c. In some cases the improvement was still greater, especially in strict low middling, or a style approximating Liverpool middling, and in strict middling, which continued in scant supply and good request.

This makes an aggregate for the past three days of 30,350 bales.

The receipts at this port since the first of September (exclusive of the arrivals from Mobile, Florida and Texas) are 571,090 bales, against 506,543 bales to the same date last year, and the increase in the receipts at all the ports, up to the latest dates, as compared with last year, is 315,580 bales. In the exports from the United States to foreign countries, as compared with the same dates last year, there is an increase of 352,590 bales to Great Britain, 7,158 to other foreign ports, and a decrease of 128,816 to France.

Referring to our remarks above, we quote as follows:

Ordinary	12	to 12½
Good ordinary	13¼	to 13⅜
Low middling	13⅞	to 14⅛
Middling	14½	to 14⅝
Strict middling	15	to 15¼

SUGAR.—The market has been dull since our last review, and prices have ruled in favor of buyers. The supplies were disposed of, however, and about 2,000 hogsheads were sold on Saturday and Monday at 5¼ to 6½c. per pound for inferior, 6¾ to 7c. for common, 7¼ to 7¾c. for fair, 7⅞ to 8¼c. for good fair, 8¾ to 9c. for fully fair, 9½ to 10c. for prime to strictly prime, 7½ to 10c. for seconds and centrifugal, 10½ to 11c. for yellow clarified, and 11¼ to 13c. for white.

MOLASSES.—Choice is scarce. Good descriptions are in fair request, but the poor qualities are dull. Prices have ruled in favor of buyers. The supplies are mostly sold, however, embracing 5,000 barrels on Saturday and Monday at 21 to 35c. per gallon for inferior and centrifugal, and 40 to 45c. for common.

MONETARY.—Gold, 110⅝ to 110¾.

American silver half dollars, 108½ to 109, and Mexican dollars at 1¼ per cent. premium in gold.

The sales of warrants include $7,000 new State on Saturday at 70; and $10,000 same on Tuesday at 69, $600 do., old, at 77½, and $800 new Metropolitan Police at 97½. Dealers have bought new State at 69 to 70, now Metropolitan Police at 97, and asked 69½ to 71 for the former and 97½ for the latter.

City Treasury notes are quoted at 25 per cent. discount.

$3 WATCH!.....$3 WATCH!

THE GREAT EUROPEAN

Eureka Aluminum Gold Watch Co.

HAVE APPOINTED

L. V. DEFOREST & CO., JEWELERS,

40 and 42 Broadway, New York,

SOLE AGENTS FOR THE U. STATES,

and have authorized them to sell their great EUREKA ALUMINUM GOLD WATCHES for $3, and to warrant each and every one to keep correct time for one year. This Watch we guarantee to be the best and cheapest timekeeper that is now in use in any part of the globe. The works are in double cases, ladies' and Gent's size, and are beautifully chased. The cases are made of the metal now so widely known in Europe as Aluminum Gold. It has the exact color of gold, which it always retains; it will stand the test of the strongest acids; no one can tell it from gold only by weight, the Aluminum Gold being 1-10 lighter. The works are made by machinery, same as the well known American Watch. The Aluminum is a cheap metal, hence we can afford to sell the Watch for $3 and make a small profit. We pack the Watch safely in a small box and send it by mail to any part of the United States on receipt of $3.50—fifty cents for packing and postage. Address all orders to

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

Washington, Jan. 12.—House.—The Committee on Appropriations have been ordered to investigate the ...nerpening claims for postal services.

A bill was introduced incorporating the Shreveport and Upper Red River Navigation Company.

The Committee on Military Affairs have been ordered to investigate West Point affairs.

The House went into Committee of the Whole on appropriations.

The order publishing laws in newspapers was repealed.

Senate.—A memorial signed by one thousand women, headed by Mrs. General Sherman, against female suffrage, was presented.

The House joint resolution appropriating $250,000 for the improvement of the Lonisville and Portland canal, and $341,000 for the completion of Desmoines Rapids, was discussed. Mr. Chandler moved to refer it to the Committee on Commerce. Mr. Harlan said it was important that the appropriation for Desmoines Rapids be made at once; that if the embankment was not completed at once the spring freshets would wash it away. Mr. Sherman appealed to Mr. Chandler to let the bill pass. It was important that the appropriation for the Louisville and Portland canal should be made.

The bill was also advocated by Messrs. Morton, Howell, Kellogg and others.

Mr. Chandler said the river and harbor bill, with estimates for all these improvements, would be reported within four weeks, and this could take its chances with the rest.

After an extended discussion, the motion to refer was rejected. The bill passed and goes to the President for approval.

A commission to investigate claims for Indian depredations in Kansas and Nebraska has been authorized.

A bill relieving members of Congress from the importunity of office holders was discussed to adjournment.

Washington, Jan. 12.—Silas A. Friekland, of Nebraska, was nominated Governor of Utah Territory.

Bishop Simpson declines the Dominican commissionership.

Alexander H. Connor was confirmed as Governor of Idaho.

Nashville, Jan. 12.—Many persons in Tennessee, including judges of the Supreme Court, attorneys in United States courts, and several magistrates, have been indicted for holding office in violation of the fourteenth amendment. A bill is pending in the Tennessee Legislature providing counsel to defend them.

Cincinnati, Jan. 12.—The Ohio Legislature defeated the bill forbidding Bibles in the public schools by a vote of 75 to 14.

Cheyenne, Wyoming, Jan. 13.—A telegram from Fort Fetterman states that Red Cloud is there and wants the Great Father to send provisions to Fort Laramie for his tribe. He reports his people to be in a starving condition; he also reports that the Crow Indians stole sixty horses from them last week. The Crows also stole two hundred horses from the Cheyennes, but the latter recovered their stock after a fight, in which seven Crows and one Cheyenne were killed.

Cincinnati, Jan. 14.—The suit brought by a mulatto woman against Mrs. Ward, of Kentucky, charging her with being instrumental in kidnapping her from Ohio, in 1853, involving fifteen years' slavery, was to-day transferred to the United States Court.

Richmond, Jan. 14.—Woody Ruffin, colored, has been sentenced to be hung on the twenty-first of May, for killing one of the prison guards.

A verdict for $2,000 damages was given in the Circuit Court to-day against the Richmond and Danville Railroad for six hundred boxes of tobacco, which was destroyed at their depot in Danville by a band of straggling Confederates, two weeks before the surrender of the town.

New York, Jan. 16.—The Post says the following about the Nathan murder: By the very highest authority we are informed that a complete chain of evidence has been woven around a certain individual, and that there is no question of his guilt. The man is known and skilled detectives are tracking him, and although his present whereabouts are not positively known, the greatest confidence is felt that he will be apprehended within a few days. This has no connection with the statements of Chicago detectives.

Memphis, Jan. 17.—It is believed that fifty-eight lives were lost by the disaster of the steamer McGill. The bodies of the captain and clerk have not been recovered.

The little steamer Argus struck a snag at Batesville, Arkansas, yesterday, and sunk in deep water. No lives were lost. She had three hundred bales of cotton aboard.

The annual convention of the Buai Brith meets here on Sunday.

Boston, Jan. 17.—Mr. Henry Wilson was re-elected to the United States Senate from Massachusetts.

Washington, Jan. 18.—The indications are for a week's debate over the Southern outrage message. The communications as to the outrages in the South, to which Senators alluded in the debate to-day, and which were received from military commanders, antedate four or five years from this time. Few of them are of a recent date; those from Generals Sickles and Meade when they commanded in the South. It may be stated that the more recent communications are from the Governor of Florida and Governor Holden, in which the latter mentions as a fact, which will surprise many who do not know to the contrary, that Andrew Johnson is the head of the Ku-Klux.

Washington, Jan. 18.—In the House to-day Mr. Morey introduced, and had referred to the Committee on Commerce, a memorial from the New Orleans Chamber of Commerce, asking for a survey and aid to Fort St. Philip Ship Canal; also the claim of W. Jasper Blackburn, asking for additional pay as a member of the fortieth Congress, which was referred to the Committee on Reconstruction.

General Longstreet is here.

Washington, Jan. 18.—It is understood there will be three reports on the Georgia Senatorial question. The majority favor Hill and Miller, the minority Farrow and Whitely, and another report favors a new election.

FOREIGN.

Brussels, Jan. 10.—Intelligence from Paris confirms the report of bread riots in the city, and a collision between the mob and the military has taken place. Prussian shells, on the fifth, are said to have fired parts of the city, and an early capitulation is predicted.

Pesth, Jan. 11.—A majority of the Austro-Hungarian delegations sympathize with France, and a demonstration has been planned in favor of France and peace.

London, Jan. 11.—A colliery explosion has just occurred near Sheffield, by which twenty-six persons were killed.

London, Jan. 11.—Chunghow, the new Chinese embassador to Western powers, arrived at Alexandria, Egypt, on Tuesday, en route for France.

London, Jan. 11.—Paris advices of the eighth say shells are falling in Montmort, and persons have been killed in the church of Saint Sulpice.

Versailles, Jan. 11.—The bombardment of the Paris forts was vigorously kept up to-day, and batteries which had been pushed forward toward the city opened fire this morning. The barracks in Fort d'Issy are in ruins.

Brussels, Jan. 11.—Arras has been summoned to surrender.

Pas de Calais is overrun with Germans.

London, Jan. 12.—A letter from Berlin, tenth, says orders have been issued that French officers who escaped from places of confinement in Germany shall upon recaptnre be treated as convicts.

The Times' special from Berlin says Count Bismarck repudiates the article of the Versailles Moniteur on the subject of the defenses of England.

London, Jan. 12.—At the annual dinner of the Devon Chamber of Agriculture, last evening, Mr. Newton, ex-Lieutenant Governor Wayland, of Connecticut, and Mr. Fish, son of Hon. Hamilton Fish, Secretary of State of the United States, and other Americans, were present. Mr. Wayland, in a speech, repudiated the doctrine of General Butler's recent speech at Boston on the fishery and Alabama questions.

Havana, Jan. 14.—The steamer Hornet appeared off Punta Gniuchos, two miles from Puerto Delpadra, on Sunday. The gunboat Gumari sighted the Hornet and fired several shots at her. The Hornet immediately went to sea, chased by the Gumari.

The reported execution of Zena is untrue.

New York, Jan. 14.—A Herald special from Havana says that the schooner Wanderer, which brought a cargo of slaves to Savannah in 1859, was wrecked recently off the north coast of Cuba. The captain and crew were saved.

New York, Jan. 14.—A special to the Telegram, dated Lomans, January 10, says: The army of the Loire, the last hope of France, has been defeated in a bloody battle within seven miles of this city. The report of cannon was heard all day. The entire population of Lemans crowded housetops in the suburbs of the city and all thoroughfares, watching the progress of the fight anxiously. Although the people are accustomed to the roar of cannon, there never was seen such excitement. At nine o'clock in the morning the right wing of the French army, which was on the east of Lemans, was suddenly attacked by a vanguard of Prussians, which emerged from the woods on the extreme right of the French. Upon the alarm being given the advance of the French infantry wheeled into line, the artillery pushing forward through intervals made in the several ranks. The cavalry took positions upon the right and left wings. A more perfect line of battle could not have been formed by the French army. The artillery was well supplied with ammunition, and the infantry with one hundred rounds per man. Supply trains were conveniently posted near. The battle-field was a valley. The two armies occupied heights opposite each other.

The French line was semi-circular and extended twelve miles, overlooking the valley, which was covered by twelve inches of snow. On the opposite heights the Prussians held an almost similar position. Shortly after nine o'clock the Prussians began a furious cannonade from the woods near the extreme left, flanked by an immense force of cavalry, the woods concealing the position, where the troops were massed with the evident intention of turning Chanzy's right. The artillery fire continued on both sides until the ammunition of the Prussian artillery was almost exhausted, when the Prussians became furious and gave an order for the advance of the infantry, the French advancing with equal rapidity along the whole line to meet the Germans in a fair hand to hand musketry fight.

The Germans were cool and collected, and the French were behaving bravely, but near noon the Mobiles began to waver, and the French, no longer able to hold their position, began to retreat; meanwhile the dead and wounded were strewed on the ground; the fields were red with blood, and the carnage was fearful. Fifteen thousand French had fallen before five o'clock, when the French army was in full retreat. The number of troops actually engaged on each side was sixty thousand. General Chanzy is reported sick, but he is still in command, and it is expected another battle will occur to-morrow.

London, Jan. 15.—Paris newspapers furnish particulars of the bombardment. They unite in saying that a rain of projectiles—some weighing ninety-six killogrammes (unparalleled in the history of sieges)—is pouring into that portion of Paris lying between the Hotel Des Invalides and Odeon. The bombardment continues without interruption, and was so violent on the night of the eighth, between the church of Saint Sulpice and the Museum, that shells fell every two minutes. Hospitals, ambulances, schools, public libraries, the churches of Saint Sulpice, Harbonne and Val de Grace, and many private houses were struck.

Women were killed in the streets and in their beds, and infants were killed in their mothers' arms. A projectile which fell in the Rue Vaugirard killed four children and wounded five others. Unrivaled works of art in the Luxemburg Museum have been destroyed. The Hospital Val de Grace has suffered greatly, and wounded soldiers were killed in their beds. Paris is transformed into a battle-field, in which women show themselves as brave as men.

London, Jan. 16.—Jules Favre has addressed to the powers a circular, dated Paris, January 12, replying to Earl Granville's invitation to the French government to send a representative to the conference on the Eastern question. He points out that any settlement of the questions to be considered by the conference with France unrepresented would be void, and adds that he has been instructed by Minister Gambetta to proceed in person to London to attend the conference, but is unable to do so because the Prussians fire on flags of truce sent out from Paris.

It is true that Mr. Washburn, the American minister, is now authorized to promise Jules Favre a pass and safe conduct through the German lines. If it is received and the condition of Paris permits, he will proceed to London; but while the bombardment continues his departure is impossible. Meanwhile the defense of the city goes on with undiminished vigor.

London, Jan. 16.—Indirect intelligence from Paris to the morning of the thirteenth says that shelling continues with murderous consequence. The people do not urge capitulation, and cling to the chance of relief from the forts on the eastern side. All forts on that side of the city, including Nogent and Rothny, are telling with terrible effect on the Prussians. That part of the city is said to be crowded with people.

Versailles, Jan. 16.—General Worder was seriously attacked yesterday, by four French corps, south of Bodford. The battle lasted nine hours, and the attack was vigorously repelled at all points. The Germans lost two hundred.

The French to-day unmasked some batteries on the south side of Paris. Their fire was immediately encountered by German batteries and were quickly silenced. The Germans lost two officers and seventeen men.

London, Jan. 17, 12.30 P. M.—King William telegraphs to Queen Augusta: The number of prisoners captured in and since the battle of Lemans has increased to twenty thousand. Four locomotives and four hundred wagons are among the spoils.

London, Jan. 17.—A dispatch from Versailles, January 16, says the details of the pursuit of General Chanzy are coming to hand. On the thirteenth, when ten miles east of Lemans, the French were driven into a disorderly retreat, with a loss in the engagement of four hundred prisoners. Camp Contie was taken after the firing of a few shots, but large stores of material of war recently there had been carried off by the retreating French. Beaumont was occupied without any notable resistance, and there one thousand prisoners were taken.

London, Jan. 17.—I have the most unquestionable authority for stating that Bismarck is very seriously, and it is said fatally, ill. Discredit statements to the contrary, as energetic efforts are being made to conceal the fact. I am able to state positively the exact words used by Odo Russell, the English envoy at Versailles, last Saturday, which were as follows: "I have just left Bismarck, and I deeply regret to state my conviction that he has the mark of death on his countenance." No further particulars are given.

London, Jan. 17, 3 P. M.—A dispatch from Versailles announces that the French are removing their heavy guns from Forts d'Issy and Vanvers.

King William visits Prince Albrecht, who is sick at Chartres.

London, Jan. 17.—Earl Granville presides at the sittings of the conference, which are held at the foreign office. The rumors that the conference will adjourn after formal opening have received no confirmation.

Mexico, via Havana, Jan. 18.—The election feuds are becoming intensified. The entire press and numerous political clubs favor the re-election of Juarez.

Mexico, Jan. 11, via Havana, Jan. 18.—The wife of President Juarez was buried in the family vault in San Fernando.

The eruption of the Cebranco volcano destroyed several plantations, and the villages of Ahuer, Tasucallan, Ixlan and Java.

The Iuquerrero revolution is increasing. In an engagement with the insurgents the government troops were defeated and were compelled to retreat. Mejia will remain in the new cabinet. It is expected that the adherents of Porfirio Diaz will fuse with the partisans of Juarez.

That portion of President Grant's message which relates to Zona Libra is much commented on by the press generally, and against any measure, and suggests that every motive of prudence should prevent any difficulty with the United States.

Thomas Shillitoe, an English Quaker missionary, who made extensive tours of benevolence in Europe and America, said that he wished to become "like a cork on the mighty ocean of service," which his Master should require of him, "willing to be wafted hither and thither, as the Spirit of the Lord should blow upon him."

The first step from virtue is generally the first move to vice.

NEW PUBLICATIONS.

Adventures of a Young Naturalist. By Lucien Biart. Edited and adapted by Parker Gilmore. New York: Harper & Brothers, publishers, 1871. For sale by George Ellis & Brothers, 82 Camp street, New Orleans.

Nearly five hundred pages, with one hundred and seventeen illustrations, and making a thoroughly entertaining and instructive book. It is especially adapted to interest the young, and to furnish them with a large store of information concerning the wonders of the natural world. The adventures described occurred in Mexico, and abound in incident. The marvels of the Mexican forests are depicted in a graphic manner, and vivid scenes are portrayed by a skillful hand. It is one of the most useful and instructive books of the season for the young.

The Old and New, January, 1871. This elegant monthly begins the year with a number freighted with a richer literary cargo than usual. The general tone is not to our mind in either religion or politics, but we must concede to it great ability and the highest finish.

New Monthly Magazine, January, 1871.—W. P. Harrison, D. D., editor. Nashville, Tennessee: A. H. Redford, agent, Publishing House of the Methodist Episcopal Church South. Price, $3 per annum.

We were among those who doubted the expediency of attempting this publication at the time it was ordered by the General Conference. We feared that the patronage would not be such as to enable the editor and agent to make it a first-class magazine. The magazine literature of the day is exceedingly rich and varied, and anything in this line, to succeed, must be of a high order of merit. To put the New Monthly alongside of the best magazines, it is only necessary that we give it a wide circulation. Give the agent and editor the means, and we are sure they will make it the pride and delight of the church. Our preachers should canvass thoroughly, and endeavor to place a copy in every family. It comes in competition with no other church publications, and we think its circulation might be considerably extended beyond the limits of our own communion. The first number of the New Monthly is before us, neatly dressed, and opening with a likeness of Bishop Keener. The Bishop does not look in his blandest mood, but his friends will generally pronounce it a moderately good picture. We have not space to notice the entire table of contents. The editor's contributions are good, the Round Table especially is crisp, discriminating, literary and spicy. Dr. Pierce, on "The Ancient Tithe Law," puts the subject strongly, and delivers many pungent paragraphs on the duty of religious giving. For the rest let our readers order the magazine and judge for themselves. The following is the table of contents: The Rainbow, selected; Only for Awhile, by T. A. S. Adams; The Bridals of the Year, by M. A. G.; Address to the Mummy in Belzoni's Exhibition, selected; The Ancient Tithe Law—Was it a Statute of Limitation, or was it of Perpetual Obligation?—by L. Pierce, D. D., No. 1; "Going Alone: Patience—A Heart-Lesson; The Apocryphal New Testament, by the editor, first paper; The Burial of Moses; Lines written in Richmond Churchyard, Yorkshire, by Herbert Knowles; Modern Literature, by W. B. Hill No. 1; The Modern Raid upon the Book of Genesis, by the editor, first paper; The Day is Done, by H. W. Longfellow; The Earnest Minister, from an unpublished story; The Drama of King Saul's Life, by A. A. L., part 1; Wit and Wisdom of the Ancients, by the editor, No. 1; Folk Lore from many Lands, by the editor, first paper; Going to Sleep. Editor's Round Table: Words of Salutation; The Enchanted Land of Poesy; "Yesterday, To-day and Forever;" Demented English; Notes and Queries; Bishop John C. Keener; The Sunday School Revival; A Beautiful Map of Palestine; The Publishing House and its Agent; Enlarging the Borders; The First Number; Our Book Table; Our Correspondents; The Advocate Family; An Intelligent Bookseller; A Name that was a Household Word.

THE LATE ECLIPSE.

Popular observation of the eclipse was general in London, and elsewhere in England. The News says:

One feature of the eclipse was very interesting. The sun's face showed many small and seemingly very dark spots. As the moon, passing onward, disclosed these one after another, the following succession of appearances was presented. First it seemed as though a lunar mountain was being reared by some gigantic sublunarian force. As this seeming mountain grew to its full height one could recognize in it a marked difference of darkness as compared with the moon, and a somewhat ruddy aspect. It was indeed almost possible to persuade oneself that the seeming mountain was of the nature of those red prominences which, during total eclipses, seem to surround the moon "as garnets round a brooch of jet." Then the moon would detach itself from this appendage, and it was very noteworthy how plainly the moon's onward motion could be recognized while the small spot was still close by; but as the moon's distance gradually increased, the spot which had appeared a few moments before to be traveling away from the moon's edge seemed to come to rest—at least its gradual increase of distance from the moon could no longer be recognized.

Until the end of the eclipse, which occurred at about eighteen minutes to two, the sun, though occasionally clouded over, continued to be for the most part very satisfactorily visible.

The following is a report by Prof. Piazzi Smith, astronomer royal for Scotland, in reference to the eclipse, as witnessed at Edinburg:

"Royal Observatory, Edinburg, Dec. 22, 1870.—The weather was very unfavorable here for observing the solar eclipse of this day, clouds and occasionally falling snow preventing anything being seen at either the beginning, middle or end of the eclipse. Some temporary glimpses were caught at about twelve o'clock and half-past twelve, showing the phenomenon in progress very much as indicated by the nautical almanac, and the sun's disc seemed to be marked with many fine spots, but nothing was seen either long enough or clearly enough for any scientific observation to be made."

The following telegram has been received at the Nature office from Mr. Lockyer, in charge of the eclipse expedition to Sicily:

Catania, Dec. 20.—Arrangements somewhat altered in consequence of the accident to the Psyche. Catania is to be the headquarters, the Italian authorities affording every assistance. Observatories are to be set up in the garden of the Benedictine monastery. Strong party, under Prof. Roscoe, going up Etna. Other parties going to Augusta and Syracuse. Weather magnificent. All instruments saved uninjured. Preparations complete. The whole expedition loud in praise of the noble behavior of Commander Pellowes. The admiral is here from Malta, and the ship will be sailed: the weather holds good. The party will probably leave Sicily in an iron-clad on the twenty-eighth.

SATURDAY, JANUARY 21, 1871.

HYMN TO BE SUNG.

Bright as mid-night's wave-waves breaking,
Bright as lighthouse-lamps, o'er rock and brine,
To guide the wanderers on their way
To a safe Harbor, Lord, in thee.

Beacons on Time's dark Alps to blaze,
Steadfast beacon-fires, with steadfast rays,
To call the lost and erring right,
To guide the lingering to the light.

Beacons on every darksome way
To hold the gathering nations at bay,
Like sunbeams clear, to light the road
That leads to happiness and God.

Beacons o'er earth's battle-fields to flame,
Thy watch-fires shining through the gloom,
That friends and foes may see, at length,
Thine armies' numbers and their strength.

Beacons, sweet household fires, to cheer
Each human life from birth to bier,
With light, peace and comfort to impart,
To all hearts to every heart.

Beacons on God's eternal plains,
Led by the sacred roll of grace,
Each in his [illegible],
To earn before time, day and [illegible]

Organization of the General Conference of the Colored M. E. Church in America.

The General Conference of the colored Methodists, lately in connection with the Methodist Episcopal Church South, was organized in Jackson, Tennessee, December 16, 1870, Bishop Robert Paine in the chair. Most of the delegates having arrived, the day before (December 15) was observed by prayer, and other devotional services, preparatory to the organization; the roll was made out, and nominations for standing committees were prepared.

The Rev. James A. Heard, pastor of the church, in the spacious basement of which the Conference met, was requested to act as secretary, assisted by W. T. Boling and L. J. Scurlock.

Delegates, lay and clerical, were present from the following Annual Conferences: Tennessee, Kentucky, Mississippi, Alabama, Georgia, South Carolina, Arkansas and Texas.

Of those who had been requested by the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church South to attend and assist on this occasion, the following were present: Bishops Paine and McTyeire, Revs. A. L. P. Green, S. Watson and Thomas Taylor. Letters of excuse were received from Bishop Kavanaugh and Dr. Sehon.

The following report of the Committee on Organization was unanimously adopted:

"The Committee on Church Organization beg leave to report that they have had the subject under careful consideration, and they are unanimously of opinion that while we gratefully acknowledge the obligations we are under to the white brethren of the Methodist Episcopal Church South for what they have done for us, as a people (who by service to the country have brought them under reciprocal obligation;) yet the time has come in our history when we believe it will be for the glory of God and the best interests of the church which we represent, that we have a distinct and independent organization—this having been amply provided for by the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church South in April, 1866, resolving that, 'When two or more Annual Conferences shall be formed, let our Bishops advise and assist them in organizing a separate General Conference jurisdiction for themselves, if they so desire and the Bishops deem it expedient, in accordance with the doctrine and discipline of our church, and bearing the same relation to the General Conference as the Annual Conferences bear to each other.'

"Five Annual Conferences having been organized, the Bishops, in their address to the General Conference in 1870, said: 'It is our purpose, unless otherwise ordered by your body, to call a General Conference, to be holden next winter, for the purpose of organizing them into an entirely separate church, and thus enabling them to become their own guides and governors.'

"The General Conference at Memphis, in 1870, resolved that the action of the General Conference of 1866, in reference to the ultimate organization of the colored people of the Methodist Episcopal Church South into a separate church, was complete, and therefore no additional legislation was necessary to the end intended. They therefore appointed this, the sixteenth day of December, for the meeting of this General Conference. We therefore, as a committee from each of the eight Annual Conferences represented in this body, do unanimously desire, and we respectfully request, to be set off as above specified.

"Whereas, 'the Methodist Episcopal Church in America' was the name first given to the Methodist Church by its founder, Rev. John Wesley; and whereas, we are a part of that same church, never having seceded or separated from the church, but in the division of the church by the General Conference in 1844 we naturally belonged to the South, and have been in that division ever since, and now, as we belong to the colored race, we simply prefix our color to the name, and for ourselves adopt the name, as we are in fact a part of the original church, as old as any in America; therefore,

"Resolved, 1. That our name be the Colored Methodist Episcopal Church in America.

"Resolved, 2. That while we thus claim for ourselves an antiquity running as far back as any other branch of the Methodist family on this side of the Atlantic ocean; and while we claim for ourselves all that we concede to others of ecclesiastical and civil rights, we shall ever hold in grateful remembrance what the Methodist Episcopal Church South has done for us; we shall ever cherish the kindest feelings toward the Bishops and General Conference for giving to us all that they enjoy of religious privileges, the ordination of our deacons and elders; and at this Conference our Bishop or Bishops will be ordained by them to the highest office known in our church. No other colored organization has thus been established in the land. We most sincerely pray, earnestly desire and confidently believe that there will ever be the kindest feelings cherished toward the Methodist Episcopal Church South, and hope that our conduct will be such as to merit and receive the warmest sympathy and support of the church which acted so kindly toward us in aiding us in this our time of need.

"Resolved, 3. That we request the Bishops to organize our General Conference on the basis of the Discipline of the Methodist Episcopal Church South in its entire doctrine, discipline and economy, making only such verbal alterations and changes as may be necessary to conform it to our name and the peculiarities of our condition.

"Respectfully submitted.

"ISAAC H. ANDERSON, Ch'n."

Monday and Tuesday were spent in revising the Discipline, on the basis of which the Conference had been organized. It was read section by section before the whole body (different members reading, as selected by the chair,) and an opportunity given for amendments. Besides the name, the following are the changes made:

From the sentence (Discipline, page 72) which requires a register of members to be kept in every circuit, "distinguished between local elders, deacons and preachers, white persons, colored persons and Indians," the six words last quoted are struck out. They are all colored.

An animated discussion sprung up on the supernumerary relation. It was strenuously objected to as "a dodging-place from hard work." It was described as serving those members of Conference "who stayed in the cool shade, and pushing others out to run up and down the long rows of duty in the heat of the day." Surmises were indulged (with a stroke of merriment) at the expense of those who "would get sick when they oughtn't to, and nurse a lame leg, and make cotton through the year, and then come up to Conference and vote as big as anybody." At first the motion prevailed to strike out all provision for a supernumerary class; but the more conservative element rallied next day, the vote was reconsidered, and that section of the Discipline was restored. Miles, from Kentucky, turned the tide by a plain and strong speech. He said: "Our white brethren, by experience, had found that provision useful. It was an old law, and there must be a reason for it. A brother might be thrown from his horse, or be run down with the chills, and need a spell of rest, and then be as good as new. Shall we fling such away? You can't say he is old and worn clean out; and there's no sense in commanding him to do full work, for he can't do it. About the abuse of laziness, we must keep a sharp watch. No one can lay himself on the supernumerary list. If he is on it, the Annual Conference must put him there."

A pause was made on a question asked candidates for admission into full connection—"Are you resolved to devote yourself wholly to God and his work?" What does wholly mean? inquired a venerable member from West Tennessee. "Some of us," he said, "have to work in our shops and patches four, and five, and even six days in the week, and to preach on Sundays. Our people ain't able yet, and them that's able ain't got the will to bear all our support." The matter was canvassed freely, and all settled down on this conclusion: If a man works with his hands a part of the week, not to lay up treasure on earth, but in order to be able to preach the gospel, and serve the church the other part, he does not break this vow. He keeps it in the spirit, if not in the letter. Paul, making tents that he might preach to the half-Christian and stingy Corinthians, was quoted with effect.

Hallowed is toil if this the cause,
The meanest work divine.

The time of probation of a traveling preacher for deacon's orders was made one year; that of a traveling deacon for the office of elder, two years. "We must," said the members, "bring forward preachers to baptize and to perform the ceremony of marriage, for our people need these offices; but for the eldership, preachers can wait longer and make more preparation."

Their course of study has not yet been published.

The debate of the session arose on the section concerning local preachers, and upon these words of it: "Nor shall any one be licensed to preach without first being examined in the quarterly conference on the subject of doctrines and discipline, and giving satisfactory evidence of his knowledge of the ordinary branches of an English education."

The chair was inquired of as to how much education that covered.

Moved to strike out all after the word "discipline." This brought out the full strength of the body, pro and con. It was interesting to see how all the main points in the old controversy were touched. "Long time in even scale the battle hung," when another proposition was: To strike out all after the word "his," and insert instead, "ability to read the word of God." This compromise, not without opposition, was adopted.

Anderson—who has been a member of one of the Georgia constitutional conventions—warmly opposed the first motion. In his district there was a rush to become preachers. All the Lord's people felt called. The presiding elder could hardly keep them down. If they didn't look out, the new Bishops would be run over. Must put up the fence.

Marshall, of Kentucky, had learned to read while a slave; worked all day, and went to the house at night, and got the white folks and children to teach him; and couldn't our young men learn now, when they had all the day before them? Must do this in self-protection. Men who couldn't reach the standard of other colored churches would come to us and get ordination, and then slab off. He had known a case.

Philips, of Mississippi, warned them against high notions. He was for striking out all educational requirements. The Holy Ghost might talk to a man without grammar; and when the man told it to his fellow-man, with the help of that same Holy Ghost, it would be mighty to prevail, grammar or no grammar.

A speaker arose far back near the stove, and by his dignified appearance and graceful manner at once arrested attention. Some thought Elias Polk, of Nashville, had got into the Conference. (Elias was the body-servant of the late President Polk, and was voted in his day to be the politest gentleman of Washington city.) The speaker was black, and tastefully attired; his open face indicating intelligence and benevolence—the latter quality predominating. His voice was of South Carolina—that soft, rich brogue, peculiar to the low country. Richard Vanderhorst proceeded to address the Conference. A pacificator, and yet not lacking in positiveness. Circumlocutory in style, with a touch of the grandiose not unpleasing. By the indirections and curve-lines peculiar to the mental methods of his race, Vanderhorst got to the point, and made himself understood and felt. He was moderate, but decided for progress—not that kind that holds its own or goes back, nor yet for that which goes so fast as to get separated from the mass of his people. "Brethren," said he, "the providence of God seems to open the way for our race onward, and shall this honorable body drop down and give way, with all the world's eyes on us, after such a fashion as this? I trust it will never be said—no, never."

Slowly arose the patriarch of the body, Anderson Jackson, of Alabama—a remarkable man in many respects—silent, except on weighty occasions, grave, erect, attentive to everything said and done. He occupied a seat apart, and wore a high-peaked, pyramid-shaped woolen cap, woven in bright colors, and topped off with a flaring button-knot that a pasha might envy. Notwithstanding this grotesque feature, such is the native dignity, the sound sense and sterling moral worth of "Uncle Anderson," that it required only a few days abroad to give him what he enjoys beyond any man of his color at home—respect and influence. He squared himself and said:

"Sir and Brutherin': I have sot under the various speechifyings on this occasion, until it seems really I must let you all have a piece of my mind. Take care what you are agwine to do—take care, I tell you. It ain't for us, brutherin, to measure out a man by a book, and say who God shall call, and who he shan't. No, sir, never. T-a-k-e c-a-r-e. My father, sir, didn't know A from B, and yet by his preaching hundreds—yes, thousands — was converted. Scores of 'em in heaven now, white as well as black. That's so. You, sir, (appealing to Bishop McTyeire, in the chair,) can testify, presiding in our Conference last month, that one of the best and gloriousest reports that was fotch up, come from a preacher that can't read a letter in the book—Bro. Joe Durr is the very man, sir. And will you, brutherin', stop the mouth of all sich? Will you cut off their heads? T-a-k-e e-a-r-e. The Spirit teach a man, and he can tell a poor sinner how to repent, and pint out the road to heaven, don't mind of he can't read. These is facts. Meet 'em if you can. Yes, sir, these is f-a-c-t-s."

The cause of an educated ministry was in a bad way by the time Jackson finished his unctuous speech, driving it home with tremendous gesticulations. But Posey, of Georgia, and Stewart, and Crouch, and Bullard, of Tennessee, and Moses, of South Carolina, made good speeches on the other side, dexterously touching up the pride of race. Again, Miles, of Kentucky, made an end of controversy by one of his direct and broad-minded addresses. He said:

"The past must go for itself. We have new duties, and must get ready for them. What are you going to do with all those children that are at school? Having them taught to read, and then send men to preach to them who can't read? Shut up your schools to keep your congregation level with the pulpit, or raise your pulpit to keep it level with the congregation. Do one or t'other. Any man that has sense enough to preach, can learn to read, if he wants to, in six months. I was ashamed, a few Sundays ago, setting behind a preacher, who repeated it a dozen times, that Noah made an ark out of magnifice wood." (Laughter—the speaker well-nigh losing his gravity.)

It was interposed that it didn't matter whether he said gopher wood or magnifice—the people in this country knew as much about one as the other.

"Yes; but a man that makes that blunder can make any kind of a blunder, and we must stop it. Let these persons be exhorters—there is no such rule for exhorters; and that is their place. Say to them, when they apply for license to preach, Go back and learn to read; stay as you are till you learn to read. And this will stimulate them. Moreover, this rule, as I understand, don't bear on any who have already been licensed. It takes effect hereafter."

These last remarks carried relief, and the rule was adopted by a very large majority.

Chapter 10, on Support of Missions, was omitted entirely; and also Chapter 12, on Devises and Gifts.

They adopted Chapter 11, on Churches and Church Property, with a single and significant amendment. The Discipline says: "Let all of our churches be plain and decent, and with free seats, as far as practicable." It was moved to amend by adding: "And they shall, on no account, be used for political assemblages or purposes."

Anderson opposed this vehemently, on the ground, he said, that it was a reflection on their own race, as though they did not know how to treat all such applications when made. It was replied that it was best, in the beginning, to cut off all applications. On the final vote the Georgian stood alone in the negative. Next day he had got one more on his side. A reconsideration was granted, through courtesy, and on the final vote there were two in the negative.

"I came here," said a member from a distance, "just to get that plank in, and now I'm satisfied."

Dr. Watson's services in publishing the Christian Index were appreciated. It is an indispensable auxiliary. It is believed this organ will now be self-sustaining, and their strong and fast friend was requested to continue nominally its editor, and see it through. He, with their assistant editor and book agent, is to make satisfactory arrangements with Dr. Redford, at Nashville, for bringing out their Discipline, and hymn book, and catechisms, and also to print the Index.

On Wednesday, at ten o'clock, the order of the day was taken up—the election of two Bishops. Fervent song and prayer preceded. The balloting was conducted with admirable order. We give its results. First ballot—Stewart, 8; Miles, 27; Vanderhorst, 16; Churchill, 9; Crouch, 12; Newton, 2; Marshall, 2; Lane, 1; West, 1. Miles elected. Second ballot—Vanderhorst, 20; Crouch, 10; Stewart, 7; Churchill, 3. No election. Third ballot—Vanderhorst, 26; Crouch, 12; Churchill, 2. Vanderhorst elected.

For book agent: First ballot—Holsey, 17; Lane, 9; Stewart, 2; Scurlock, 12. No election. Second ballot—Holsey, 18; Scurlock, 20; Stewart, 2. No election. Third ballot—Scurlock, 23; Holsey, 16. Scurlock elected.

J. L. Scurlock, book agent and assistant editor, is about twenty-five years old, a lay delegate of the Tennessee Conference; is about two-thirds white; has been teaching school.

William Henry Miles is forty-one years old; born and reared in Kentucky; of yellow complexion; was a freedman before the war. He was licensed to preach by A. H. Redford, presiding elder.

Richard H. Vanderhorst was born in South Carolina, and is fifty-six years old—a pure specimen of a black man. His religious training and that of his parents was under the ancient regime of Charleston Methodism. The preaching of Dunwody and Capers, and later of Walker, Wightman, Mouzon and Evans, was their theological school. As a member of the Georgia Colored Conference, he was appointed the present year to Columbus, where he has seen service.

The two Bishops elect were consecrated to their office, according to our Ritual, by Bishops Paine and McTyeire, on Wednesday evening, in the Conference room. W. H. Miles was presented by E. West and D. Bullard; R. H. Vanderhorst, by W. P. Churchill and T. N. Stewart, the two presenters joining respectively in the laying on of hands.

These services concluded, Bishop Paine, in the chair, called forward Bishop Miles; Bishop McTyeire, at the same time, vacating his seat within the railing to Bishop Vanderhorst. Bishop Paine said:

The time has come for us to resign into your hands the presidency of this body, and the episcopal oversight of your people. And we now do it. Take this chair. Your people, by their voluntary suffrages, have called you, and I welcome you to it; and I pray God to bless and sustain you in all the duties of your office. Henceforth you are their spiritual guides and governors. May you lead them wisely and govern them well! Like Abraham and Lot, we part—but in peace and for peace. There is no strife between us—let there never be any. While our hearts are warm with love to God or man, we shall feel an interest, a peculiar interest, in your welfare. We have labored for you when they were few who cared for your souls. Our missionaries are buried on the rice and cotton and sugar plantations, who went preaching the gospel to your fathers and to you while slaves. Following the openings of Providence, when you became free you desired an independent organization. You thought this would be best for the religious interests of your race. We acquiesced and promised it, and for the last four years have been working to this consummation. We gathered you into quarterly conferences, Annual Conferences, and finally into a General Conference. Lastly, we have consecrated the men chosen by you, and presented to us, as Bishops, and have installed them. Have we not fulfilled our promises? (Voices, Yes, yes.) Have we not done all we said we would do? (Voices, All, God bless you!) We take leave of you with tenderness. God is our judge, we have unselfishly sought your good. We shall not obtrude our advice, but it will always give us pleasure to extend to you counsel and help, as you may desire, and opportunity may be given. Good by. (There was a general and profound emotion throughout the house during Bishop Paine's remarks.)

Bishop McTyeire: I congratulate you, Bishops and brethren, on having reached the point to which you have looked with desire, and we with hope, not unmixed with solicitude. My confidence has increased at every step; and the manner in which you have gone through this first General Conference confirms it. Yours is a great mission. The best religious interests of your race are identified with this movement. Pray for us, and God forbid that we should cease to pray for you and to labor. But what we do will be mainly through your church organization. Can a mother forget her children? We request our preachers and people everywhere to give you such assistance as you may desire, and they may be able—assistance in building churches, carrying on Sunday schools, and in education. But your dependence, under God, is on yourselves. You have near a hundred thousand members to begin with; for beside those already registered by you, we shall, wherever they wish it, pass over to you the colored membership that is on our rolls. Thousands that have gone off will return to you. They have been waiting for this. I say it, not to reproach any, but as a fact—you are the only colored church that has been peacefully set up. All others began in revolution or secession, which ill affected their temper, if not their regularity. This gives you an advantage for stability and order. We have dealt with you in no half measures. You have all that we have. Side by side let us work, mutually helping. The unity of the Spirit may be preserved under the two neighboring jurisdictions. Perhaps this is best for you and best for us; and thus we both can do more for ourselves and more for each other. And now, brethren, I commend you to God, and to the word of his grace, which is able to build you up, and to give you an inheritance among all them which are sanctified. The ship has been launched, and we feel like pilots who have seen it safely across the bar into deep water, and resigned the helm into your hands. There, in the Bible and Discipline, is the chart and compass. Yours is exactly on the model of the Old Ship. See that you sail as nearly on her track as you can. And may your God and our God give a prosperous voyage!

Bishop Miles: I have this to say, the promises and vows I have just taken, I will carry out to the best of my ability. I ask your prayers.

Bishop Vanderhorst: Brothers, say not good by; that is a hard word. Say it not. We love you and thank you for all you have done for us. But you must not leave us—never.

Dr. Green: This is a solemn hour. We all feel it. When that chair was vacated, then we cut loose from the work of a hundred years. You've got the right name. I like everything you have done here, even down to the last. I said if I was a Bishop I would have no hesitation in laying hands on the heads of those men. My heart is glad to see you start off so well. You are not a poor, runaway, cast-off church. No, you have Bishops, elders, deacons, local preachers, exhorters, stewards, class leaders, Sunday schools and members—a heap of them. You have a start for a Book Concern; for you have a paper, and you'll have your hymn book and Discipline and catechisms, with your own imprint, right away. And then you've got meeting houses all over the land, to the amount of several hundred thousand dollars. They are yours. We have held them for you until you got ready to hold them for yourselves, and now, by the order of our General Conference, our trustees will turn them over to you. You are well to do, setting up your housekeeping. You have no enemies but the devil and mean white folks, and black ones. Everybody in this country, that is any account, is your friend, and wishes you well. Upon top of all that, and better, I do believe you'll have the blessing of God Almighty, without which nothing can prosper. Go ahead! Amen.

Dr. Watson thanked the Conference for their complimentary notice of his service. It had been a pleasure to him, and he would endeavor to carry out the requests made of him in setting forth their publishing interests. Four thousand copies of the Index would be printed, containing a journal of this session.

After votes of thanks to the presiding officers and secretaries, and to the church for the use of the house, and to hospitable citizens and to railroads that had granted delegates the usual courtesies, the Conference adjourned sine die. The next is to meet in Augusta, Georgia, on the first Wednesday in July, 1874.

The doxology was sung, and Bishop Paine, by request of the chair, came forward and pronounced the benediction.—Nashville Christian Advocate.

THE INVITATION SOCIETY.—Some years ago a gentleman residing in one of our cities was deeply impressed and grieved by seeing multitudes who neglected public worship; and he determined to make the effort to induce some of the Sabbath-breakers to frequent the house of God. It required some little effort at first, but he overcame his timidity. The Lord's day evening he went forth with his holy purpose, and meeting a young man who did not appear to be on his way to a place of worship, he respectfully addressed him, got into conversation with him, and persuaded the stranger to accompany him to worship, and, as an inducement, offered him a seat in his own pew. Succeeding in this case, he was emboldened and encouraged to proceed in the line of Christian activity and usefulness. And now, mark with what a blessed result. He was the means of leading one hundred young men to become stated attendants at the sanctuary, many of whom have been truly converted to God.

A minister of the gospel mentioned this at one of his prayer meetings, when the idea was caught up by some persons present, who at once said: "How admirable a plan this is for doing." A little association was immediately formed, called "The Invitation Society." In sixteen months two hundred persons were persuaded by eight or ten of its agents no longer to forsake the assembling of themselves together in the house of prayer. One of these agents, an earnest Christian in humble life, devoted himself to this work, and was the means of bringing forty to hear the word of life.—Rev. J. A. Adams.

NOT AFRAID OF WATER.—Dr. John A. Broaddus, in a private letter from London, writes that at a weekly prayer meeting in Spurgeon's church, the "evening being wet, there were only fifteen hundred persons present."

SATURDAY, JANUARY 21, 1871.

THE BIRD THAT SUNG IN MAY.

A Bird last spring came to my window shutter,
One lovely morning at the break of day,
And from his little throat did sweetly utter
A most melodious lay.

He had no language for his joyous passion,
No solemn measure, no artistic rhyme;
Yet no devoted minstrel e'er did fashion
Such perfect tune and time.

It seemed of thousand joys a thousand stories,
All gushing forth in one tumultuous tide;
A hallelujah for the morning glories
That bloomed on every side.

And with each canticle's voluptuous ending
He sipped a dew-drop from the dripping pane;
Then heavenward his little bill extended,
Broke forth in song again.

I thought to emulate his wild emotion,
And learn thanksgiving from his tuneful tongue;
But human heart ne'er uttered such devotion,
Nor human lips such song.

At length he flew and left me in my sorrow,
Lest I should hear those tender notes no more;
And though I early waked for him each morrow,
He came not nigh my door.

But once again, one silent summer even,
I met him hopping in the new-mown hay;
But he was mute, and looked not up to heaven—
The bird that sung in May.

Though now I hear from dawn to twilight hour
The hoarse woodpecker and the noisy jay,
In vain I seek through leafless grove and bower
The bird that sung in May.

And such, methinks, are childhood's dawning pleasures;
They charm a moment and then fly away.
Through life we sigh and seek those missing treasures,
The birds that sung in May.

This is the lesson, then, my friend, remember,
To seize each bright-winged blessing in its way;
Ah! I never hope to catch in cold December
The bird that sung in May.

LETTER FROM EL DORADO, ARK.

Mr. Editor: Maxims, like the "scale of miles" on maps, are sometimes very untrue. I do not believe that "promises, like pie-crusts, are made to be broken," and hence a few lines this morning.

Many things which were pleasant and profitable to the looker-on are not worth their room in the Advocate, and hence must be left out.

Twenty-four hours from the time of our departure from Montgomery we were on board the splendid side-wheel steamer—a new boat—Ouachita Belle, at the foot of Canal street, in your city, where we lay from Monday night, at eight o'clock, until Wednesday morning, at six o'clock, when she backed out for Camden, Arkansas. I found her master, Captain Blanks, to possess every characteristic which goes to make up a first-rate commander, and in the person of his estimable lady my wife found a warm and agreeable friend, as well as sister. From experience on the Ouachita Belle, I can very unhesitatingly recommend her to all travelers up the Ouachita river.

While in New Orleans I visited the Southern music emporium of Bro. Werlein, where I found some of those unsurpassed organs and pianos which he keeps on hand. Tone and workmanship unsurpassed.

I found, too, at 112 Camp street, one of the finest book stores in the South. Bro. Harp has brought out things wonderfully there during the last two years. By the way, he has some trade up here, and would find a profit in circulating his catalogues here. We are six hundred miles away, but have direct trade with New Orleans, and only a mail communication with Nashville.

After leaving the city of New Orleans I saw or heard but little worth noting. We landed at Champagnotte, on the west bank of the river, at 10.15 P. M. on Saturday, December 21, about ten hours behind our schedule time, so that the conveyance sent down for us had returned to El Dorado, twelve miles further west. This caused us to stop at Champagnotte till Monday evening, when we were met by Bro. Crawford, a brother-in-law of the Rev. J. W. Star, late of the Alabama Conference, in whose house we found a pleasant home. We arrived at El Dorado, Thursday, Dec. 29, and are now stored away in the hospitable home of Bro. Smith, formerly of Chambers county, Alabama.

The country here is just beginning to recuperate. Wealth and worldly pleasure once reigned supreme here, but now the country is much wasted, and never can recover under the present rule.

This is the town of which Bishop Pierce once wrote: "If I intended settling anywhere in the West, I would settle at El Dorado." It has once been a station, and at one time the site of the Little Rock Conference, but now it is a circuit, having eight appointments.

The people seem to be kind and liberal, and the lands rich and productive. Everything seems to combine to invite laborers from the older Conferences to this field of labor. There is a scarcity of men here, very unlike that in Alabama. There appointments that are scarcely worthy to be reckoned good circuit appointments are cut off, and weak circuits cut in two, the area of districts reduced, and, I might add, the general usefulness of the ministry interfered with, all in order to make work for more men. At each session of the Conference there are applicants who are not received, who would be gladly received here, (and would there, as for the matter of that, if there was work for them.) To all such I bespeak for this Conference.

But more of this when I am further advised.

Very respectfully, your brother in Christ, J. A. PARKER.

BIOGRAPHICAL.

COLONEL JACOB H. GOLSAN.

Colonel Jacob H. Golsan, son of Lewis and Martha Golsan, was born in Orangeburg district, South Carolina, Nov. 26, 1825, and died in Autaugaville, Alabama, Nov. 18, 1870, aged fifty-four years, eleven months and twenty-two days.

Bro. Golsan came to this State with his parents when a boy of fifteen years of age, and very soon after he came he returned alone to South Carolina and purchased a lot of negroes and brought them to Alabama and sold them. I mention this to show the character of the man seen from his boyhood. Trade and speculation was his business through life, thus begun at fifteen years of age. His early life was not pious. He was full of life, and a little inclined to be wild, until he connected himself with the Methodist Episcopal Church South, about the year 1840. But he always had the highest respect for religion and the church.

Very soon after his conversion and union with the church he was appointed class leader, and continued to perform in an efficient and faithful manner the duties of the office until the session of the General Conference in 1866. He served frequently as church steward, and when not officially steward he rendered much valuable service to the board, as he uniformly made all their money speeches.

He was for twenty years assistant superintendent of the Sabbath school in Autaugaville. For twelve months before his death he was superintendent. In many respects he had few equals in that field of usefulness. He readily ingratiated himself into the affections of both parents and children. He was ready of speech, and never did he dismiss his school without a word or two of encouragement and exhortation. His speeches, too, were varied, and adapted to the young. He was always there if not sick or from home. He loved the school; the school loved him. May God raise up and bring forward another to fill his place.

He was a public benefactor to the people of this country—fed more people, gave more aid to the poor, and in a general way did more good than any man we had among us.

In the church, as a member, he was punctual and efficient. He was never too busy to attend any meetings that might be held in the week. If it was wet, hot or cold, Bro. Golsan was at church. In exhortation he was fluent and pathetic. His style was hortatory, and some of the most eloquent and touching appeals I have ever listened to came from him.

In prayer he had but few equals. But a few months before his death I conducted a protracted meeting of three weeks. Every night, nearly, he prayed. I have never heard so many and such able prayers from any man—so varied. If I said pray for mourners, he prayed for mourners; if for the church, he prayed for the church. He seemed to go up to the very throne. I never heard anything like it. He was a natural orator, and if he had had earlier cultivation he would have had few equals as a forensic speaker.

He led in every enterprise that was good, and, to take him all in all, was not only a useful, but a great man.

His death was from yellow disease, or, as the doctors call it, hemorrhagic fever; was sick about twelve days, all of which were days of excruciating pain. Often during his sickness he gave assurances that he was prepared for death. I heard him praise God frequently, and thank him for the gospel of Christ. He left his blessings on all who came into his room while sick. Many friends join in sympathy with his bereaved wife and children, who mourn his loss. That the guiding hand of Providence may at last bring them all to the home of the just, is the prayer of the writer and an eye-witness of his life, his sufferings and his triumphant death.

WM. A. EDWARDS.

A TALK WITH PARENTS.

I am speaking to parents whose children are young, with characters unformed, with faculties undeveloped. Don't turn away, saying to yourself: "I can't get time to read or plan. I have burdens heavy enough daily, and I don't want to be lectured." Softly, softly! It may be possible that, if I can't relieve you of any of your burdens, I can help you to bear them. Those little ones, the flowers of the hearth, the sunbeams in your dwelling, are worth to you and themselves all your anxieties, cares and toils, and they will, if rightly trained, repay a thousand-fold all they cost you. Remember that you are to your child a friend, a ruler and a teacher.

To control him, readily and fully, you must at all times govern yourself.

If a child sees that you are irritable, hasty, ill-tempered and passionate, he will understand this very early. I shall not explain the reason why it is so; but the fact is undeniable, and he who would control others must control himself. If, then, you act and decide, say "Yes" or "No," smile or frown, according as you happen to feel at the moment, you make your child feel you are as liable to treat him with injustice as otherwise.

He can't respect passion or temper. You lose in his respect, and also in his love. And your observation will teach you that, among all your acquaintances, you can't think of one instance where parents have good home government who cannot govern themselves.

Insist on prompt, cheerful obedience, and that without giving the reason.

It is a very common mistake to appeal to the reason of your child, and show him how reasonable your command is. The fact is, the child's reason must grow out of the experience of life. It is undeveloped as yet; and God has placed him in subjection to you, because you have reason developed and he has not. The child loves to discuss the matter, and debate the why and wherefore; and, if permitted, will often overpower the reason of parents by the most puerile assertions. You may cultivate the reasoning faculties of your child as much as you please, but it is not the time to do it when you have laid a command upon him. Some try to gain obedience by appealing to love, or shame, or the good opinion of others, but never seem to think that their commands are all the reason the child needs. God lays his commands upon us, without assigning the reasons why we should obey them. What a volume on the rights of property may be written under the command: "Thou shalt not steal!"

In home government it is very important that parents should sustain each other.

The child will soon learn which parent yields soonest to importunity; and he will, therefore, if refused by the sterner one, never rest till he has tried the weaker. I shall not say which of the parents is oftener the soonest to yield. But when the child makes a request which you see fit to deny him, and he says, "Well, I'll go and ask father; I know he will let me," that father, if he does so, is making a great mistake. The mother, shut up, worn and troubled, wearied and discouraged by the constant supervision of her children, needs all the aid and support which the authority of a father can give her. The child should never feel that there is an appeal from the decision of one parent to the good nature of the other. Even if you don't feel that the decision has been the wisest possible, don't let the child know that you feel so. Take it for granted that the decision has been right. Draw together, and let the voice of one be the voice of both.

Strive to develop your children slowly.

The tendency of the age is to do things quickly. We can't wait for trees to grow naturally. We must stimulate them, and then boast how early we made them bear fruit, forgetting that they must decay as early. We can't build a house; we must "run it up." We can't build a bridge that will last for ages; we must "throw one over the stream," and in a few years see it perish. We don't want to have boys and girls; they must leap from infancy into manhood. We must stimulate the child, see how fast we can cram and excite the brain, and develop the man in him. Hence we must have premature and immature and obscure men—all from the most promising and precious children. Whereas the perfection of education is slow development.

When you see the fond parent trying to show you how "forward" his child is, how "quick" he is, how he excels in his class, and when you see him trying to "show off" his darling, I beg you to commiserate the child, and write it down in your book that the child will never be much of a man. Willows sprout early and grow fast. The oak puts out its leaf late, and grows slowly. The one is woven into baskets, the other is bolted into ships. Don't feel elated because your child is precious; don't feel discouraged because he seems slow to acquire. In the end, the turtle almost invariably beats the fox in the race. We could give examples enough to prove this.

You will find that a great deal of character is imparted and received at the table. Parents too often forget this. Instead of swallowing your food in silence, instead of brooding over your business, instead of severely talking about others, let the conversation at the table be genial, kind, social and cheering. Don't bring disagreeable things to the table in your conversation, any more than you would in your dishes. For this reason, too, the more good company you have at your table the better for your children. Every conversation with company at your table is an educator of the family. Hence the intelligence and refinement and the appropriate behavior of a family which is given to hospitality. Never feel that intelligent visitors can be anything but a blessing to you and yours. How few have fully gotten hold of the fact that company and conversation at the table are no small part of education!

One thing more. There is one thing that will aid you to govern yourself, to decide rightly, to be kind and yet firm, to govern your children, and to meet the responsibilities of life, beyond all that I have said, and that is daily, humble, earnest prayer. This is the mightiest aid you can seize. Without it you will fail; but with it you can hardly be disappointed in your hopes.—Our Own Fireside.

WHY JOHNNY LIKED THE MINISTER. "Oh! wasn't that a good minister we had to-day?" said Johnny.

"Yes, very good. Which sermon did you like best?" said his teacher.

"Oh! I don't know. It wasn't the sermons altogether that I mean."

"What then?"

"Why he prayed for Sunday schools and boys so good; I never heard any one pray so much for boys. Most of them do not. That is why I liked him."

"Do you not like to be prayed for?"

"Why, yes, of course I do."

"The minister prayed to-day that all the boys might be Christ's boys. Did you like that?"

"Yes, and I prayed as hard as I could that I might be. When we hear people praying for us it makes us think it is about time to be praying for ourselves. If children don't like to say much about good things, I guess they all like to have the minister remember them. I always watch and see if they pray for young folks; if they don't, I think they won't have much in the sermon either. Then of course I don't listen as well as I should if I thought there was something for me."

CURE FOR ANGER.—Humility is the most excellent natural cure for anger in the world; for he that, by considering his own infirmities and failings, makes the error of his neighbor or servant to be his own case, and remembers that he daily needs God's pardon and his brother's charity, will not be apt to rage at the levities, or misfortunes, or indiscretion of another; greater than which he considers that he is frequently and more inexcusably guilty of.

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

THE Berlin Missionary Society received last year 67,754 thalers, of which 46,230 thalers went to the South African mission.

REV. D. D. DAVISSON, a superannuate of the Cincinnati Conference, died in the city of Dayton on Wednesday evening, December 14.

THE first Presbyterian church of Utah was dedicated at Corinne, November 20. One minister traveled six hundred miles from the westward to assist at the exercises.

THE Jews of Cincinnati are moving to secure the location of the National Jewish University. A prominent Israelite of Lawrenceburg has taken the initiative by offering $10,000.

THE Presbyterian church of Truro, Nova Scotia, has had but three pastors in one hundred years. The present pastor was installed in 1838. One of the elders has held the office for sixty-seven years.

A MISSIONARY in Turkey remarks that there is a great work going on under the surface in all that region. The faith of many in the national superstitions is shaken. There is an interesting convert in Western Turkey, a merchant, who is very successful in his work.

THE Bishop of Gloucester and Bristol has decided that lay preaching cannot be allowed in the Established Church of England. He forbade Mr. T. Croome to fill an appointment of that kind. The Bishop is Dr. C. J. Ellicott, the well known commentator.

FORMERLY it was difficult to obtain access to the heathen females of India; now the Presbyterian Board has one thousand girls under religious instruction, the London Missionary Society about three thousand five hundred, and the Church Missionary Society upward of six thousand.

THE missionary party of Friends in Madagascar have placed their services as teachers at the disposal of the missionaries of the London Society. They are familiarizing themselves by degrees with the language, and speak of the Christian natives as "kind and gentle, and almost idolizing the missionaries."

OUT OF one hundred and eighty-seven confirmations since 1855 in the Protestant Episcopal Church of St. Paul's, Cincinnati, eighty-five, or more than the entire number of confirmations during the preceding six years, were converts from the Roman Catholics, Presbyterians, Congregationalists, Methodists and Baptists.

THE Canada Christian Guardian thinks that the time for the establishment of a Wesleyan theological seminary in Canada has come. That paper also suggests that Rev. William M. Punshon will "confer a lasting and incalculable benefit upon the Canadian Wesleyan Church of the future" if he will accept a chair of theology in Victoria University.

NEW YORK CITY.—Since 1846 the Presbyterian churches in New York have increased from twenty-six, with ten thousand four hundred and seventy-four members, to forty-one, with fifteen thousand eight hundred and sixty-nine members. During this time seventeen churches have died out or been amalgamated with others. Of these last seven were "free" churches.

TWELVE HUNDRED Spanish citizens of Jores appealed to the Episcopal Bishop of Gibraltar to send them a minister, whose support they would guarantee, declaring their intention never to go back to the Romish Church. The Bishop replied: "That as it was no part of his design to promote proselytism from the Church of Rome, he could do nothing to aid them in leaving it."

A ROMAN CATHOLIC almanac, just published, reports 350 educational institutions in the United States. Of these, only 49 colleges and 111 academies for young ladies report their statistics. But in the 49 colleges mentioned there are 555 instructors, 248 priests, 7,167 pupils, and 205,000 volumes in the libraries. In the 111 female academies there are 1,211 instructors, 2,497 sisters, 12,027 pupils, and 64,587 volumes in the libraries.

PROVISION FOR STRANGERS.—By the terms of the deed of the new Presbyterian church at Wayne, Pennsylvania, the six middle pews are to be forever reserved for the use of strangers. This church has been built entirely by the contributions of Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Askin, of that town, who have also given $25,000 as an endowment toward providing the pastor's salary. The entire amount of their gift is $45,000. A year ago there was no church whatever in the place.

THE London Record contains a letter from a Christian minister in Stuttgardt, in which he says: "There is at this moment a great religious movement going on through our land. The churches are filled as they never were before. The Bible and prayer are honored. Almost every journal acknowledges God and traces victory to his arm; even papers formerly irreligious do this. And though there is not generally a knowledge of God in Christ, still there is a seeking after him, which I cannot but observe with great joy."

ANTI-IMMERSION LAUNDRESSES.—Prof. Knapp, in a report of his work for the Baptist Church in Spain, says: It would be easy to increase the number in his own church to one hundred if he had a baptistery, with proper facilities for immersions. But the river margin is infested with laundresses, who, with their families and friends, set up a derisive howling, mingled with abusive and obscene language, whenever a candidate is baptized; and besides, as the season advances, the water which comes down from the mountains, is very cold, and the exposure reacts upon "the weak frames of this degenerate people, not accustomed to 'diverse ablutions.'"

REV. HARVEY BROWN, a veteran of the New York Conference, died at his residence, One Hundred and Seventeenth street, Harlem, New York city, on Thursday, December 15, aged seventy-seven. He was a native of New England. In the war of 1812 Mr. Brown did good service for his country as a soldier on the northern frontier. He traveled under the elder in 1828, and joined the New York Conference in 1829. On account of infirm health he twice located, the last time in 1853, not being able to do regular work from that time to his death. He was a man of strong convictions, fine piety, and great devotion to Christ's cause. His last illness was brief but very painful. He endured as seeing him who is invisible.

METHODIST MISSION WORK IN PORTUGAL.—The British Wesleyan Missionary "Notices" for December bring encouraging assurances concerning the opening of the work in Portugal. Mr. Cassells, by his zeal and liberality, has succeeded in building a chapel and forming a Methodist society at Oporto. The members, although by no means in affluence, have raised considerable sums for local objects, and have forwarded handsome sums to the Mission Committee. Mr. Cassells guarantees £100 per annum toward the support of a mission. The government has of late indicated a more favorable leaning to the side of religious liberty. Under these circumstances it is much to be hoped the committee will be able to plant a missionary at Oporto with as little delay as possible. Such a center might prove of service in carrying the gospel into the north of Spain.

INFANT BAPTISMS.—As the question has been raised as to whether or not infant baptism is advancing or retrograding in the church, Dr. De Puy, in an article in the Christian Advocate, furnishes from the General Minutes of the Methodist Episcopal Church the following table, showing the number of infant baptisms in the Methodist Episcopal Church, including those of 1870:

In 1865 there were infant baptisms	32,891
In 1866	35,536
In 1867	42,958
In 1868	46,207
In 1869	47,509
In 1870	50,153

Making the total for six years 255,254, being much the largest number ever reported in that number of years.—Western Christian Advocate.

SUPPORT OF MISSIONS.—The Presbyterian church at Scrantou, Pennsylvania, has agreed to support two missionaries in the foreign field—one by the ladies and the other by the children. One of these missionaries, sister of the pastor, has sailed for Beirut. This, says Dr. Lore, of the Northern Advocate, we believe, is the best of all methods for the support of missions and the spread of the gospel. If the missionary work could be divided, for support, among the churches in detail, more than five-fold would be done than now is. It has been a dream of ours, pleasantly indulged for many years, that the time would come when each of our Annual Conferences would have its special mission field to provide for. What an increase of interest, what directness of effort, what joy in success, such an arrangement would produce! Is it not practicable?—Western Christian Advocate.

A CHARACTERISTIC OF THE TIMES.—Everything is too fast now-a-days, and, like all fast work, it is apt to be superficial. I don't mean that it is superficially done, although to some extent that is also true; but that the doing, the working of all, both socially and individually, is about superficial things. The very idea of meditation, solitude, silent self-communing, which contains so much that is high, and spiritual, and Christ-like, and improving, and dignified, is lost in the noise of Christian activity. We cannot realize it without an effort, far less bring it into daily practice.

THE universal want is love. Christ is the exhibition of love. Love is above everything else. There may be reverence, there may be fear, and they may be filial, but they are not to be compared with love. Christ was made to love. He is the bride of the soul.

To SUBSCRIBERS.—Any person wishing to subscribe for this paper can do so by paying the Methodist preacher in the circuit, and forwarding to us his receipt for $3, with the address of the subscriber upon it, stating Post Office, State, Circuit and Conference. The receipt ought be taken in duplicate.

N. B.—Agents are requested, wherever practicable, to invest and remit funds in a POST OFFICE ORDER, DRAFT, or by EXPRESS. If this cannot be done, REGISTER the letter at our expense.

When money is forwarded in either of the above methods we will be responsible for it, but not otherwise.

POST OFFICES.

As changes are being made in the post offices of the preachers, they will greatly oblige us by furnishing their addresses as early as possible. Don't forget to give the post office from which your paper is to be changed, as well as that to which it is to be sent.

OUR PUBLISHING AGENT.

We are glad to announce that the Publishing Committee, at its recent meeting, have arranged with Rev. Robert J. Harp to take charge of the business department of the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE. Bro. Harp assumes the onerous duties of this position at the earnest desire and solicitation of the editor and the Publishing Committee, who regard him as the man for the place, and bespeak for him the hearty co-operation of all the agents and friends of the paper. Hereafter all communications of a BUSINESS NATURE should be addressed to Rev. R. J. Harp, 112 Camp street, New Orleans. All communications for the columns of the paper should be addressed, as heretofore, to Rev. Linus Parker.

TO OUR AGENTS.

Nearly SIX HUNDRED agents receive this paper without charge, in consideration of their agencies. Let us hope that they will send us during the spring an average of at least twenty-five subscribers. With proper effort it can be done. This will add to our list nearly NINE THOUSAND, and make its patronage equal to what it was before the war. Issuing from this metropolis, we ought to have the largest circulation of any Southern weekly. The cause demands it, and we make our calculations accordingly. We doubtless now have by far the largest circulation of any weekly in the three States from which we have most of our patronage; but with the hearty co-operation of our agents, and those interested in our success, we ought to have our list vastly increased.

NOTICE TO ADVERTISERS.

In assuming the business management of the paper the publisher begs the indulgence of numerous correspondents in reference to advertising. Copies of this issue will be mailed to them, in which they will find our terms.

APPLETONS' JOURNAL.—In another column our readers will find the advertisement of Appletons' beautifully illustrated and surprisingly cheap weekly. The high character of these gentlemen as publishers is fully sustained. Read their advertisements.

OUR SEVENTEENTH VOLUME.

The specimen number of the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE was issued on the tenth of July, 1850. Number one of volume one was issued February 8, 1851, from the office, No. 56 Gravier street, and from that date, with the exception of the war interregnum, the paper has been regularly mailed to its subscribers. Bishop McTyeire was the first editor, and continued to edit it until June, 1858, when he was elected by the General Conference editor of the Nashville Advocate, and C. C. Gillespie was by the same body elected editor of this paper. Mr. Gillespie edited the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE until the spring of 1862, when the paper suspended publication on account of the war. The publication was resumed on the twentieth of January, 1866, and was conducted by J. C. Keener until his election to the episcopacy by the General Conference at Memphis, in May, 1870. Counting the interval during which the publication was suspended, the ADVOCATE really enters this week upon its twenty-first year. It is coming of age, and entitled to the respectful consideration of its friends. The reasons for the publication twenty years ago are stronger now. Our church in this region requires it, our Protestant Christianity requires it. We are here confronted by Romanism in its greatest strength, and by every form of vice and infidelity. In everything, save the editorial department, the ADVOCATE begins another year auspiciously. It now has a business manager, which it has sadly needed for a good while, and we believe it has a greater number of good agents than ever. Shall we not, brethren, begin at once a fresh canvass for subscribers? Let the claims of the paper be presented in your pastoral visitations and from the pulpit. By promoting its circulation you are promoting your own welfare, and the welfare of your flocks. Every interest of the church will be benefited by a wider distribution of your paper. The ADVOCATE is the auxiliary of the spiritual, the financial and the educational interests of our common Methodism.

DAVID O. BROWDER.

We learn that this estimable Christian gentleman died at his residence, near Montgomery, Alabama, on the sixth of January. Bro. Browder was a native of Logan county, Kentucky. For several years he resided in Clarksville, Tennessee; for a number of years he was a citizen of New Orleans, and for the last eight years he has lived in and near Montgomery, Alabama. Our acquaintance with him began when he came to reside in this city. He was for several years an efficient member of the Felicity St. Church, of which we were then pastor. We then learned to love and appreciate him as a devoted and consistent Christian. He was diligent in the use of all the means of grace, and eminently useful as steward and class leader. In all our ministry we have never had a hearer whose presence helped us so much to preach. He was a hearty hearer, who seemed to feed upon the word, and to respond to every truth of the gospel. Our fellowship with him was sweet indeed, and one of our pleasantest thoughts of heaven is that we shall meet him, and such as he was, in that better land. While in Montgomery in December last, attending the Alabama Conference, it was our privilege to renew the associations of former years. He was then evidently passing away, but we found him resting in Christ, and with a good hope of eternal life. May heaven's richest consolations rest upon his stricken family!

SOUTHWESTERN BIBLE SOCIETY.—The twenty-first anniversary of this society was celebrated at the Coliseum Place Baptist Church, on Sunday night, the fifteenth instant. We were not able to be present, but are gratified to learn that the audience was large and that the exercises were of a most interesting character. The addresses delivered by H. N. Odgden, Esq., and the Rev. R. S. Trippett, are highly spoken of.

PREPARING THE WAY.

It is highly significant that John's first proclamation, as the herald of the Savionr, was a call to preparation. The people themselves were to prepare the way of the Lord, and to make his paths straight. Such a message might be addressed at any time to a congregation. There is a work of preparation needed before Christ can come in reviving power. There are valleys to be exalted, and mountains and hills to be made low. A highway for our God must be made straight in the desert. There are obstructions in many churches which are as an insurmountable barrier to the progress of converting grace. These hinderances may be in the backslidings and sins of the membership, by which unbelievers are repelled from the Saviour, and confirmed in their opposition to the gospel. There are, perhaps, some who have become victims to the arts of intoxications, "the drunkards of Ephraim," those who "have erred through wine and through strong drink are out of the way." There may be inordinate love of pleasure, the idolatry of covetousness, and the open and habitual violation of the discipline of the church. There may be the absence of brotherly love, and the prevalence of uncharitableness and evil speaking. If nothing else is in the way there may be general negligence in reference to the means of grace. Family prayer has gone into decay, the class rooms are abandoned, and the weekly prayer meeting is no longer felt to be essential to religious comfort and holy living.

The more devoted may need a higher baptism; the pastor must have a special qualification for the work before him. God is waiting to come into his temple, the Saviour stands at the church door and knocks. The great King is passing by, the divine kingdom is brought nigh, but the blessing tarries or is altogether lost. The church is not ready for the Master's visitation of mercy, the grieved Spirit is driven away, and there is no refreshing from the presence of the Lord. Revival seasons, within a certain limit, may be dispensed with a sovereign hand, but there is no sovereignty which sets aside all conditions and operates without regard to appointed means. Certain it is that where pastor and people set themselves earnestly to make the paths straight, and to prepare a highway for the progress of the Saviour, they will receive largely of the munificent gifts and bounties which this presence dispenses.

This principle holds with special pertinency in aggression upon the ranks of the world. As it is through the instrumentality of the church that sinners are brought to God, believers must be qualified for this great work. The way of the Lord, in the conversion of sinners, must be prepared by them. Without holiness and without zeal they block the way, and keep sinners from the cross. If negligent, and living in worldliness and sin, they are throwing fatal obstructions across the Saviour's path. A cold and dead church is in no condition to call the ungodly to repentance. The salt has lost its savor, and the light has gone out. There is a work of preparation for the church to do, "that the word of the Lord may have free course and be glorified," and that the kingdom of God may come in power to the unbelieving world.

In working out our individual salvation there is occasion for preparation. The trouble with the sinner often lies in certain hinderances which he must himself remove before he can become a joyful child of God. If given to drink, he must renounce his cups before God's Spirit can take possession of his soul. If he clings to sin in any form, or if he turns to his own way, and resolutely refuses to deny himself, the path of Christ is so hedged up that he cannot be saved. This preparatory work may embrace the elements of repentance. There is restitution to be made in certain cases, humiliating confession, the crucifixion of the pride and selfishness of the heart, and separation from the companions and haunts of sin. The greatest difficulty is to be ready and willing to be saved, to make a straight path for the Saviour's footsteps, to bring down the high places and to raise the low. There are sinners who to-day wonder that they have never found salvation, and are disposed to question the unqualified freeness of the divine mercy, whose only difficulty is in this preparation. They have not prepared the way of the Lord in their own hearts and lives by placing themselves in a condition to be received and blessed. They have shrunk from the denial and crucifixion of self, and from that repentance in which alone saving faith is possible.

Christians are often conscious of the fact that higher experiences are for them. They marvel that their attainments are so meager, that the riper degrees of holiness are so imperfectly realized. The cause may be in this: They have not done their part in preparing for so regal a progress in their souls; the Lord's paths have not been made straight in their hearts. It is an awful as well as a joyous thing to walk with God, and to hold communion, intimate and habitual, with the triune Jehovah. To ride in the burning chariot, to talk with the transfigured Saviour, or to stand where the seraphim cover themselves with their wings, is scarcely more than this. Here is a purity and a consecration from which the believer unconsciously draws back. He is unwilling to come out of the world and out of self, so entirely as to tread these radiant heights.

LETTER FROM BISHOP ANDREW.

MR. EDITOR: There are two or three things which are indispensable to the perpetuity and well-being of the church. It is of very great importance that the pastors feed their flocks on food which the book of God supplies—the pure, unadulterated word of God. Let the Methodist Church take heed specially to the doctrines of her pulpits. Let it be pure, and let it be preached by men who are sound in doctrine and in life. In these days of disputation and heresy it is specially necessary that the pulpit send forth no uncertain sound. Let the doctrines of Methodism, as taught by Wesley and Fletcher and Watson, and by our fathers on this side of the Atlantic, be fully, faithfully and earnestly preached, and God will continue to bless our ministry with glorious success. But it is not only necessary to guard the pulpit, but the doors of the church also require to be guarded. The gathering of large numbers into the church may not be any advantage to her. Where persons are admitted who are scarcely half awakened, but who, from the time they are put on the church books, regard themselves as Christians, although they have never seriously repented, have never sought the Lord with a deep earnestness and a solemn purpose to consecrate themselves to the service of God, they don't pretend to be converted, and to enjoy the witness of the Holy Ghost to the fact that they are born of God; and now that they have anchored in the church, unchanged in heart and life, there is great danger that they will live and die in that condition. But important as sound doctrine and faithful preaching may be, a faithful discipline is equally important. So our fathers regarded it; hence their faithful efforts to administer to their flocks a sound, godly discipline.

But perhaps some are ready to say: What do you mean by discipline? We mean that the pastors faithfully watch over all the members of their flocks—visit them frequently, and ascertain what progress they make in the divine life; see if they are sound both in theory and in practice; minister to them encouragement, instruction or reproof, as their spiritual condition may require; correct their errors kindly but faithfully; remember you are training these souls to live with God. Let there be nothing in the speech or manner which may tend to lessen their respect for you as a minister of the Lord Jesus; and should you have to reprove them strongly, the tone and manner and spirit should make them respect and love their pastor all the more for his faithfulness. Let there be nothing magisterial in your whole conduct toward them, or you spoil all. Be plain and faithful; but let love direct all. And should you find them ready to oppose you at every turn, don't be surprised or provoked, and manifest displeasure toward them, but take it all calmly and patiently. Be sure to pray with them, and affectionately and earnestly commend them to that Jesus who redeemed them.

For the children and young people of your flock manifest at all times the deepest interest. Throw all your influence in favor of the institution, and endeavor to aid by your prayers and constantly strive to support the Sabbath school, and aim to make it a fruitful nursery to the church.

JAMES O. ANDREW.

REV. GEORGE H. CLINTON.

BY BISHOP PAINE.

Rev. George H. Clinton was born in St. Helena parish, Louisiana, January 7, 1835, and died at Darlington, Louisiana, December 29, 1870, at the residence of his father, Rev. Thomas Clinton.

It deeply grieves the writer to make this announcement, and it will be read with sorrow by many admiring and loving friends of the deceased. His history refutes the oft-repeated slander that preachers' children are worse than their neighbors', and vindicates the divine word. Carefully trained by his parents "in the way he should go," he became pious in early life, and never departed from the way. As he grew up he seems to have felt a strong impression that he was called to the duties of the holy ministry, and, upon completing his collegiate course, he at once entered the Mississippi Conference, in 1853, as an itinerant preacher. Henceforth, to the day of his death, he wholly devoted himself to "this one thing, and drew all her cares and studies this way." He was an itinerant preacher in spirit and in fact, filling with great effectiveness and popularity, during the fifteen years he remained in Mississippi, every appointment he received, from a colored mission to the most important stations and districts in the Conference. In 1868 he was transferred to the St. Louis Conference, and for two years has been the pastor of the First Methodist Episcopal Church South in the city of St. Louis. With what success he has labored in that large and important charge his devoted and generous-hearted people have testified by their sympathy and love. His name will ever be remembered by them with respect, and the fruits of his labors will be seen when he shall come "with rejoicing, bringing his sheaves with him." In stature he was small, well proportioned, and apparently of a delicate frame. But he was lithe, active, and of such an indomitable zeal that, notwithstanding he was predisposed to an affliction of his throat, he endured an amount of ministerial labor which few could sustain without exhaustion. Repeatedly warned of his danger, and sensible of it, he could not resist the demands for his services, and preferred to wear out to rusting out. He was happily married, and was almost idolized in his own family. Socially he was genial and companionable. Candid and kind, without guile or ostentation, his brethren in the laity and ministry trusted him and dearly loved him. A more unselfish man cannot be found. His whole life was given for others. He was popular everywhere; but this excited no jealousy, for he was no one's rival. His manner of presenting his thoughts was unique—investing ordinary topics with novelty, and rendering them impressive and attractive to his hearers. They were charmed and moved by his eloquence and holy pathos. Of course he was successful. He honored his Master, and his Master owned and honored his servant. Many stars will glitter in his crown.

His mental faculties operated rapidly and logically. He had fancy and taste. Always deeply in earnest in preaching, no hearer doubted his sincerity or his singleness of purpose. In private he was a praying and consecrated Christian, and his life, as a whole, was as beautiful, consistent as his death was a sublime demonstration of the truth and potency of religion.

During last fall his devoted charge became painfully apprehensive that his labors were dangerously impairing his health, and urged him to respite himself. With this view he returned to his father's in the South, where, in the society of his early friends and loving kindred, it was hoped his health would be restored. But, alas! it was too late. It soon became evident that his vital energies had been overtaxed and subverted. The result was inevitable. Slowly, but surely he declined—gently and safely he sunk into the grave.

In the letter from his father which gave the first news of his death, he says: "George reached my house on the twenty-sixth of October in very feeble health. He continued to decline to helplessness. He continued to the last in the loved employment of attending love feasts and other social meetings, and, when unable to whisper, or even to swallow a little water with pain, yet he labored for the salvation of a dear old friend but a few days before he exchanged a world of tears for, we trust through grace, a world of eternal joy. He sleeps now near one of his dear little boys. Three others sleep in different places; but they have met to part no more. He left a wife and two daughters, father, mother, brothers and sisters to follow him, we trust, to the same blessed home."

Thus has passed from earth one of its purest and loveliest spirits. Let his aged parents thank God for having loaned them such a son. Let his friends pray that God will have his widow and children in his holy keeping, and let the whole church pray to the Lord of the harvest to send out more laborers.

George H. Clinton and W. [illegible] Winans Drake—sons of my old fellow-laborers—now rest together. They are safe.

THE WORK IN TEXAS.

We extract as follows from Bishop Marvin's last letter, published in the St. Louis Christian Advocate, under date of December 24, 1870:

There is a prosperous condition in the Conferences of Texas generally. Among other signs of this is a note an improvement in finance. In some of the Conferences this is very marked. Perhaps less has been done in this particular in the Texas Conference than in any other one in the State. The condition of this Conference is peculiar. The church at large overestimates its relative strength. It is assessed as one of the strongest of the Conferences in Texas, while in reality it is the weakest but one. By reference to the minutes you will see that the number of members in Trinity Conference is 9,789, in East Texas 7,415, and in Northwest Texas 7,[illegible] while in the Texas Conference but 4,222. It is true that the two most important commercial centers of the State, Galveston and Houston, are within its territory. But the Texas Conference has one city not so far behind; that is Jefferson.

Besides, there has been and still is a burden on this Conference under which it has literally staggered ever since the war. It has had the entire burden of German missions in Texas to bear, although they are spread into the West Texas and Northwest Texas territory. To preserve the unity of the German work it has been held in connection with this Conference, and so the whole amount of its missionary support has fallen here. In the [illegible] now it belongs to the class of missions supported by the Parent Board. But that board, laboring under the old debt, and getting its revenue still for this year on the old basis of ten per cent., could do no more for these missions than remit its per cent. on the Texas and West Texas Conferences in their favor. So for this year again the Texas Conference has to support the German mission, being assisted only to the amount of $94.75, specified by West Texas.

Now, suppose the Missouri or St. Louis Conference had a specific field requiring appropriations in excess of those for the regular missions of their own work, amounting to some two thousand dollars annually, what would have been the result, Mr. Treasurer? Yet this Conference, in a comparatively [illegible] country, with a membership of less than one-fourth the number in either of those, and in the portion of Texas that felt the results of the war more than any other, has met this demand.

Nor has it been met reluctantly. The brethren see the importance of the work among the Germans, and accept cheerfully the Providence that has laid its support upon them. It is a field that yields well in response to the labor bestowed. Some of it is already self-supporting, and much of it would have been by this time, but the wolf has been in the fold. The Conference board was not able to make heavy appropriations to the missionaries, nor to pay promptly those it did make. The Methodist Episcopal carpet-baggers made the best of this condition, and succeeded in alienating from us some two or three of the German preachers, who in leaving produced a schism in their circuits. That part of these societies which cleve to us is too weak to support the preacher without aid. For some time this schism wore a very threatening aspect, but it seems now to have reached its limit. Nor has it been without its good effect. The preachers who have remained with us have proved themselves to be true men—not corruptible by greenbacks, at least. They respect themselves and each other, and have a deep affection for their self-denying American brethren, who, as they know, have reduced their own mission field to a most painful straitness in order to aid ours. One of them, Bro. Prinzing, calls those who bit at the currency bait, greenback preachers—a soubriquet which they have truly earned.

But the Conference board is in arrear with its missionaries over a year. The appropriations of the year before last were not quite met at this session—a very small balance remaining. The board is over $2,000 in debt.

A vigorous effort will be made to pay this debt and meet the appropriations of the present year. After this the Parent Board will, no doubt, be able to do a good part by those missions, and leave the Texas Conference, in common with the rest, to look after its own proper field.

Something appreciable has been paid to Conference claimants, though nothing like the amount needed. No widow with children in the Texas Conference received much over one hundred dollars. Sometimes, in cases of extremity, this is a great help, but alas! how insufficient for comfort and education where the family is without resources, as is not unfrequently the case.

The Bishops' fund is deficient in Texas but $19.25. One of the Conferences is deficient $22.50; one, the West Texas, overpaid $2.75, and the others settled even.

The vote on the veto question stands thus: For—Trinity Conference, 44; East Texas Conference, 30; Northwest Texas Conference, 10; West Texas Conference, 29; Texas Conference, 41. Total, 134. Against—West Texas Conference, 1.

I presume this will fairly represent the vote in the other Conferences generally. The Southern mind is so fully conservative, and looks to constitutional safeguards so instinctively, that the negative vote on this question will be counted by units wherever it does not stand at zero. Our experience of the disasters following upon the prostration of constitutional bulwarks, both in civil and ecclesiastical government, is too recent and too profound to have lost its effect. It will require ages to obliterate 1844 or 1860 from the mind or heart of the South. No wonder, then, that the Methodist Episcopal Church South should be settling and broadening the foundations of her constitution. May she preserve it intact in all times of popular outcry and excitement.

MINUTES OF THE MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

Mr. Editor: Contrary to our expectations when the article in regard to it, and published last week, was written, the minutes of the late session of the Mississippi Conference will be published in Jackson, instead of Nashville.

Three thousand copies will be published, and distributed among the districts as follows, viz:

To the Woodville district, 450 copies; Summit, 188; Seashore, 187; Brookhaven, 450; Jackson, 600; Vicksburg, 525; Brandon, 225; Meridian, 375.

Members of Conference will please address me at this place, informing me how to forward their number of copies.

TRIBUTE TO WM. A. SMITH, D. D.

We have taken the following from a paper prepared for the Virginia Conference, by a committee consisting of Leroy M. Lee, J. C. Granberry and D'Arcy Paul:

William A. Smith was born in Fredericksburg, Virginia, November 29, 1802. His mother was a consistent member of the Methodist Church, and in death prayed that her son might live to preach the glorious gospel. His father was a man of honorable character and position. Both died when he was of tender age. For a time the orphan boy had rough usage; but he was afterward adopted and reared by Mr. Russell Hill, a friend of his father, and a worthy merchant of Petersburg, Virginia. When seventeen years old he was converted, and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church. He had received a good English education, and had commenced the study of the classics; but feeling that he was called of God to the ministry, and not being able to attend college as he desired, he studied privately one year, at the house of his uncle, Mr. Porter, in Orange county, Virginia, and taught school two or three years in Madison county, Virginia. In 1824 he traveled Gloucester circuit, under the presiding elder. In February, 1825, he was admitted on trial into the Virginia Conference. In 1833, while agent for Randolph Macon College, then in its infancy, he met with a fearful accident; the carriage which he was driving upset and fell on him, breaking his right thigh, and dislocating his left hip, and badly laming him for life.

He was a delegate to the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church every session from 1832 to 1844, and occupied a high position in that great council as an adviser and debater. In the memorable appeal case of Harding, and in the yet more important extra-judicial trial of Bishop Andrew, which led to the division of the church, he won a reputation as wide as the United States, and inferior to that of no minister of any denomination, for the highest deliberative and forensic eloquence. He was a member of the Louisville Convention which organized the Methodist Episcopal Church South, and of all the General Conferences of this church to the date of his death. He commanded universal respect and confidence among his brethren by the sincerity of his zeal, the wisdom of his counsels, and the power of his reasoning. His impress will long remain on the legislation and institutions of Southern Methodism.

In 1846 he was called from the regular pastorate, by the urgency of the trustees of Randolph Macon College, sanctioned by the Virginia Conference, to the presidency of this institution. He was selected because his courage, energy and strength of intellect seemed indispensable not only to the prosperity, but even to the saving of this noble institution. Twenty years of his life were consecrated to this cause—years of self-sacrifice, of unremitting toil, of courageous battling with difficulties and victory over them; of hope, where others desponded; of faith, where others doubted; and of resolution, where others wavered. He was diligent in his study, diligent in his lecture room, diligent in his travel through Virginia and North Carolina to collect money and to arouse interest in behalf of the college. The number of students steadily increased, the standard of scholarship was elevated, and through the joint efforts of Dr. Smith and the agents of the college an endowment fund of $100,000 was raised. Then came the terrible war, which emptied those classic halls, and swept away the fund which had been gathered with so much toil. Yet not in vain had he labored. Scores of ministers, hundreds of pious young men, educated under his care, molded by his influence, are this day, in their several spheres, carrying forward the same grand work to which he was devoted, and have learned from his teachings and example never to surrender, never to despair of Randolph Macon.

We have not spoken of Dr. Smith as a preacher and pastor. He soon rose to eminence in the ministry, and stood with the foremost in the pulpit and pastorate for faithfulness, ability and success. He had a deep, distinct, happy, constant experience of the saving grace of God in Christ Jesus. His zeal for the cause of religion was pure, steady, consuming. He was fully consecrated to the work of the ministry. The doctrines and polity of our church had no stronger, nobler expounder and champion than he. His sermons were "logic on fire"—grand and solid discussions of the leading truths of the gospel, animated with deep emotion. Thousands were converted under his ministry, many of whom became ministers in our own and in other denominations. The churches he served were ever edified and trained, not less by his pastoral fidelity than by his luminous discourses. As a man he was of marked character. Who that ever saw him could forget that bold, frank, noble face and forehead, which revealed at a glance the lofty attributes of his intellect, and the loftier attributes of his heart? Cunning and deceit he knew not; to fear he was a stranger. His convictions he was ever ready to avow and maintain. Yet, with all his courage and indomitable energy of will, he had a tender, sympathetic heart, and much of a child-like spirit—simple, unselfish, trustful, easy to be entreated.

In the fall of 1866 he was transferred to the St. Louis Conference. In the summer of 1869 he visited Virginia to build up his shattered constitution. He suffered severely with the chronic dysentery, complicated with other disorders, and grew worse each succeeding month, until he breathed his last in the month of March, 1870, in the city of Richmond, Virginia. He retained the clearness of his faculties, and delighted to speak of the great themes of Christianity, especially of the saying of John: "God is love." He said that from the day he gave his heart to God in youth that self-surrender had never been recalled, and his trust in Christ had never wavered. He compared his state of mind to a lake embosomed in a deep forest, whose peaceful surface the rough winds could not reach.

THE CHRISTIAN INDEX.

This is the organ of the Colored Methodist Episcopal Church in America.

It is published, semi-monthly, by contract, by A. H. Redford, agent, at the Southern Methodist Publishing House, Nashville, Tennessee.

The price is $1 per annum, in advance.

The Colored General Conference, at Jackson, Tennessee, December, 1870, elected Samuel Watson, D. D, editor, and L. J. Scurlock assistant editor.

The Index begins its second volume with the January number, now out, enlarged and improved in size and style; but not increased in price.

As an organ for the colored people lately in connection with the Methodist Episcopal Church South it is of vast importance. It contains sound doctrine, and good religious reading for preachers and people, for the old and young. It carries facts of history and arguments, with which our colored friends of a non-political church can meet their enemies, who, we are sorry to say, are numerous, and who use the press freely.

The Index contains church notices and news; the appointments of their Bishops and Conferences; obituaries, marriages, etc.

Will our preachers, traveling and local, and our members, bring the Index before the colored Methodists everywhere. Take their names and subscriptions, and forward them to Nashville—addressed to "The Christian Index, care of A. H. Redford, Nashville, Tennessee."

Many of those who ought to have this paper are not aware of its existence or nature, or where or on what terms it is to be had. Put them in communication with it, and thus do a great service to this new church.

How Billy Pennington Did It.—At Bristol, September 21, 1764, John Wesley wrote to Rev. Thomas Rankin:

"Dear Tommy: I wonder that all our preachers are not convinced of this—that it is of unspeakable use to spread our publications in every society. Billy Pounington, in one year, sold more of these in Cornwall than had been sold for seven years before. So may you, if you take the same method. Carry one sort of books with you the first time you go the round; another sort the second time, and so on. Preach on the subject in each place, and after preaching, encourage the congregation to buy and read."

Mr. Wesley does not mention the Northwestern, but if he were alive to revise his works, he would probably insert the name and commend our agents as highly as he commended Billy Pounington. Some brethren ask whether it is best to say anything on the subject "after preaching." At least, Mr. Wesley so advised his helper Billy. Good news is coming to the office from all over the field. "Encourage your congregation to buy (subscribe) and read."—Northwestern Christian Advocate.

What Hath He Done?—A man passes for what he is worth. Very idle is all curiosity concerning other people's estimates of us, and idle is all fear of remaining unknown. If a man know that he can do anything—that he can do it better than any one else—he has a pledge of the acknowledgment of the fact by all persons. The world is full of judgment days, and into every assembly that man enters, in every action he attempts, he is gauged and stamped. "What hath he done?" is the divine question that searches men, and trans-pierces every false reputation.

Obituaries.

Lula Sardenia Eloise, infant daughter of Rev. Largus R. and Victoria Bell, was born in Tallapoosa county, Alabama, June 12, 1869, and died November 21, 1870, aged one year, five months and nine days.

A sweet rose-bud has been removed from earthly fields to bloom in celestial gardens, amidst the noontide of glory, forever.

See Jesus, lovely Saviour, stand,
With kindest, sweetest charms!
Hear him! He calls the tender lambs,
And folds them in his arms.

J. W. Christian.

Mrs. Clara M. Russell was born March 8, 1830, and died November 20, 1870.

She was the daughter of Seymour and M. U. Powell, who long lived to exemplify the principles of the Christian religion in the family circle and community at large. As a result of ordering their household in the fear of God, they were graciously permitted to have their children journey with them toward the promised land. Sister Russell was converted when quite a child, and joined the Methodist Protestant Church. She was married to R. W. Russell, April 8, 1847, with whom she dwelt in the felicity of a marriage in the Lord. They shared the blessing of the righteous in a large household, five of whom preceded their mother to the spirit land. Little Warren was violently attacked during the last illness of Sister Russell, and died on Thursday morning—his mother continuing until Sabbath evening. He was a bright boy of four summers—his father's pet and the family's joy.

Sister Russell's life was characterized by consistent devotion to the church and punctual performance of her private religious duties. Her last illness was violent, and produced intense suffering. During this agony, at her most quiet and rational moments, she expressed strong confidence in the assurance of salvation. We are assured, by her expressions and life, that she will awake with a likeness that will satisfy.

The Child's Corner.

LITTLE WILLIE AND THE APPLE.

Little Willie stood under an apple tree old,
The fruit was all shining with crimson and gold,
Hanging so temptingly low; how he longed for a bite!
Though he knew it he took one it wouldn't be right.

Said he: "I don't see why my father should say,
Don't touch the old apple tree, Willie, to-day"
I shook it I have thought, they're hanging so low,
When I asked just for one, he would answer me 'No!'

"He would never find out if I took but just one.
And they do look so good, shining out in the sun:
There are hundreds and hundreds, and he wouldn't miss so paltry a little red apple as this."

He stretched forth his hand, but a low mournful strain
Came wandering dreamily over his brain;
In his bosom a beautiful harp had long lain,
That the angel of conscience quite frequently played.

And he sung: "Little Willie, beware! Oh, beware!
Your father is gone, but your Maker is there;
How sad you would feel if you heard the Lord say,
This dear little boy stole an apple to-day?"

Then Willie turned round, and as still as a mouse
Crept slowly and carefully into the house;
In his own little chamber he knelt down to pray
That the Lord would forgive him, and please not to say,

Little Willie almost stole an apple to-day."

LITTLE FOLKS SOWING GOOD SEED

"Scatter seed!
Small may be thy spirit field,
But a goodly crop 'twill yield;
Sow the kindly word and deed.
Scatter seed!"

Children preach? Yes, they can when their little hearts are in tune, full of faith and love. Hear what an infidel's child said to her father:

"Father, why don't you talk to me about God and Jesus as mother does?" said a sweet childish voice of four years.

The father was dumb, and left the room quickly.

A day or two before his father left home in his regiment, Harry plucked from the garden a beautiful flower, and holding it to his father, asked:

"Pa, who made this pretty flower?"

No answer was given; but deep thoughts were stirred in this infidel's heart.

Nearly three thousand years ago the Psalmist wrote: "Out of the mouth of babes and sucklings thou hast ordained strength."

A dear young girl, whose heart Jesus had touched, was burdened with sorrow and anxiety for her worldly, impenitent father. She prayed for him in agony; and how dare she approach one so deeply loved and reverenced upon this subject so near her heart!

But at length, summoning all her courage, she resolved to speak to him on the all-important matter.

"Father, I wish to speak to you," she said, with a beating heart and faltering lips.

"Well, daughter, what is it?" he asked pleasantly.

The burdened heart could contain its self no longer. Bursting into an agony of tears, she said only:

"Your soul, father, your soul!"

The man of the world felt his heart pierced as with one of God's arrows. He could only answer, with a choking voice:

"Daughter, I will."

Is not this preaching effectual, soul-saving?

Scatter the gems of the beautiful
In the depths of the humble soul:
They shall burland blossom and bear the fruit
While the endless ages roll.

Preach? Assuredly; day in, day out, rising up, lying down; in every place, by example, precept, word of mouth. Every thought, look, action, speaks for Jesus.

Why is not every little boy and girl alive, wide awake, on fire to make the world better and happier; swift on errands of love, mercy and truth; running here and flying there on deeds benevolent, gracious, glorious; to do good to this one, to that one; making this one better and happier, and that one better and happier?

What hinders the lambs of the flock being just as zealous, just as active—if not more—in doing the Master's will, telling how good Jesus is, how ready, able and willing to save to the uttermost all that come unto God by him, as the big folks are?

When their own hearts are attuned with the gospel, then are they duly qualified for a generous ouset in the battle-field against sin of every kind. Little folks, as well as great folks, must practice what they preach, and preach what they practice, else the cry will be: "Physician, heal thyself!" Thou, therefore, that teachest another teachest thou not thyself?

How can children's hearts
Bring forth flowers of love,
Unless Christ, the Lord, imparts
Sunshine from above?

O, how patient and how kind
Jesus used to be!
He will put his gentle mind,
If I ask, in me.

CAN THE VIRGIN MARY TAKE CARE OF ME?—An Irish boy asked his priest: "Will the blessed Virgin Mary take care of me?"

"Yes, my son, if you are true to all the requirements of the holy Catholic Church, she will take care of you."

"Will she keep my soul, and take me to heaven safe when I die?"

"Yes, if you die in the bosom of the church."

"You are very sure, sir?"

"Yes, quite sure."

"Well, sir, I am not sure, for I read that once, in going from Jerusalem, she lost her own child; and if she could lose him she might lose me."

But Jesus can and will take care of you, and save you, if you put all your trust in him.

A WORD FOR BOYS.—Truth is one of the rarest of gems. Many a youth has been lost in society by allowing it to tarnish his character, and foolishly throwing it away. If this gem still shines in your bosoms suffer nothing to displace or diminish its luster. Profanity is a mark of low breeding. Show us that man that commands much respect—an oath never trembles on his tongue. Read the catalogue of crime. Inquire the character of those who depart from virtue. With but few exceptions you will find them to be profane. Think of this, and do not let a vile word disgrace you.

Scientific.

THE prevalence of scarlet fever in England is so great that attention is being paid to the means by which it is propagated. Among other things the laundry is challenged; and the suggestion of danger in this direction is well worth careful consideration. Clothing is infectious, and the infection may be communicated unless the greatest care is taken to disinfect, and to keep suspicious clothing from contact with others in the wash, whether at public or private laundries.

THE aurora is not a common sight to the inhabitants of Asia, and it has recently given them cause for wonderment in these regions. Particularly the telegraphic companies are reporting derangements which are not so well understood on the other side as with us. There is a curious belief running through the mythological ideas of all ancient nations to the effect that the "Mountain of the Gods," the seat of power, lay to the north. It is very likely that the aurora, particularly as a rare vision, had something to do with the origin of this allocation.

DEAD WEIGHT.—For every ton of weight carried over a railroad of the ordinary gauge there goes a large amount of dead weight in the heft of the cars. In England it amounts to twenty-nine tons for every one ton of passengers, and seven tons to every ton of freight, and this adds immensely to the cost of transportation. On the Festiniog railway in Wales, of less than two feet gauge, the cars carry six times their own weight at twelve miles an hour. The engines and track built on the Fairlie principle, on a three-foot gauge, carry three tons to one of dead weight, at twenty-five to thirty miles an hour. There can hardly be a doubt that a maturer study of railroad economies will lead to the introduction of much narrower gauges than are now prevailing. They are cheaper in proportion to the gauge—that is, a three-foot will cost only half as much as a six-foot, and the running expenses are also greatly less. It is time something of this kind were tried in this country. The dead weight on railroad prosperity is in the needless dead weight of cars and engines.

THE statistics regarding hydrophobia, which have recently been collected by M. Bouley for the Academy of Sciences, present a few interesting figures which our readers will be glad to read. M. Bouley had the history of 320 persons bitten by rabid animals. Of these 320 cases 129 had symptoms of hydrophobia, all of whom died. In 123 cases no such symptoms followed. There were 68 cases not reported.

More young persons between the ages of 5 and 15 are bitten than of other ages, and it is interesting to know that at this age the bites are less frequently followed by the disease. There are more cases recorded of bites in April, May and June than other months, but the difference is trifling.

The length of time before symptoms appear varies considerably. Of 109 cases 76 had symptoms in less than 60 days. In the 33 other cases it varied from 60 to 240 days. The symptoms appear in persons from 3 to 20 years of age in 44 days, while in those older they average 75 days. The duration of the disease in 74 out of 90 cases was less than 4 days, and in a majority of cases terminated in 2 or 3 days.

WITH God time has no succession; that which is past is not as if it were gone, and that which is future is not to come.

The Farm and Garden.

FERTILIZERS AND HIGH CULTURE

We have received a copy of the admirable address of J. M. Sutherlin, Esq., of Greenville, Alabama, to the Agricultural and Mechanical Association of Butler county, on fertilizers, which treats the subject so clearly, and presents so many valuable suggestions as to the character and application of manures to most economically secure the greatest results from their use, that we regret a want of space to give the paper in full to our readers. We cannot, however, pass it without calling a few passages that cannot fail to strike the attention of planters as being worthy of careful consideration.

Mr. Sutherlin advances two excellent ideas as to the way in which a developed and improved system of agriculture, suited to the new order of things, shall be secured:

1. Agricultural literature must be established, encouraged and supported, so that in every planter's house an agricultural periodical shall be considered more indispensable than a political paper.

2. Agricultural associations must be formed in every county and taken an interest in by the planters themselves, and encouragement given for model farming in the various districts of the country.

Such means, he truly says, will "stimulate both practical ingenuity and scientific zeal to give their best efforts to this most valuable branch of national industry."

That the people are waking up to the value of both these propositions is evinced by the number of State, sectional and county agricultural fairs which, in the last year or two, have been held throughout the South, where, in former times, such assemblages were scarcely known; and by the great number of more or less able journals, devoted to agricultural topics, which have sprung up throughout the country. We have practical evidence of the interest in agricultural literature in the vast increase of circulation of the Register, since we have devoted no inconsiderable space and amount of attention to agricultural, horticultural and kindred subjects.

As akin to the subject of fertilizing, and in fact essential to securing the full value of fertilizers, Mr. Sutherlin throws in these sensible words on deep plowing:

It has been too often the custom merely to scratch the surface three or four inches deep, leaving undisturbed the under portion of the fields. It may be taken for granted that where this is done year by year the land will become exhausted in a comparatively short time. The amount of nourishment contained in the upper and pulverized bed is drawn off, and there is therefore nothing left for the growth of the crop required. To get the full strength from the land two things are essential: First, plowing must be deep; and, second, the ground must be thoroughly broken up, so as to render it easily penetrated by the roots of the plants. It must be obvious, to any one who thinks for a moment on the subject, that twelve inches deep of soil will yield three times the amount of nourishment that four inches will, and that eighteen inches will yield still more by one-half than twelve inches.

And of large farms he says:

I am satisfied that the time has gone by for large and half cultivated plantations. We must concentrate our energies and our resources on comparatively small tracts of land. We will thus require less labor, less mule force, and have less stock to purchase and support. If we make one hundred acres of land produce as much as four hundred acres have generally done under the old system, we will have given the agriculture of the South a new lease of life, which must tell upon every other interest of the community at large. I have long been satisfied that we can do this, and the experiments I have lately made with fertilizers has confirmed this opinion.

In order to show the superiority of a thorough system of culture with fertilizers, and a comparatively small body of land, over the old system of a large body of land of first-rate quality, under the most favorable conditions, I will now give you my experience, fully and fairly carried out, with a desire to arrive at the best result of which both were capable:

I purchased a large plantation of eighteen hundred acres, about one-fourth of which I put in cultivation for cotton and corn, under the able superintendence of my partner in the concern, who has the reputation of being one of the best and most successful planters in the country. We had eighteen hands and thirteen mules for working it, and laid down about two hundred and fifty acres of excellent land in cotton. The season was favorable, and neither worms nor rust affected the crop. We obtained sixty bales of cotton as the result, and I believe this is a fair average return under the old system.

Let us now look at the other side of the question. I tried the experiment with sixty-seven acres of poor land, cultivated it with four mules and four hands, with some additional help in picking, fertilized with $910 worth of manure, and obtained a crop of fifty bales of cotton. This, however, does not end the comparison: the cost of the land in one case, say two hundred and fifty acres, involved an outlay of $3,125 in purchase money; in the other case the quality of land cultivated could have been got at $5 per acre in any agricultural district, being a total of $335.

Reverting to fertilizers, he says:

"It is, I think, obvious to every one, who thinks on the subject, that fertilizers are now a necessity for this country.

"The system of planting hitherto pursued of exhausting the ground, and returning nothing to it, has necessitated a change in this direction, and more especially is this necessary if we are to get the highest yield from our lands of which they are capable."

Further on he gives the results of his experiments with manures. He has used eleven different kinds, mostly commercial fertilizers, and found that a compost of compound acid phosphate of lime, cotton seed and stable manure produced the most favorable results, cost being considered. He says:

"Crushed cotton seed alone gave the poorest yield, while the cotton seed meal, with the oil extracted, gave double the amount of cotton, as compared with crushed cotton seed."

We are greatly in favor of home-made manures, and if stable manure enough could be produced, nothing better could be found. In devising the manure made at the Mobile Oil Mills, the "Langdon," we sought to introduce the elements which, both in forcing quality (forwarding the crop) and in permanence, should make it most closely assimilate stable manures. Mr. Sutherlin closes his able address by urging the importance of having a State chemist to analyze our soils, and all commercial fertilizers, to enable the farmer to know what fertilizers are needed, and to secure purity in those sold in the market. We heartily unite with him in this.—Mobile Register, Dec. 25.

HEALTH HINTS.

THE majority of people pay little attention to the cleanliness of the feet, and yet a square inch of the sole of the foot demands cleanliness, perfect cleanliness, more than any square foot of surface of the body, as far as health is concerned, because the "pores" are much larger there than anywhere else; so large indeed that they may be called "sluices" for carrying away the impurities of the system. Hence the bottom of the feet should be well washed and well rubbed every day.—Hall.

As soon as any soreness is felt in the ear, let three or four drops of tincture of aruica be poured in, and the orifice filled with a little cotton to exclude the air, and in a short time the pain is forgotten. If the arnica be not resorted to until there is actual pain, the cure may not be as speedy, but it is just as certain, although it may be necessary to repeat the application. It is a preventive for gatherings in the ear, which is the usual cause of earache.

THE cause of pneumonia is the application of cold in some form or other to the body, and "settling" on the lungs. Remaining still in a chilly condition an hour or two, getting chilled during sleep, going from a warm room, especially after having been there for several hours, into a cold, raw, damp, out-door air, especially if the wind is blowing against the person—these are the most frequent causes of the dangerous disease. Tens of thousands of cases could be prevented every year by observing two simple precautions while out of doors: First, keep the mouth resolutely shut on going out, so as to send the air to the lungs by the circuit of the head, thus warming it before it gets there; second, keep in motion brisk enough to keep off a feeling of chilliness.—Hall.

Rooms heated by a stove—either coal or wood—should be provided with a water vessel, and if this is not the case, a temporary reservoir must be furnished. Where water for evaporation is not provided, the heated or dry air of the room, having great avidity for moisture, seizes it wherever it can be found—drying the skin, parching the mouth and throat, and shrinking the furniture and wood-work of our houses till they leave great gaps at all the joints. To be agreeable and healthy, the air of our living rooms in winter, which are warmed by artificial means, should be charged with moisture nearly to the dew-point, or, in other words, to such a degree that if it should become a little cooler, moisture would be deposited, as the dew is on the cooling which generally follows the decline of the sun.

"GOD often acts upon a soul through a stranger."

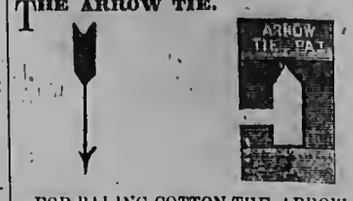
THE ARROW TIE.



FOR BALING COTTON THE ARROW TIE is the most popular, being the best Cotton Tie in use.

Planters and Cotton Press men everywhere prefer it to all others.

THE ARROW TIE

was used to cover MORE THAN HALF THE CROP OF 1869, giving entire satisfaction.

The patentee and manufacturer of the celebrated ARROW TIE, J. J. McComb, formerly of New Orleans, now residing in Liverpool, having control of the best and most extensive Rolling Mills in Europe, is constantly importing large stocks of this popular Tie, manufactured of the very best quality of English Iron, to meet the increasing demand for it throughout all the Cotton States.

Planters can buy or order the ARROW TIE of all dealers in Iron Ties, and of country merchants generally, at the lowest market price; and we respectfully solicit the patronage of Planters and Factors everywhere.

BRACES AND TRUSSES.—DR. JOHN G. BANGELL informs the medical profession and others that he has constantly on hand and for sale a complete assortment of BANNING'S TRUSSES, Spinal and Shoulder Braces, and other appliances for the prevention, relief and cure of general debility, vocal weakness and derangements of public speakers and singers, palpitation of the heart, bronchitis and weakness of the lungs, spinal weakness and deformity, dyspepsia and nervous affections, constipation and chronic diarrhea, female derangements and extreme displacements of the womb, RUPTURE, PILES, prolapsus-ani, and weakness of the male and female system.

These light, cool and springy auxiliaries are the special favorites of the profession, are intensely common-sense and rational in their action; supply a missing link in treatment; place the above affections in new and more hopeful light, and often complete cures where medicine can only mitigate, and more than it can cure a hernia or a dislocated joint.

He specially desires an examination of these appliances by the profession and sufferers. Where necessary the professional application of the above braces will be under our supervision or that of the family physician.

These valuable appliances are sanctioned by a large number of the medical profession in the United States and Europe as the best adapted to fulfill the purpose for which they are intended, and the Trusses and Braces are adopted by the United States government for the use of the army and navy. Terms cash. Consultations free. Send for their pamphlet—it is better to call.

THE BOTTOMS HORSE POWER GIN GEAR.

This Power is now put up in three different forms—stationary, movable and mounted on wheels—all having the same action and capacity, differing only in peculiar movements and arrangements, all of which are covered by patents and caveats. Models and Patents of the same may be seen by all interested by calling on me at the St. Charles Hotel; and to any one desiring to enter, with a small capital, a new business, which will yield a sure fortune, I will give undoubted and unparalleled inducements, if immediate application is made.

CONFIDENTIAL TO MINISTERS.

Make no apologies. If you have the Lord's message, declare it; if not, hold your peace. Have short prefaces and introductions. Say your best things first and stop before you get prosy. Do not spoil the appetite for dinner by too much thin soup. Leave yourself out of the pulpit, and take Jesus in. Defend the gospel, and let the Lord defend you and your character.

Do not get excited too soon. Do not run away from your hearers. Engine driving wheels whirl fast on an icy track, but when they draw anything they go slower. It takes a cold hammer to bend hot iron. Heat up the people, but keep the hammer wet and cool. Do not bawl and scream. Too much water stops mill wheels, and too much noise drowns sense. Empty vessels ring the loudest. Powder is not shot. Thunder is harmless; lightning kills.

If you have lightning you can afford to thunder. Do not scold the people. Do not abuse the faithful souls who come to meeting on rainy days, because others are too lazy to attend. Preach the best to the smallest assemblies. Jesus preached to one woman at the well, and she got all Samaria out to hear him next time.

Do not repeat sentences, saying, "As I said before;" if you said it before, say something else after. Do not end sentences, passages of Scripture, or quotations with "and so forth;" say what you mean and stop. Leave out all words you cannot define. Stop preaching and talk to folks. Come down from your stilted ways and sacred tones, and become as a "little child." Tell stories; Jesus did, and the common people heard him gladly. Relate your experience; Paul did, and you can hardly do better than he. One fact that you have seen or felt is worth a bushel of moldy ideas dug out of moldier books. Change the subject if it goes hard. Do not preach till the middle of your sermon, but let the beginning, and is buried by the end. Beware of long prayers, except in your closet. When weariness begins, devotion ends. Look people in the face, and live so you are not ashamed of them.

It is easier to run a saw-mill with a full pond than an empty one. Be moderate at first. Hoist the gate a little way; when you are half way through, raise it more; when you are nearly done, put on the full head of water. Aim at the mark; hit it! Stop and look where the shot struck, then fire another broadside. Pack your sermons. Make your words like bullets. A board hurts a man most when it strikes edgewise. Make your discourse proportionate. If it is deep and strong, the stream may run longer. Do not think every brook is deep because you cannot see the bottom of it, nor call a man a deep diver because he always brings up mud. Ventilate your meeting room. Sleeping in church is due to bad air oftener than bad manners.

If you are lied about, thank the devil for putting you on your guard, and take care that the story shall never come true. Do not grumble about your pay. If you want more money, go to work and earn it.—Western Christian Advocate.

The way of Christian life is a genuine path laid out by Christ himself. We are to do our duty gladly; the first duty first, the rest duly in order, according to requirement of occasion and circumstance. Just as, when a sailor signs articles of agreement for a voyage, no day's programme is made out, but he expects to be ready for every emergency, so are we bound in agreement to Christ. We come into such relationship of obedience to him that we shall more delight to think that he is working through us his own sacred plans than we could in bold independence delight in the success of our most audacious ambitions and plans of self-aggrandizement.

Luther, writing of the men of his own time, says these strong words that might well apply to the present: "All men now presume to criticise the gospel. Almost every old doting fool and prating sophist must, forsooth, be a doctor in divinity. All other arts and sciences have masters, of whom people must learn, and rules and regulations which must be observed and obeyed; the holy Scriptures only, God's word, must be subject to each man's pride and presumption; hence so many sects, seducers and offenses.'

Divine Shelter.—Somewhere in the East there is a tree which is a non-conductor of electricity. The people know it, and when a storm comes they flee toward it for safety. Beautiful picture of the Saviour! Beautiful emblem of the tree on Calvary! It is a non-conductor of wrath. Get underneath it, and you are safe—safe forever.—Rev. Thomas Jones.

HOUSEKEEPERS' DEPARTMENT.

English Christmas Plum Pudding. In English cookery the plum pudding stands as their crowning glory, and of English puddings the Christmas plum pudding is the queen. We are in fault not to have borne this in mind for last week's article. We acknowledge our remissness, and make all the amends in our power by supplying, "the day after the fair," several well tried and cordially approved receipts by the true lovers of puddings. They are of various degrees of richness.

A Simple Christmas Pudding.—Six ounces of finely chopped suet, six ounces of Malaga raisins, stoned and chopped; eight ounces of well cleaned and dried currants, three ounces of fine bread crumbs, three ounces of flour, three well beaten eggs, the sixth part of a nutmeg, grated, half a teaspoonful each of cinnamon, cloves and mace, four ounces of sugar, half a teaspoonful of salt, half a pint of milk, one ounce of candied orange or lemon peel, and the same of citron, all sliced thin. Beat all together thoroughly; pour into a pudding bag or mold; put into boiling water, and keep it boiling six hours. Serve with sauce to suit your taste.

The Nonpareil Plum Pudding.—Half a pound of raisins, stoned and chopped; half a pound of currants, well cleaned and dried; a quarter of a pound each of candied orange and lemon peel, sliced thin; half a grated nutmeg, half a teaspoonful of cinnamon, half a teaspoonful of salt, the grated rind of two fresh lemons, the juice of one, one pound of fine bread crumbs, three-quarters of a pound of finely-shred fresh suet, half a pound of powdered sugar, two glasses each of brandy and wine, and seven eggs. First beat the eggs very stiff, yelks and whites separately; then add the spices, the salt, and the peels; then the sugar, raisins and currants; next the crumbs and suet; last the lemon juice, brandy and wine; beat all together very smooth; pour into a pudding-cloth, bag or mold, and boil six hours. Serve with wine, hard sauce, or any that suits the taste of those who are to eat it.

A Good Christmas Plum Pudding.—One pound of clean, dry currants, half a pound of the best raisins, stoned; mix these with one pound of bread crumbs, half a pound of fine flour, and one pound and a half of finely-shred suet; add a quarter of a pound of sifted sugar, one grated nutmeg, a drachm of cinnamon, two drachms of cloves, half a dozen almonds, pounded, and an ounce each of candied orange and lemon, sliced thin; mix all these materials thoroughly together in a bowl, with a glass of brandy, and one of sherry; then beat six eggs very light, and slowly stir them in till all is well blended; cover the bowl, and let the mixture stand for twelve hours. Then pour it into a pudding-bag, and tie it not very tight, leaving room for it to swell; or fill a pudding-mold not quite two-thirds full; lay a clean cloth over the top, and shut the cover over tightly, to exclude all water; put the bag or mold into boiling water; keep it covered, and keep it boiling all the time, for six hours. Serve with sugar, sifted over, and wine sauce. Brandy is usually sent in with a Christmas pudding, to be poured over the whole pudding, or over each slice, then lighted, and served while burning.

A Family Christmas Pudding.—Beat up four eggs very light, (which always means yelks and whites beaten separately;) add to the yelks, after beating, a quarter of a teaspoonful each of ginger, nutmeg, grated lemon peel and salt; four ounces of sugar, half a pound of well cleaned and dried currants, one pound of flour, half a pound of well shred and chopped suet; and beat all this up thoroughly, adding the whites last. Wine or brandy, or both may be added, if one has no scruples about using them in cooking; but the pudding will be good without this addition. Tie it in a cloth or pudding-bag, or put it into a mold, and boil six hours. Serve with any good sauce.

In boiling puddings of all kinds the cloth should be dipped in hot water before the batter is put in, or the mold be well buttered. Any of these Christmas puddings may be kept for a month after boiling, if the cloth in which they are boiled be replaced by a clean one, and the pudding be hung up to the ceiling of a kitchen, or in a warm storeroom. When wanted, they will require one hour's boiling to heat them through, as all such puddings should be sent to the table hot.—Christian Union.

A Child's Reply.—A little boy, on asking his father to allow him to be baptized, was told that he was too young, that he might fall back, when he was only a little boy. To this he made the touching reply: "Jesus has promised to carry the lambs in his arms; as I am only a little boy it will be easier for Jesus to carry me."

BOOKS AND STATIONERY.

STANDARD EDUCATIONAL WORKS

Guyot's Geographical Text-Books.

"Incomparably superior to anything published."—Agassiz.

Introduction to the Study of Geography.
Elementary Geography.
Intermediate Geography.
Common School Geography.

Guyot's System is approved and indorsed by the most distinguished literary and scientific men of our nation; such as Profs. Agassiz, Dana, Tenney, Henry and others, celebrated in science throughout Europe as well as at home.

The fact that ONE MILLION (1,000,000) copies of the work are in use in the schools of our country, at the present time, is proof of the unparalleled success attending the New System, for no other series of books ever published in America have ever secured so rapid and extensive introduction. They are the text-books in nearly all the colleges, seminaries, normal schools, etc., in the United States; in the public schools of the cities of New York, Brooklyn, Rochester, and most of the cities and towns of the Eastern States; Cincinnati, Cleveland, Columbus, Springfield, Toledo, Marietta, and most of the other important towns and cities, numbering nine thousand schools in Ohio, and hundreds of towns and cities in the other Western States, while in the Southern States and California they are being extensively adopted.

Believing that the publication of Professor Guyot's series has marked a new and better era in the presentation of geographical science, that by it the pupils of this generation will obtain a clearer, more definite and exalted knowledge of the world on which they live, and that it is so systematized as to render that knowledge more valuable and permanent, we commend it to the attention of all interested in educational improvements and progress.

SCHOOLS AND COLLEGES.

FLORENCE WESLEYAN UNIVERSITY,

FLORENCE, ALABAMA.

W. H. ANDERSON, D. D., PRESIDENT.

This Institution of learning, so widely known through the South, will begin its next session on WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 14, 1870.

The Faculty is composed of men of experience and ability. The course of study is comprised in the Literary Department, Law Department, Department of Biblical Literature and Commercial Department. The advantages of this University are seen in its healthful and attractive location, thorough course of study, excellent discipline, the character and success of its instructors, and the reasonable rates at which board and tuition are furnished.

Licentiates in the ministry and sons of ministers in the regular work are admitted to recitation on paying the incidental fees.

EXPENSES PER SESSION OF FIVE MONTHS.

Tuition in the University classes	$30 00
Tuition in Grammar School	25 00
Tuition in Law Department	40 00
Incidental fee	2 00
(Tuition and incidental fee required in advance.)
Chemical fee, paid once	5 00

Boarding can be had in the best families at from $16 to $20 per month.

For particulars see circular, or apply to the president, Rev. Dr. Anderson, or to Hon. W. B. Wood. GEO. W. FOSTER, jy21 4t President Board of Trustees.

TUSKEGEE FEMALE COLLEGE,

TUSKEGEE, ALABAMA.

The Fifteenth Annual Session begins SEPTEMBER 15, 1870, and continues forty weeks; divided into two equal terms.

REV. GEO. W. F. PRICE, M. A., President.
REV. B. B. ROSS, M. A., Professor of Latin and Mathematics.
DR. S. M. BARTLETT, Director of Music, with Nine Assistants in the various departments of instruction and discipline.

The president calls particular attention to the fact that Rev. B. B. Ross, of the Alabama Conference, has accepted the professorship of Latin and Mathematics in the institution. Brother Ross is a graduate of Lagrange College, Alabama. He was professor of Mixed Mathematics in that institution for two years. Subsequently he was president of Talladega Female Institute. His classical education, his experience in the practical business of teaching, his acceptable career of itinerant service, his many excellent personal traits, all entitle him to the unlimited confidence of our people.

The College has just closed a most successful year. Its prospects were never more flattering. The present organization of the institution combines all the best features for securing the thorough instruction and efficient discipline of its pupils. The Faculty contains none but tried and trained teachers, whose success has been tested by years of service. The boarding arrangements are under the immediate control of the president, who resides in the building, and supervises the social recreations and the professional duties of the pupils. The health of the girls is in charge of an experienced matron. The table, kitchen and laundry are in care of a thoroughly trained housekeeper. Miss Shelley, of Talladega, is the governess, and brings to the office high social position, experience as a teacher, liberal education, and matured Christian character. The pupils are trained in gymnastic and calisthenic exercises, thereby developing their physical powers, strengthening their constitutions, and imparting grace and dignity to their movements. Religion is the basis of the system of education, and girls are taught that "the truth as it is in Jesus" is the highest attainable wisdom.

CHARGES FOR SCHOLASTIC YEAR OF FORTY WEEKS.

Tuition, according to grade, from $25 to	$60 00
Tuition in music	60 00
Tuition in art, from $20 to	40 00

jy3t 1m President.

WESLEYAN FEMALE INSTITUTE,

STAUNTON, VIRGINIA,

will begin its next session September 20, 1870, and close June 22, 1871.

REV. WILLIAM A. HARRIS, President.
With Thirteen Professors, Teachers, etc., etc.

Than this no College for Young Ladies ranks higher. System of teaching like that pursued in the University of Virginia. French is taught by a native master of the language. Professor in Department of Music has no superior in any school; among others, is assisted by the distinguished vocalist, Madam Bertha Ruhl. This is one of the healthiest climates in America, and young ladies who come here from the South with feeble constitutions are entirely restored to health. The grounds are large and beautiful; buildings stately and elegant, fanned by the purest breezes, overlooking the entire city, and commanding the most magnificent rural and mountain scenery for thirty miles along the beautiful Valley of Virginia, making it one of the most delightful college homes in the Union.

(From Judge John N. Hendren, M. A., University of Virginia.)

I regard the Wesleyan Female Institute in this place, under the management of Rev. William A. Harris, as one of the very best and most attractive schools in the State. * *

(From Hon. John B. Baldwin.)

The Wesleyan Female Institute is surrounded by influences which make it in all respects a most desirable place for the care and education of the daughters of Christian parents.

(From Prof. William E. Peters, LL. D., University of Virginia.)

Young ladies committed to the care of Prof. Harris will enjoy advantages of an intellectual and moral training rarely found.

(From Rev. William E. Munsey, D. D.)

* * * From personal knowledge I believe that as the president of a female college Rev. William A. Harris has no superior; indeed within the purview of my acquaintance he has no equal.

(From Bishop E. M. Marvin, D. D.)

The Wesleyan Female Institute is an honor to the church. Instruction is thorough. All classes stand high. In music advantages are offered of a very high order. The most talented professors are employed, and neither pains nor expense are spared to make this department eminent. The school is very prosperous, and deserves to be so.

TERMS FOR THE ENTIRE SCHOLASTIC YEAR. Board and tuition in the Collegiate Course, $225. Music and other extra studies moderate.

SCHOOLS AND COLLEGES.

LOUISIANA STATE UNIVERSITY,

(Name changed from Louisiana State Seminary.)

BATON ROUGE, LOUISIANA.

Founded and supported by the State of Louisiana.

The fifth session, now in progress, will close last Wednesday in June, 1870. The next session will begin first Monday in September next, and will continue ten months.

The Academic Board consists of a full corps of able instructors in all branches of literature and science usually taught in the best Colleges and Universities.

The Course of Study embraces a Preparatory and an Academic Department, including a Literary, Scientific and Optional Course, a Special School of Civil Engineering and a Commercial School.

Library, Apparatus and Cabinets are well selected and valuable. The Geological and Mineralogical Cabinets, etc., are largest and most complete in the South, containing the extensive collections of the late Co. Wailes, of Mississippi, and the Cabinets of the Topographical, Geological and Botanical Surveys of Louisiana.

Admission granted to cadets not under fifteen years of age, who know arithmetic, English grammar and geography.

Expenses of every kind, except clothing, for ten months, $300; $200 payable in advance, balance February 1; or by accepted draft, at eight per cent. for ninety days. Payments may be made through the Canal or Citizens' Bank.

Cadets received at any time during the session and charged from date of entrance.

Discipline, military, with daily drill. A battery of four guns will afford facilities for instruction in artillery. Uniform of cadet: Gray cloth, to be had at the institution at a cost of $25 per suit.

For further information address
D. F. BOYD, Superintendent,
Baton Rouge, La.

Office of the University in New Orleans, at Swarbrick & Co.'s, 50 Camp street.

Until the rebuilding of the College edifice, lately destroyed by fire, near Alexandria, the institution is temporarily located at Baton Rouge, in the Deaf and Dumb Asylum. Location very healthy, and accommodations ample for a large number of cadets. Number this session, 170. je11 4m

VIRGINIA FEMALE INSTITUTE,

STAUNTON, VIRGINIA.

REV. R. H. PHILLIPS, M. A., Principal.

With Nineteen Assistants.

The Twenty-sixth annual session will open SEPTEMBER 14, 1870.

From over a thousand testimonials from Southern patrons we select the following, from General Robert E. Lee, president of Washington College; General Francis H. Smith, president of the Virginia Military Institute, and General W. N. Pendleton, Lexington, Virginia:

"We, the undersigned, have had daughters educated at the Virginia Female Institute, in Staunton, under the care of Rev. R. H. Phillips. They therefore know it to be an admirably conducted and superior institution for young ladies, and they cordially recommend it to favor, even beyond its past extensive patronage. R. E. LEE,
FRANCIS H. SMITH.
WM. N. PENDLETON.

HOMER COLLEGE.

The scholastic exercises of the Fall Session of this College, located at Homer, Louisiana, under the care of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, will begin on the FIRST TUESDAY of September next.

FACULTY.

Rev. J. E. Conn, President and Professor of Mental and Moral Science, Greek Language and Literature.
J. W. Nicholson, Professor of Pure and Mixed Mathematics, and Natural Science.
——, Professor of Civil Engineering.
A. C. Calhoun, A. B., Adjunct Professor of Languages and English Literature.
The Preparatory Department is under the care of all the Faculty.

TERMS PER SESSION OF FIVE MONTHS.

Tuition in Collegiate Department	$15 00
Preparatory studies	$15 00 and 20 00
Contingent fee	1 50

Board in private families, per month, $14. Board with room furnished, $15.

Total expenses for board and tuition will range from $85 to $105 per session, while the course of studies is as full and thorough as that of any college in the land.

Active measures have been taken for a full and permanent endowment.

For health and association it is believed that the location cannot be surpassed.

It is the aim of the Trustees to place Homer College in the front rank.

For further particulars address

STONEWALL INSTITUTE,

Thirteen Miles North of Selma, Ala.

This School for Boys opens its sixth annual session OCTOBER 3, 1870.

D. C. H. CONNERLY, Principal and Teacher of Languages.
JOHN P. SEABROOK, Teacher of Mathematics.

But few schools accomplish as much for its pupils as this does.

It is in the quiet country. Its teachers give instruction nine hours per day, including two at night.

The Institute belongs entirely to the Principal.

Two Hundred and Sixty Dollars will cover nine months' board, tuition and washing.

Transportation from Selma to the Institute on every Wednesday and Saturday in October to the twenty-second, free of charge.

ROANOKE COLLEGE, SALEM, VA.

Next Session Begins September 5.

This Institution has a full corps of instructors, a thorough course of studies, and aims at a high grade of scholarship. Its superior educational advantages, moderate expenses, healthy location, and excellent mail, traveling and telegraphic facilities, render it well worthy the attention and patronage of the South.

Expenses for session of ten months, about.....$210 00

This estimate includes board and tuition, embracing modern languages. A slight advance on the above for students boarding in private families.

For further particulars, catalogues, etc., address REV. D. F. BITTLE, D. D.,
jy16 3m President of the College.

TENNESSEE FEMALE COLLEGE,

FRANKLIN, TENNESSEE.

Fall Session for 1870 Begins Monday September 5.

The claims of this institution rest on the style, extent and thoroughness of the culture it bestows. The climate is favorable for study, the only magic that makes scholars.

It refers to its patrons, including distinguished educators and gentlemen eminent in the pulpit and in the professions.

Catalogues sent on application.

VINEGAR.—HOW MADE FROM CIDER, Wine, Molasses or Sorghum, in ten hours, without using drugs. For circular address
F. I. SAGE,
au27 1y Vinegar Maker Cromwell, Ct.

NEW ORLEANS MARKETS.

From the N. O. Price Current.

We have no further improvement to notice in the general market. The revival anticipated in several branches of the wholesale trade has not been realized, and business has been on a limited scale. The better descriptions of sugar and molasses have been in good request at firm prices, but the poorer qualities have been neglected, and ruled in favor of buyers. The export demand for flour has subsided. Corn has been in active demand, and the receipts have met a ready sale at advanced prices.

Cotton.—The following are the arrivals since the thirteenth instant:

Louisiana and Mississippi..... bales..	24,490
Lake.....	83
Arkansas.....	2,616
Mobile.....	1,030
Texas.....	173
Total.....	28,452

On Saturday, owing to moderate supplies and an active demand, factors were enabled to realize prices ¼c. higher for middling, while the lower grades were, if anything, easier, low middling closing at 13⅞ to 14¼c., middling at 14¾ to 15c., and strict middling at 15⅛ to 15¼c. The sales embraced 6,350 bales. On Monday, under the stimulating influence of decidedly favorable accounts from Liverpool and New York, the movement commenced with an active demand and at higher rates, some sales being made during the morning at an advance of ⅜c., but later in the day prices were manifestly less buoyant, and the closing rates showed a net improvement of only ⅛ to ¼c., good ordinary being quoted at 13⅝ to 13⅞c., low middling at 14⅛ to 14⅜c., middling at 14⅞ to 15c., and strict middling at 15¼ to 15⅜c. The demand was active, and the business summed up 12,700 bales, which is next to the largest day's business reported this year. On Tuesday the market opened under the depressing influence of reports of heavy receipts in all the ports, which was subsequently increased by a decline of ⅛c. at New York, and a falling off in both foreign and domestic exchange. The demand was consequently much less active, and although factors gave way to nearly the extent of Monday's advance, yet the movement continued languid throughout the day, and the sales were confined to 6,350 bales.

This makes an aggregate for the past three days of 25,100 bales.

The receipts at this port since the first of September (exclusive of the arrivals from Mobile, Florida and Texas) are 627,077 bales, against 543,083 bales to the same date last year, and the increase in the receipts at all the ports, up to the latest dates, as compared with last year, is 315,227 bales. In the exports from the United States to foreign countries, as compared with the same dates last year, there is an increase of 413,791 bales to Great Britain, 20,991 to other foreign ports, and a decrease of 133,218 to France.

Referring to our remarks above, we quote as follows:

Ordinary.....	12 to 12½
Good ordinary.....	13¾ to 13⅞
Low middling.....	14 to 14¼
Middling.....	14¾ to 15
Strict middling.....	15¼ to 15⅜

Sugar.—The market has been firmer since our last review, with a fair demand and a tendency in prices to outside figures. The sales on Saturday and Monday embraced 1,500 hogsheads, nearly all the supplies in first hands, at 5 to 5¼c. per pound for inferior, 6 to 6⅛c. for common, 7½ to 8c. for fair to good fair, 8¼ to 8¾c. for fully fair, 9 to 9⅛c. for prime, 10c. for strictly prime, 7 to 9½c. for seconds, 10½ to 11⅛c. for yellow clarified, and 11¼ to 12¾c. for white.

Flour.—The market has been dull since our last review. Prices for the lower grades were firmer, however, owing to light supplies of those descriptions.

Monetary.—Gold, 110⅜ to 110½.

American silver half dollars, 107 to 108, and Mexican dollars at 1¼ to 1½ per cent. premium in gold.

The sales of warrants include $600 new State on Saturday at 69½, and $600 at the extreme rate of 73; and $3,000 same on Tuesday at 69½, and $1,000 do. at 70. Dealers have bought new State at 68, Metropolitan Police at 97½, and asked 69 to 70 for the former, and 98 for the latter.

City Treasury notes are quoted at 21½ to 25 per cent. discount.

$3 WATCH!.....$3 WATCH!

THE GREAT EUROPEAN

Eureka Aluminum Gold Watch Co.

HAVE APPOINTED

L. V. DEFOREST & CO., JEWELERS,

40 and 42 Broadway, New York,

SOLE AGENTS FOR THE U. STATES,

and have authorized them to sell their great Eureka Aluminum Gold Watches for $3, and to warrant each and every one to keep correct time for one year. This Watch we guarantee to be the best and cheapest timekeeper that is now in use in any part of the globe. The works are in double cases, Ladies' and Gent's size, and are beautifully chased. The cases are made of the metal now so widely known in Europe as Aluminum Gold. It has the exact color of gold, which it always retains; it will stand the test of the strongest acids; no one can tell it from gold only by weight, the Aluminum Gold being 1-10 lighter. The works are made by machinery, same as the well known American Watch. The Aluminum is a cheap metal, hence we can afford to sell the Watch for $3 and make a small profit. We pack the Watch safely in a small box and send it by mail to any part of the United States on receipt of $3.50—fifty cents for packing and postage. Address all orders to

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 19.—House.—A bill providing for the consolidation of the Indian tribes was introduced. The object is to bring all the Indians under one government, and to bring the Indians of the plains under the influence of civilized Indians. The discussion indicated that the friends of the bill oppose the Indians being independent of the Federal government. The bill went over to Tuesday.

The bill defining swamp lands was made the special order for the first of February.

Consideration of appropriations was then resumed.

Senate.—The bill abolishing the rank of admiral and vice admiral of the navy, when vacancies occur, passed.

A bill was introduced providing cheap transportation for breadstuffs from the West to the East, making the rate uniform throughout the year.

The resolution for a special committee to investigate the President's message and army reports regarding the condition of the South passed.

An executive session of four hours resulted in the confirmation of the anti-Schurz Missouri candidates.

The bill granting subsidies to steamship lines was made the special order for Friday next.

The bill for cheap transportation provides that the United States government shall aid the construction of the Portland, Rutland, Oswego and Chicago railroad by a loan of six per cent. thirty-year bonds to the amount of $50,000 per mile for its whole extent from Portland to Chicago. The road is to be a double track road, and furnished with steel rails and iron bridges. The Postmaster General is to establish the rates of transportation for freight and passengers.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 24.—Senate.—The territorial bill was referred to the conference committee.

Mr. Blair's credentials were presented.

Forty thousand dollars has been appropriated to defray the expenses of the outrage committee.

The bill to aid the construction of the Atlantic and Great Western canal was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

The death of Senator Norton was announced.

House.—Mr. Socorker, member elect from Georgia, was seated after a debate, Mr. Butler leading the opposition, and alleging outrages had been committed. The motion to refer was lost by a vote of 148 to 41.

A protest from the Cincinnati underwriters against the Cincinnati and Newport bridge was presented.

A bill was introduced to make Shreveport, Louisiana, a port of delivery.

The House went into committee on the appropriations amendment, that no part of the secret service fund shall be used for the Dominican commission — failed. House adjourned.

HARTFORD, CT., Jan. 24.—David Lyman, president of the air line railroad, is dead.

NEW YORK, Jan. 24.—A house was burned in Bergen by the explosion of a lamp containing DeSoto oil. A woman and child were badly burned.

NEW YORK, Jan. 24.—The mails have been much retarded by a heavy snow storm. The Erie mails and late Hudson river mails have not arrived. The Boston mails are two hours behind, and the Southern mails one hour late.

ST. LOUIS, Jan. 24.—The Kansas Legislature has before it a bill to restore the ballot to disfranchised persons by reason of participation in the war. It will probably pass.

ST. JOHNS, Jan. 24.—The cable between Placentia and St. Pierre has failed, but will not interfere with the European business; that goes direct from St. Pierre to Brest, France.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 25.—House.—The bill defining the meaning of the twenty-sixth section of the act to reduce taxation passed and goes to the President. Among other things it makes the duty on imported spirits uniform at $2.

Sundry pension bills passed; also a bill for the disposal of useless military reservations; also granting the right of way through Pensacola military reservation to the Pensacola and Barrancas railroad.

Senate.—Mr. Blair was seated. He was appointed on the Committee on Pacific Railroads and the Education and Labor Committee.

The bill for the repeal of the income tax was discussed. The balance of the day was occupied by Messrs. Fenton and Conkling, discussing the New York customhouse.

FOREIGN.

LONDON, Jan. 17.—Special to the London Times:

VERSAILLES, Jan. 17.—Bismarck has been ill, but is partially recovered.

Prussia is urgent for the assembling of the conference.

The bombardment of Paris proceeds slowly but steadily. The gunners systematically avoid firing buildings.

A flag of truce was sent into the city with news and letters.

A German dispatch, dated Brevillers, seventeenth, reports General Keller had occupied the towns of Frazier and Cambrier, taking the latter by surprise with three hundred prisoners.

The French afterward made a sharp attack on Chogrey, Betencourt and Frazier. General Keller maintained his position. The fighting continued three days, during which the Germans lost eleven hundred men.

A French brig, with provisions, was captured off Bordeaux by the German frigate Augusta.

LONDON, Jan. 17.—The conference met to-day, Earl Granville presiding. A communication relative to French representation was read, but no action was taken. Although the proceedings are kept strictly secret, it may be confidently stated that Russia formally declares in advance that the action of the conference must be without prejudice to the abrogation of the neutrality of the Black sea, which has already been accomplished by the acts of the Russian government. In regard to rumors of peace propositions being made at the conference, Bernstoff is under strict orders from the Russian government to oppose any introduction of the subject, or to withdraw from the convention, unless such overtures proceed directly from France.

VERSAILLES, Jan. 17.—A parlementaire came from Paris on the fifteenth. His object is a secret; but it is rumored that the Germans have agreed to an armistice for four days. This seems the only possible way of accounting for the almost total cessation of the firing on Paris. Rumors insist that the effect of the German fire on Paris is unequal to German expectations.

It is stated that a general attack will be organized to-morrow, to include St. Denis and Valerien.

It is said that General Trochu has decided to commence a series of sorties on the twentieth, to continue incessantly unless there is peace on French terms.

Montrouge was active on the fifteenth, and there was heavy firing at the north on the sixteenth.

There were several sorties on the fifteenth.

Thirty wounded mobiles were found frozen in the woods before Meudon.

LATEST.—Overtures of some kind have certainly been made, but there is good reason to believe that they have failed, as the announcement has been made that the bombardment will be commenced at once with increased violence.

LONDON, Jan. 20.—General Von Glumer telegraphs that his vanguard is in pursuit of Bourbaki's retreating army.

LONDON, Jan. 20, morning.—A Berlin correspondent of the London Telegraph writes that Count Bernstorf has been ordered to leave the conference if a discussion should arise upon the subject of the war with France.

Severe skirmishing reported in Franche Comte. The French claim to have gained some advantage.

LONDON, Jan. 20.—A correspondent of the Telegraph from Versailles reports on the nineteenth that the Germans have twenty-two batteries available against Paris. For the past two days, however, the bombardment has slackened, and for the past twenty-four hours has entirely ceased. It is believed that negotiations looking to peace are pending.

News has been received that on the twelfth, off Vigo, Spain, the Prussian corvette Augusta ran down a French gunboat. Four officers and twenty-six of the crew were captured.

It is said that Gambetta has asked Paladines to resume command of the army of the Loire.

LONDON, Jan. 21.—The conflagration at Longwy is confirmed.

The country around Valenciennes has been inundated on account of the approach of the Prussians.

The Mobilized Guard behaved badly at St. Quentin; fully fifteen thousand of them panicked.

A Cambrai dispatch, dated January 20, says there is a panic among the people, as the Germans are approaching.

General Faidherbe has gone to Douae, and General Favre to Lille. The whereabouts of one division of the army is unknown. Gambetta is at Lille.

A dispatch from Lille, dated the twenty-first, reports the utmost consternation. Women and children are fleeing from the town, and troops arriving are in a pitiable state.

Gambetta spoke, advising resistance to the bitter end; denounced the partisan and coward cry of peace or any terms; repudiated any desire on his part to form a dictatorship, and urged the people and army to duty, promising them final triumph.

Paris news of the seventeenth says Jules Favre is very sick.

The victims of the bombardment, killed and wounded, number forty-nine women, thirty-nine children and ninety-two men.

PARIS, Jan. 21.—In the great fight of the nineteenth instant, in front of Bezanval, General Bellemarie threw a large force into the forest at Bezanval. They were permitted to approach within less than two hundred yards of the looped wall, when from the top and slope issued from the Prussian infantry a terrible and deadly fire, which, in an incredibly short space, covered the ground with dead and wounded. It is impossible to ascertain the exact loss of the French.

It is admitted to have been the bloodiest day's fighting since the commencement of the siege. Corpses laid on the ground in front of Bezanval often as many as six together. As the mobiles and troops of the line were struggling in front of Bezanval, General Vinoy massed the nationals to act as a reserve, and to support the attacking forces. Shells only were used early in the day, and as these fell among the nationals they halted before going into action. The garrison have utterly lost faith in their generals and colonels, and run where they please rather than fight.

LONDON, Jan. 22.—Gambetta made another speech, in which he expressed confidence in Faidherbe. He announced fresh arrivals of beeves for the army of France.

Cambrai has been summoned to surrender.

The Germans are entering the departments of Calvades and Arne.

Bismarck declines to enter upon negotiations for Jules Favre's safe conduct to the conference.

Advices from Paris say General Trochu, at the council on Friday, stated that should the hope of outside assistance fail, it would be his duty to surrender the city, before the Germans destroyed the public buildings and fired the center of the city.

The Emperor telegraphs the Empress Augusta on the twenty-first: "The enemy yesterday entirely withdrew into Paris. The total French loss at St. Quentin is fifteen thousand. The enemy has withdrawn to Vallenciennes and Douae. We have reoccupied Cambrai."

LONDON, Jan. 23, 2.30 P. M.—Advices from inside of Paris to the twenty-first have been received. Great dissatisfaction and despondency prevailed in consequence of General Trochu's failure in his last effort to break through the lines of the enemy.

It was reported that a large and available force of artillery and infantry reserves took no part in the action. Trochu's policy was loudly denounced as weak and temporizing.

Bismarck, replying to Jules Favre's application for a safe conduct to the conference, says: Presuming that the authority of the provisional government had not been recognized by the French nation, the military government formerly allowed Favre to pass without prejudicing the question of recognition. It is now impossible to give Favre a safe conduct, because of his declaration that an invitation to take part in the conference would be a recognition of the republic.

In conclusion, Bismarck pointedly inquires whether it is advisable for Favre to proceed to London, since the interest at stake at Paris for Germany and France completely overshadows the Eastern question.

The number of deaths from smallpox weekly in Great Britain are said to average one hundred and fifty.

The Emperor telegraphs from Versailles to the Empress as follows: "The latest estimate of the French loss at St. Quentin is fifteen thousand men, including eleven thousand prisoners."

The Germans refused the request of the French for an armistice to bury their dead before Paris, because the application was merely verbal. The outposts have, however, mutually facilitated the removal of the wounded.

It is said the garrison of Paris would not renew the attack upon the Germans because General Trochu was apprised of General Chanzy's defeat.

Paris newspapers of the twentieth have been received. Letters say that the line of battle on the nineteenth reached from Montrout to Lacelle, and the French numbered one hundred thousand men, supported by a powerful force of artillery.

General Trochu, in his report, says: "The day, which commenced successfully, did not terminate as we could have wished. The enemy were at first surprised, but subsequently concentrated great masses of artillery and infantry, and at three o'clock in the afternoon our left receded. We resumed the offensive movement at nightfall, but were unable to hold the heights we had taken. The struggle was sanguinary. We have asked for an armistice."

6 P. M.—The attempt by the French from Longres to surprise the Germans at Chaumot has miscarried.

General Treskow, who has advanced from Beauquesne, is reported to have captured strong fortified works at Tailles Bailley and the village of Persons, in which five officers and eighty men were taken. German loss was considerable.

LONDON, Jan. 24, 5 A. M.—It is said Count Bernstorff has telegraphed to Versailles that the plenipotentiaries present at the first meeting of the conference are unanimous in their resolution to prevent the discussion of questions unconnected with the East.

BORDEAUX, Jan. 24.—The Prussians attacked Dijon yesterday, and were repulsed and beaten after a battle which lasted five hours. Ricciotti Garibaldi captured the flag of a Prussian line regiment.

The following dispatch has been received and made public by the government here:

LONDON, Jan. 24, 7 P. M.—The Germans are before Cambrai. They have established a siege.

The batteries at Ruinilly, near Garibaldi's operations, have been suspended in consequence of Bourbaki's retreat.

The Paris correspondent of the London Times, under date of the twenty-first, says: General Trochu is generally considered incompetent. The Council of Defense only failed to accept his resignation because they were unable to find a successor.

It is impossible to make the Parisians consider the question of surrendering. They are anxious to fight under competent leadership. The ration of flour is now a half pound daily per man. The poorest people receive bread gratis, with a pint of wine each and a little soup daily. The middle classes suffer most severely of all. Potatoes are sold at one franc apiece, and dog flesh is worth $1 per pound.

The Emperor William, in a letter to the Grand Duke of Baden, says: Germany, which has become strong through the unity of her princes and people, has recovered her former position in the council of nations. Germany neither wants nor is inclined to transgress her frontiers; she seeks only independence and mutual advancement and welfare of nations by the extension of her commerce.

LONDON, Jan. 24, 7 P. M.—There was an extensive conflagration in Longwy yesterday. The flames were visible all night, and to-day the fire is still burning. In the meanwhile the bombardment goes on without relaxation.

A METHODIST CLERGYMAN is reported to have replied to the question, "What was the most striking thing you saw in your recent trip on the Pacific railroad?"—"The Baptists—organizing churches, building meeting houses, starting Sunday schools everywhere, in all the towns; that was the most striking thing I saw." To this Zion's Herald responds: "If the Baptists get ahead, they must remember that water power is first used, then steam. The Methodistic steam power will be after them, and, both together, we hope, renew those desperate frontier towns in righteousness, peace and joy in the Holy Ghost."

GOD thinks more of the good than of the influential.

SOUTHWESTERN BIBLE SOCIETY.

In connection with the proceedings of the recent anniversary, an account of which we find in the Southwestern Presbyterian, the editor makes the following statement and appeal:

The only word we add to this brief account of the anniversary of our Bible Society is a word of solicitation, couched in the fact that the society asks help from the wise and good—much help to enable it to carry on its work of Bible dissemination. We close the appeal, which the writer hereof makes for the Southwestern Bible Society, by introducing the following lately published statements of the executive officers of the American Bible Society. The Southwestern Bible Society make and reiterate the same appeal. The conditions of the great work are the same in this portion of the great field of benevolence.

"The ordinary current receipts of the society are not now sufficient to meet its obligations in domestic and foreign fields; while its operations can yet be further extended to keep pace with a larger liberality on the part of its friends. If the gratuitous contributions of the past year should be doubled this year, the managers could judiciously expend every dollar in embracing the opportunities and meeting the demands for Bible distribution already before them.

"An erroneous impression seems to exist in some quarters that the society is rich, and has ample invested funds. It is true that it owns the Bible House, which was erected by the special contributions of friends in New York city, who made it a free gift to the society; and this, with its manufacturing appliances, has become a valuable property. We cannot overestimate the wise forethought and beneficence which have thus provided the best facilities for manufacturing books at the cheapest rates, and for steadily enlarging our benevolent work. The House itself, therefore, is of value to the Bible cause only as funds are provided for maintaining the operations which it was built to promote. Beyond this the society has, and intends to have, no permanent investments. A temporary fund, fluctuating in amount, has happily served during the last few years to save us from difficulties which the ordinary receipts would have been inadequate to prevent. Yet at the beginning of the present fiscal year this temporary deposit amounted to only $44,000, while there were outstanding engagements to be met to the extent of nearly $90,000. It would therefore be unjust to our work to withhold contributions on the ground of an apparent surplus, which would be far more than exhausted if the society's obligations were all due at once.

"Nor can we depend on legacies. These are not always immediately available. They may be in the form of real estate that cannot at once be sold, or securities that cannot be advantageously converted into cash; or they may be attended with conditions that deprive us of the present use of the funds.

"In arranging our plans, therefore, and meeting our engagements, our main reliance must always be on the current contributions of living friends.

"It must be remembered that the society is strictly a benevolent institution. It sells its books at cost, and to auxiliary societies below cost; while it annually distributes gratuitously, through its agents, auxiliaries, other charitable institutions, and private individuals, many thousands of volumes. Its gratuitous work during the last fiscal year amounted to nearly $200,000.

"The American Bible Society, therefore, in view of its increasing responsibility, its strictly benevolent character, and the present demands of the work at home and abroad, earnestly appeals to your sympathy, your prayers and your liberality."

The following items appear in the recent report of this institution:

Two vice presidents have died—Thomas K. Price, Esq., and John D. Henderson, Esq.

Scriptures distributed, sold and granted, value, $8,357.42.

Scriptures granted, value, $1,328.92.

Churches, Sunday schools, asylums, hospitals, ships and prisons gratuitously supplied, 120.

Sermons and Bible addresses delivered, 400.

Depositories of Bibles and Testaments, 113.

Agents employed: The general agent, 3 ministerial district agents, 9 ministers as colporteurs, 5 other regular colporteurs, besides many private distributors.

Amount of money needed to carry on the work, $6,000.

The field is all of Louisiana and all of Mississippi lying below the thirty-third parallel, most of the parishes and counties of which have been visited.

NEW PUBLICATIONS.

GOOD WORDS, for January, 1871, contains the usual amount of choice reading matter, besides a liberal assortment of illustrations. "Hugh Miller as seen in his Life and Letters" is a brief but fair exposition of that remarkable man. "The Coolie" and "War and Judgment" are both of them valuable. "First Impressions of France and Italy, by Nathaniel Hawthorne," is in the author's best style, and will renew the pleasures of many who followed him years ago over the same ground. Good Words is published by Lippincott & Co., at $2.75 a year.

THE SUNDAY MAGAZINE, edited by Dr. Guthrie, and published by J. B. Lippincott, Philadelphia, is always welcome. Of all the old country magazines published by Lippincott, we like it the best. The part for January, 1871, contains a number of superior articles. Among others we have, "How to Study the Old Testament," "Revision of the English Bible," "Innovations in Public Worship," and part two of "A Sunday in Venice."

GOOD WORDS FOR THE YOUNG.—Edited by George MacDonald, and published by J. B. Lippincott & Co., Philadelphia, at $2.50 per annum. The January part. Too much about goblins, and too much of the unreal and purely fictitious, to suit our views of a useful literature for the young. Apart from these blemishes the magazine contains much that is excellent, and of a wholesome tendency. The illustrations are charming, and the whole make-up is of the most attractive order.

BURKE'S WEEKLY, for December, contains an immense amount of pleasant and instructive reading for the young. It is ahead of any other Southern publication in its special line, and deserves a hearty and wide patronage. Published by John W. Burke & Co., Macon, Georgia.

AMERICAN AGRICULTURIST.—Published by Orange Judd & Co., New York. This is the leading agricultural journal of the country, and is mailed to subscribers at the low price of $1.50 per annum. The number for January is, as usual, profusely illustrated.

THE ART REVIEW.—This is a new publication, having reached in January the third number of the first volume. It is a record of art-progress in America, and all who are interested in this subject will not be able to do without it. New York and Chicago: E. H. Trafton, publisher and proprietor.

THE WESTERN HOME.—The January number of this periodical is the first that we have seen. It is a monthly, published at Chicago by the Western Home Company, at $1 per annum.

THE CHRISTMAS LOCKET, a holiday number of Old and New. Boston: Roberts Brothers, 1870. We have received this beautiful work after the holidays. It is a superb work in its typography, and filled with Christmas literature.

OVER $117,000 FOR CONSCIENCE' SAKE.—Treasurer Spinner reports this year the following as the amount of the conscience fund: Amount received from various persons from December, 1863, up to and including June 30, 1869, $113,991.81; and during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1870, $3,406.03; total amount received since November 30, 1863, $117,397.84.

RELIGION is a personal business; and if all the rest of the world were to forsake Christ, it would be our duty to follow him.

SATURDAY, JANUARY 28, 1871.

BY THE SEA.

Backward and forward, under the moon,
Swings the tide, in its old-time way;
Never too late and never too soon.
And evening and morning make the day.

Backward and forward, over the sands,
And over the rocks to foul and flow;
And this wave has touched the dead man's hands,
And that one has seen a face we know.

They have sped the good ship on her way,
Or hurled her deep from love and light;
But here, as they sink at our feet to-day,
Ah! who shall distinguish their voices aright.

For their separate burdens of hope and fear
Are blended now in one solemn tone;
And long this song of the waves I hear:
"Forever and ever His will be done."

Backward and forward, to and fro,
Swings our life in its weary way;
Now at its ebb, and now at its flow;
And evening and morning make the day.

Sorrow and comfort, peace and strife,
Pain and rejoicing, as moments know;
How from the discords of such a life
Shall the clear music upward flow?

Yet to the ear of God it sweeps,
And to the blessed round the throne,
Sweeter than chime of vesper bells:
"Forever and ever His will be done."

THE OLD ALABAMA CONFERENCE.

The session of 1854 was held in Talladega. The approach to the village is flanked for half a day's ride by some of the finest scenery in the State. Crossing the broad bosom of the Coosa at the mouth of the beautiful creek which bears the name of the town, you ride for sixteen miles through fine farms, with the mountains on your right, the hills on your left, and the open valley before you. Stately houses, busy mills, and many other evidences of thrift attract the attention. The railroad now carries you whirling through this beautiful panorama in the night, and you lose what was in 1854 the most delightful horseback ride that the traveler ever experienced. As you approach the village the ground is classic, and you see the tomb of the brave soldiers who fell at the battle of Talladega in 1812 13. Here are traces of forts and of the old military road cut by Jackson on his march against the savages, who were finally vanquished in the bloody battles of Emuckfaw and the Horseshoe. One of my ancestors fought at the latter place, and another at New Orleans, and taught their descendants to reverence the name of Old Hickory. The era which produced these iron men has passed away; but to their labors are we indebted for the comparative melioration in society, and for many advantages never enjoyed by the men who bequeathed them to us and to our children.

During the Conference I was the guest of General John T. Morgan, since distinguished in politics and in war. At that time he was a rising young man, but deeply pious and zealous for the church. He has one of the brightest intellects that ever graced the bar of Alabama, and I regret that his activity in the cause of Christ has apparently diminished in the overwhelming cares of business and the aspirations of public life. At this Conference Edwin Baldwin came up for admission from the Protestant Methodist Church. When General Morgan saw him he remarked that he had the face of an orator. Baldwin had been a teacher of elocution. Finding himself called to the ministry, he used his rare endowments with zeal for the cause of truth, and at once rose to the highest rank in the Conference. His faithful labors edified the church till the close of the war, when he embarked in a literary enterprise in Selma, in connection with myself. It was abundantly prosperous, but the excessive labor and anxiety required for its management in those tronblous times proved too much for his frail constitution, and he fell suddenly on the ninth of January, 1866. The same steamer that brought the next preacher in charge, received the remains of Bro. Baldwin, accompanied by his stricken family, and conveyed them to Montgomery, where they were interred by Bishop McTyeire.

Baldwin was a man of sublime spirit, but of deep melancholy, and lived in the atmosphere of another world. He was of the heroic temperament, and in early life served in the war with Mexico. Much of his preaching was of the polemic kind. He warred against sin and unrighteousness. His very sermons seemed animated by a sort of military spirit. If the laborious preparation of his subjects resembled the drill and discipline of the camp, the delivery of them was like the conflict of battle. The marshaling of facts and figures; the dressing up of his periods, in which every word stood to its place; the clarion voice that thundered them across the field of strife; the impetuous onset of logical assault; the flourish of rhetorical banners that waved over all, spread terror and dismay in the ranks of Satan; while the friends of Zion rallied, inspirited by the example of such a leader. Under his ministry many souls were converted, and a higher standard raised for the Christian life. It seems sad that a man thus useful should have labored all his life under the oppressive weight of poverty, and that his last moments should have been embittered by pecuniary distress. How often it is the world knows not its own greatest benefactors, and crowds them off the stage in the miserable scramble for pelf and paltry honors. Baldwin might have been alive today, but that he feared to trust his large family to the precarious support of our itinerant ministry, and embarked too rashly, perhaps, in an effort for their relief.

The Talladega Conference was made memorable by the inauguration of the movement for education which resulted in the establishment of the two noble literary institutions at Auburn and Greensboro. Of these, and the principal actors in getting them up, I will write in my next.

Yours truly, F. M. GRACE.

FIRST CHAPTER OF GENESIS.

Fourth day, verse 14: "And God said, Let there be lights in ha-rakva (the expansion) of the heaven, to divide the day from the night; and let them be for signs, and for seasons, and for days and years." The reader will please remember that expansion is styled "heaven" in verse 8. To us it is evident, as will be clearly shown, that Moses here speaks of the effects of the sun and moon on our atmosphere or expansion. As rakea or expansion is in the singular number, and confined to our planet, and as the sun and moon have distinct atmospheres, we are thereby forced to adhere to our expressed persuasion. To those who regard expansion, in the passage, as including the space of the solar system, called heaven, in which the sun and moon, in their respective missions, shine and gladden the world, we respectfully suggest that the following facts will not permit any such interpretation: "Fowl that may fly in the open expansion of heaven," and "Let there be lights in the expansion of the heaven." Birds do not, cannot fly in the open expansion of the solar system. They do, however, fly in the open atmosphere.

"Let there exist lights"—the shining of the sun and moon—"in the expansion of the heaven," and let this existence be perpetual, is unquestionably the obvious signification.

To show that there is no reference to the creating of the sun and moon on the fourth day, "out of nothing," we shall here quote the text on which all the details of the six days' labor of God are founded, which is: "Bereshith (in the beginning) Elohim (God) bara (made) eth (the substance of) ha-shamayin (the heavens) ve-eth (and the substance of) ha-arets (the earth.")

Verse 1: This is conclusive, as it affirms that the substance of every body of the solar system was made in advance of the dawning of the first day.

Verse 15: "And let them be for lights in the expansion of the heaven, to give light on the earth; and it was so." As the lights are restricted to the expansion of our world, in this passage, as in the one considered, only a few additional remarks are deemed necessary. The language of inspiration is adapted to common modes of thinking and reasoning. An ordinary mind looks up into expansion by day, and into it by night, and the impression is that the sun, moon and stars shine in the sky. Their relation to their lights is misunderstood. How natural the mistake in the absence of education! Divine wisdom, however, seems to have toiled to make the matter plain. "Let there exist lights in the expansion of the heaven." Here we have the sublimity of simplicity, the light of the sun and that of the moon being denoted, not the sun and moon directly.

Verse 16: "And God made two great lights." These are the words of Moses. How positively they show that the lights were not "created out of nothing on the fourth day!" And God made—that is, the light of the sun and the light of the moon—by the word of his power, to be abiding in expansion, and to divide the day from the night, to be for signs, for seasons, for days, for years, and to give light on the earth. Is not all this accomplished by their lights in ha-rakva, denominated "heaven?" He made "the stars also," the light of which is to be understood as that of the sun and moon.

To illustrate, the King of Persia decreed: "Let there be light in every street of the city of Susa during each night, continually." The only recorder of his acts adds: "He made great lights to guide the movements of the people"—that is, by his authority it was made as stated. The light of the streets was from lamps on the sidewalks. The lights in expansion are from the sun and moon, far beyond.

Verse 17: "And God set them in the expansion of the heaven to give light on the earth." Here we are informed that the lights mentioned were established in rakva, to flood the world with light.

Verse 18: "And to rule over the day, and over the night, and to divide the light from the darkness." The light of the sun in expansion causes day, and the light of the moon in it rules the night.

Such was the labor of the fourth day!

Should any scholar direct our attention to a solitary passage in the writings of Moses where expansion includes more space than the atmosphere of our planet, we would feel remarkably thankful for the information. If this cannot be done, faith in the preceding interpretation will be found in exact accordance with the dictates of enlightened reason. ALEPH.

TWO PETITIONS.—"Search me and try me," "Purge me and wash me"—these are the cries of the psalmist to his God, the two petitions of his humbled heart. These must be the petitions of our own hearts if we would deal truly with ourselves and with our God. Our consciences are not enough to search and try us; we love ourselves too well to be thoroughly honest in the search; we excuse ourselves with regard to many things which we are not willing to give up; nor are our standards of right and our views of truth sufficiently just to serve for our guides in the difficult task of examining ourselves; seeking to please God, we fall far short even of our poor aspirations, yet we desire to be true, and cry: "Lord, help me, search me and try me."

But when, in answer to our prayer, the Lord opens our eyes to see some glimpses of what we really are in his eyes, when he searches out our selfishness, our meanness, our worldliness, our cowardice, when he shows us the secret corners of our hearts, and all that therein is, the sight is more than we can bear; we hate ourselves, and cannot endure to think what we are before him. By such a revelation of what is in us we are led to prize, as we have never done before, God's own way of pardon through the atonement that is in Christ Jesus; he searches and tries us, that we may fly to his mercy and cry, "Purge me! wash me!" There is a fountain open for sin and for uncleanness. There is a propitiation for our sins. None need despair either of pardon for past guilt, or of want of help to resist evil in time to come. In Jesus there is all that we need; let us cry: "Lord, wash not my feet only, but also my hands and my head!"

"THERE is not greater grace of possession than to believe that God speaks to us. If we believe that, we should be already blessed. Christ was offered once for all; now he requires nothing but that we should give him thanks forever."

REV. GEORGE H. CLINTON.

The memorial services held in the church which this lamented minister had served with so much acceptability and usefulness were of the most impressive character. The St. Louis Advocate, of January 11, says of them:

The memorial services in honor of the late Rev. George H. Clinton transpired at the First church on the afternoon of last Sabbath, according to the appointment of the official board of that church as published last week. The spacious audience room was densely filled by one of the very largest congregations ever assembled within its walls. The whole scene and the entire occasion were most impressive.

The pulpit was draped in deep mourning. In the altar place, upon the communion table, stood a vase of flowers, such as he had been accustomed to see there—a delicate and beautiful tribute of affection for his memory. On entering the room, in the place where we have been used to see the form of the living preacher, there appeared inscribed on a dark background, drawn with white lines in large Roman letters, and with a halo around it, the name—CLINTON. Under it was the drawing of a book and a cross fallen upon it. Over the name was the picture of a crown bedecked with stars. This had been in the morning the object lesson of the Sabbath school, and a part of its memorial tribute to a pastor who had lovingly and faithfully cared for the lambs of the flock. The appropriate and suggestive emblems do not need interpretation.

The following biographical sketch was prepared and read by Rev. W. M. Leftwich, D. D.:

Rev. George H. Clinton was the eldest son of the Rev. Thomas Clinton, of the Mississippi Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, and was born January 1, 1835. He was baptized in infancy by the Rev. Dr. William Winans, of precious memory. His boyhood was spent on his father's farm, and he attended school about a mile from home. One of his earliest tutors was the Rev. William Parks, of the Presbyterian Church, now residing in St. Charles, Missouri, to whom he was warmly attached, and with whom he had a joyful meeting at the camp meeting in St. Louis county, in August, 1869, after a separation of nearly twenty-five years. In his fourteenth year he was converted to God at the family altar, and began his religious life at the fireside. He was early impressed with the conviction that God intended him for the ministry. In October, 1850, he entered Centenary College, at Jackson, Louisiana, Rev. Dr. R. H. Rivers, president, and in July, 1853, he was graduated with honor. In October of the same year he was licensed to preach by the Rev. John Lusk, and soon after was received on trial in the Mississippi Conference. His first appointment as a traveling preacher was Coles Creek circuit, with the Rev. B. M. Drake, presiding elder. In June, 1855, he was married to Miss Sallie Bridgers, of Port Gibson, Mississippi, who is now called to weep out her life in widowhood.

He filled regularly and faithfully the several appointments given him by the Conference, which need not here be enumerated, as they appear in the regular Conference minutes. In November, 1859, he was appointed to Vicksburg station, a church which commanded the finest pulpit talent. He was not afflicted with a surplus of self-sufficiency, nor did he "think more highly of himself than he ought to think," and it was with great diffidence and many misgivings that he entered upon his work. He served the church two years with great acceptability and satisfaction.

The following extract from a letter of his brother, Mr. James H. Clinton, of Clinton, Louisiana, will not only give the facts, but throw light upon the character of the man:

"In November, 1859, he was appointed in charge of the church at Vicksburg. It was with extreme diffidence that he went to his work—not having completed his twenty-fifth year. He remained two years in Vicksburg, and, I believe, gave universal satisfaction. He was pastor at Natchez, Mississippi, when Bishop Ames, of the Methodist Episcopal Church (North) came South with authority from the Secretary of War to seize our church property. From Natchez he removed with his family to Homer, Louisiana, where he remained till the close of the war. In November, 1865, he returned to Mississippi, and was appointed presiding elder of Vicksburg district, where he remained two years. In April, 1867, his little daughter Sallie, a sweet child, seven years of age, was burned to death. This was a sore trial to him and his devoted wife. Four times in his life he was called to give up a child. He buried one in Clinton, Louisiana, one in Natchez, one in Port Gibson, and one in Vicksburg. In 1868 he was again sent to Vicksburg station, and from there removed to St. Louis. These are the leading data of his life. In these seventeen years as a pastor he missed only one appointment, and that was when his little daughter was burned to death.

"He was a devoted husband, an indulgent father and a dutiful son. It was a rule, from which he rarely varied, to write home every Monday morning. In September last he wrote, asking me to meet him at Port Hudson and assist him in getting home with his family. He reached home October 23, feeble and more reduced than I had ever seen him. Soon after he was confined to his bed all the time, and continued gradually to grow weaker every day.

"Though sick so long, he suffered but little until a few days before his death. His long illness was borne with Christian fortitude, without a murmur. It was only in praise of our 'blessed Redeemer' that he spoke toward the last. He suffered so intensely with his tongue and throat, the last few days, that it was with great difficulty he could speak. The last thing he said that we could understand was: 'O! I'm so happy.' When unable to articulate, his wife asked him if all was well. He replied by bowing his head. He would take her hand and press it affectionately, and try to console her after he had lost the power of speech. On Thursday, December 29, 1870, at half-past nine A. M., his pure spirit was transferred from the church below to the church above, and on Friday following, at four P. M., we committed his remains to the dust in the hope of a blessed resurrection."

This brief biography of our gifted, sainted Clinton furnishes but little more than the cold facts of his useful life, while his warm heart, large and full of love, his clear head, gifted and eloquent with thought, and his deep piety, fervent and unctious with grace, all combined to make him the man, the minister he was, and give him a more endearing, enduring place in the hearts of the people. His was a heart of love; his a life of love and a labor of love, and his is a monogram and a monument of love. Love is the only word in the language that reveals and expresses his character; and as sacrifice is the highest and last expression of love, so his life was "offered upon the sacrifice and service of your faith." In the pulpit, on the platform and at the fireside this rare trait of character was equally conspicuous. To meet a stranger was to win him; and the longer association continued the deeper and stronger became the attachment. With a manly mind he possessed the rare charm of a womanly heart. His intellect was bold and masculine, his sentiment as soft and delicate as that of a woman. He had the tone and touch of the artist, without the genius. He had the sentiment and genius of the poet, without the inspiration. The world to him was full of pictures and poetry, and he would study a subject or contemplate an object to ascertain what of the good, the pure, the beautiful it contained. From the natural tone and temper of his mind, as well as the work of grace in his heart, he was inclined to that field of study so impressively commended by St. Paul: "Whatsoever things are true, whatsoever things are honest, whatsoever things are just, whatsoever things are pure, whatsoever things are lovely, whatsoever things are of good report; if there be any virtue, if there be any praise, think of these things."

His generous nature and Christian charity put him in sympathy with all that was pure and good; and he could no more withhold his support and active co-operation from the many institutions and enterprises that are working for the good of the race than he could close up the fountains of benevolence and charity which God had opened in his heart, and which placed him far in advance of the selfish sectarianism of the age.

As a preacher Dr. Clinton was zealous, earnest, ornate, eloquent, successful. He possessed in a rare degree, and in effective combination, "the action, and the utterance, and the power of speech to stir men's blood." With a mind ready of apprehension, rapid in movement, quick and keen of perception, and well stored with knowledge; with a heart full of warm and tender sensibilities, capable of deep emotion and lofty fervor, and well sanctified by grace, and with a voice strong, tremulous, pathetic and susceptible of the fullest and the softest modulations, and of expressing the most delicate shades of sentiment and thought, he could but be an impressive and a popular speaker for both the pulpit and the platform. Both his mannerisms and his style were his own. He had no model, and he copied no man. His deep and fervent piety, his strong faith in God, and his knowledge of the Holy Scriptures, made "him a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of truth." He was successful in winning many souls to Christ, in turning many to righteousness, and in building up the church of God. In his death the church mourns and his friends weep. Truly has it been said, "The good die young," and truly may it be said, the gifted are early called to fields of activity and employment among the higher and purer intelligences that are near the divine throne.

"Death loves a shining mark; a signal blow
A blow which, while it executes, alarms,
And startles thousands with a single fall."

HOW IT FEELS TO BE SHOT IN BATTLE.—Experience of a German Soldier in Metz.—"There! a blow on the breast, a tearing in the body, I fall, with a loud cry and terrible pain; there I lay, one of the victims of this bloody day. My first sensation was anger at the blow; my second an expectation of seeing myself explode, for, judging by the sound of the ball, I believed I had a grenade in my body; then came the pain, and with it helplessness and falling. O, how frightful are those first moments! Where I was hit, how I was wounded, I could form no idea; I only felt that I could not stir, saw the battalion disappear from my sight, and myself alone on the ground amid the fearful howling and whistling of the balls which were incessantly striking the earth around me. With difficulty could I turn my head a little, and saw behind me two soldiers attending on a third, who was lying on the ground.

"Of what happened I can give no account, except that I cried for help as well as I could. At last both of them ran up to me, and with joy I recognized the doctor and hospital attendant of my company. 'Where are you wounded?' is the first question. I could only point. My dress was quickly opened, and in the middle of the breast a blood wound was found, which the doctor hastily bound. The balls still constantly whizzed around us; one struck the doctor's helmet, and immediately I felt a violent blow on the left arm.

"Another wound! With difficulty I was turned round, to look for the outlet of the bullet, but was still in my body, near the spine. At last it was cut out. 'Is the wound dangerous?' I asked. 'I hope not.' 'Pray, tell me the truth.' 'Not very dangerous, it is to be hoped,' and with the emphasized 'very' my hopes melted. They were going away. 'The wound in the arm, doctor?' This, fortunately, was looked for in vain; the ball had merely caused a blue spot, and had sunk into the ground harmlessly. I extended my hand to the doctor and thanked him, as also the attendant, whom I commissioned to send word to my family.

"Ceaselessly it whizzed and howled around me. The doctor had carefully laid me on my cloak, with my helmet firmly on my head in order in some measure to protect me from the leaden hail. Thus I lay alone with my own thoughts amid the most terrible fire, perhaps for an hour and a half. All my thoughts, as pain and increasing weakness allowed, were fixed on my family. Gradually I got accustomed to the danger which surrounded me, and only when too much sank from the striking bullets was thrown on my body did I remember my little enviable position. * * * At last, after long, long waiting, the sanitary detachment came to me."—North German Gazette.

THE WESLEYS AND RITUALISM.—Alluding to Tyerman's Life of the Wesleys, our English correspondent, Rev. George John Stevenson, says:

Another matter of considerable importance to both the brothers is included in this first volume—that is, the turning point in those High Church notions, in which both brothers were educated, and which both so strongly manifested in various ways up to the year when Charles Wesley first issued his hymns on the Lord's Supper, 1745—they were written earlier, and from these hymns the Ritualists of our day are claiming the writers as belonging to their school of thought, and they try to show from them that Charles Wesley held and taught the doctrine of the real presence. During the year just named both the brothers carefully read, prayed and talked over "Lord King's Inquiry into the Worship of the Primitive Church." From this circumstance, and from that period John Wesley held no more ritualistic notions, and he ever afterward believed and taught that Presbyterianism was the true and original form of church worship; and after that year Charles Wesley wrote no more High Church hymns.—North-western Christian Advocate.

MEN'S lives should be like the day, more beautiful in the evening; or like the summer, aglow with promise, and like the autumn, rich with the golden sheaves, where good works and deeds have ripened on the field.

SLEEP.

eautiful Gate of Sleep is barred!
O Angel within!
anels of pearl, with diamond starred,
back no sound to my feeble knock;
e no key that will turn the lock!
How long must I wait?
O evermore and forevermore
I stand at the Beautiful Gate!

rments are thin—my sandals worn,
Sweet Angel within!
piercing the blast—how sharp the thorn;
light is cheerless—the wind wild;
ised heart sobs like a pitiful child,
How long must I wait?
evermore and forevermore
I stand at the Beautiful Gate!

ere a queen, I'd give my crown,
O Angel within!
ned, I would lay my laurels down;
h, I'd yield thee my treasured gold,
y sweet shelter from rain and cold.
How long must I wait?
evermore and forevermore
l I pass through the Beautiful Gate!

E DRYNESS OF THE MINISTRY.

As dry as a minister" is one of latest phrases from one of the t brilliant members of the pro- ion. It was playful, perhaps. perhaps, also, he plays a little much on that string. A Solo- n who recently signed himself ung Yale," in the Nation, coolly rms that the ministry are an in- or class of men, and therefore in- petent to manage a great college, ich they chiefly have made what s. The commonest form of dis- agement is to cite half a dozen ked lecturers, who shoot off one ket a year across the country, inst the average of ten thousand n who speak to the same audi- es twice a week for years in suc- sion; or to contrast the sifted ar- es of a great magazine—forming, is said, three per cent. of those t are offered to Harper's—writ- on selected or current and ex- ng topics, with stated discourses what the world would call thread- e themes, to which the worldly n brings the interest only of sy to talk thus is to prate. ry profession has its peculiari- s and its disadvantages. We may t professional traits that cling re or less to the ministry; some mality, reserve, constraint, slow- ss, abstruseness once, some awk- dness, and occasional sanctimo- ousness. But, after all these con- sions, and all allowances for un- rthy and unsuitable men, we sub- t to no such disparagement of profession. The Protestant clergy this country, not only in charac- r but in culture, taste, scholarship, cial and literary influence, general lligence, and interest as public akers, will abide the comparison th any other considerable class of n, and abide it triumphantly.

Their relative average of success high. When a Boston merchant ce remarked to us on the small mber of successful ministers, we ked him how large a proportion the merchants around him, for rty years, had been successful. e answered, not more than ten or enty per cent. And we informed im that we knew of no such per- ntage of failure in the ministry.

Most of the high literary institu- ions of this country, for more than wo centuries, have been made, olded and managed largely by e ministers. This, perhaps, was riestcraft. But the boards of trust ell know the difficulty of finding ompetent laymen—whether lawyers, hysicians, editors or business men —to put their shoulders to the work. This, you say, is because of the ressure of their business or the alue of their time. Very well. It the palpable measure of their in- erest in education, and of their ractical fitness. Boards of trust lso know the almost impossibility f getting professors from other allings than the clerical. But this, t may be said, is because men in ther callings have discontinued cientific and literary pursuits, or are o absorbed in the profit of their rofessions. Make the most of that dmission.

Turn the subject in any way you please, and the result is much the ame. Why are college societies compelled to look for their annual orations chiefly to the ministry? The men in other employments complain, and truly, too, that they cannot discuss literary themes. The eminent literary men among the awyers of this country, like Lagare and Choate, can be counted on the fingers easily; those among the doctors still easier. We have heard a few such men as Ogden Hoffman in their prime, but they did themselves no credit. Yet there are scores, if not hundreds, of ministers in this country who can do this thing well. And for a somewhat general knowledge of literary themes, we take it that no class of men in this country can stand a moment's comparison with the clergy.

It is idle to compare the whole profession with a few lecture celebrities. Scarcely twelve lecturers are sure to pay, and foremost among these is a minister. Gough is also sure, but he succeeds grammatically, because he can tell a story the twenty thousandth time so freshly and inimitably. Some lecturers draw by their reputation chiefly, like Agassiz, Greeley, Colfax. Grant and Sherman would fill great houses. But this is not success as public speakers. Some men draw by the puffing and blowing of the press, which they can command, like a certain editor, who proved too thin for a repetition. Many of the old stock lecturers, with their one lecture a year, are about run out. The women draw, some of them, by reason of their sex. Put a beard, or long, crooked nose, like a lawyer's or judge's, on their blessed faces; or let them stop scolding; or make the thing common; or give them, instead of their bright eyes and blooming looks, well set off by dressing, thirty years more of wisdom, with gray hair, wrinkles, spectacles and a parchment skin, and then see. Or make them still more dazzling and bewitching in looks, and willing also to exhibit themselves to the promiscuous public for fifty cents a head, and they would draw better yet. There are plenty of old fellows, and some young ones, who would at any time ride a mile and pay a dollar to look at a beautiful woman, if she spoke like a peacock.

The true test of dryness is a comparison with other intellectual professions. Suppose the judges and the lawyers in the pulpit. How many of the judges can make a speech that would interest any audience except an impaneled jury, backed by the sheriff? How many lawyers are good, not to say interesting advocates? How many of them can make a speech containing any juice except that of Indian weed, or attracting any considerable interest, except the pecuniary? Add the voices, the gestures, the attitudes, grimaces, hesitations and the English of the court rooms, and you have the elements of a comparison. How many editors can enchain an audience not of their own party? In the National Congress how many speeches are listened to?

If we speak of intellectual fertility, the minister retains, and, for years together, holds, often with unabated freshness, the same audience of every age and class. Political speakers, with rare exceptions—like Lincoln—stump the county, State or country with the same speech, down to the stories and the jokes. In the palmy days of Webster and Choate, when Massachusetts was once swarming with the best speaking talent of the nation, Webster's speeches in different places were the only ones reported; and for the reason, we are told, that the others would not bear reporting. When men sneer at the dryness of the ministry they would do well to see whose house contains the most glass.

Were all the living men of literary culture and accomplishments among the ministry of this country to be withdrawn—names which could be reckoned by the score—we should like to see precisely from what source the breach could be filled.—Prof. Bartlett, in Congregational Review.

CHARITY.—We are told in classic history that an old painter was employed to sketch the Macedonian Emperor. The Emperor had received a severe wound upon the right temple, in one of his famous battles, and a large scar was left. The artist proceeded to the work assigned him, and sketched the monarch leaning upon his elbow, with his forefinger covering the scar. His ingenuity was universally applauded, and he became more famed than ever. So it is with genuine charity, which "covereth a multitude of sins." Instead of exposing the faults of others, and holding them up to scorn and ridicule, it covers them with the finger of love, except when truth and justice require them to be openly rebuked. The way of the world is to expose the scars of character, and set them off in more than their real ugliness. They are the subjects of gossip and keen satire in the social circle, and the sparks of fire that are struck around often kindle into a flame. How much more beautiful is that spirit which treats the failure of others with forbearance, while it does not excuse iniquity in the nearest friend! This is the secret foundation of all that is good and true. This is the charity which "suffereth long and is kind," and "doth not behave itself unseemly," and thinketh no evil.

"God known in the soul, is God united with the soul; Christ revealed in the heart, is Christ formed upon the heart; there is life in this light. It is no other than the light of life. Woe to us that we know so much to so little purpose that we should be bushels to hide, and not rather candlesticks to hold forth the candle of the Lord he has lighted in us!"

THE guileless are usually without suspicion, but the disbonest man always suspects others.

CASTELAR ON THE POPE.

The following extract is from a letter written by the eloquent Spanish orator, Senor Emilio Castelar, to Don Vicente Garcia Teres of Mexico city, and published in his journal, El Monitor Republicano:

One of the questions which to-day oppresses the public mind, one of the problems which to-day intelligent persons are revolving, is, whether the Pope will remain in Rome, surrounded by the army and government of Italy—the latter so often cursed and excommunicated by him—or go to one of those Protestant nations which offer him a secure asylum and spiritual independence. Pius the Ninth, who directed resistance only to make evident the fact of violence, has shut himself up in the Vatican. Thence he learns that the city, submissive at so great a cost, resigned to her eternal penance, arouses herself, thinks, speaks, exorcises universal suffrage, elects as her king one excommunicated, and selects as her code those laws, those same institutions which have alone been visited by the anathemas of the Pope. What an immense difference between Henry the Fourth, Emperor of Germany, excommunicated by Gregory the Ninth, and Victor Emanuel, the King of Italy, excommunicated by Pius the Ninth! The former found no asylum upon the earth; not a spark of pity in heaven. Honors were closed up as he passed along, men fled from his approach, and even the dogs howled at him, as if a dead body were passing by, though he was only clad in sackcloth and ashes, and undergoing a severe repentance, to the end that a peaceful and conciliatory word might fall from the exalted lips of the all-powerful Pope. Victor Emanuel is received in triumph, welcomed by those same Romans, in whose souls Pius the Ninth has endeavored to excite horror at the mention of his name; thrice welcomed because of his excommunication, and crowned by anticipation with the crown of Italy, which will be placed upon his temples on the summit of the Capitoline Hill.

This difference ought to teach the Pope what a great change has been wrought in the ideas and sentiments of modern nations. But tenacity of opinion is an essential element with old powers. For this reason it seems to me difficult, impossible, that the Pope will submit himself to Victor Emanuel and recognize the plebiscitum, which deposes him from his see, and establishes an authority which takes the place of his own. And this tenacity of the Pope will render any adjustment of difficulties impossible. How can the King of Italy and the deposed King of Rome, the immolator and the sacrificed, the victim and the executioner, with authority different but equally great, with immense powers, but opposed to each other, live under the same sky? Will not Pius the Ninth again repeat his historical non possumus? Will not Pius the Ninth lift up his voice to condemn the new institutions, to curse the King, to declare his subjects rebels, at the same time proclaiming that he has alone ceded to force and violence for the time being in order that the better hereafter the sovereignty of the papacy may be recovered, now for the while lost, and that his successors will forever demand that as the sacred patrimony of St. Peter? And this moral conspiracy, fixed in the upper regions of intelligence—will it not involve the government of Victor Emanuel in a mesh of difficulties not to be overcome? Will not the greater part of the Italian laws, such as concern civil marriage, religious toleration and liberty of the press, provoke new papal excommunications, and will the conflict be limited to Victor Emanuel and the Pope, or will it not rage between the Parliament and the church also? I do not understand why General Cadorna wishes to keep the Pope at Rome by force. If it be true that Antonelli advises such a course, if it be true that the Pope accepts the situation, he may remain in Rome without danger. These matters are difficult of comprehension, especially as the Pope has proclaimed himself infallible. This infallibility welcomes and accepts ideas the most unchanging in kind (the principles of an exaggerated Ultramontanism,) which, although they have misled many pious souls, will accompany Pius the Ninth as a shadow until the day of his death. The papacy is one great, dead, unburied body.

SHOATENING.—It is good for pies and as good for papers. The matter we have published for the past few weeks has been of the most important and valuable kind. We are, in fact, lured to its publication on this very account, notwithstanding the considerable length of some of the articles. We must now return to our practice of using short articles. Articles of more than a column, or a column and a half, are not often read in a weekly paper. Short, pungent, spicy articles are always read.—Northwestern Christian Advocate.

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

THE Boston Methodist Theological Seminary has all the students it can accommodate, and is greatly in need of new buildings.

THE "Dunkards," who, it is said, have long been opposed to all systems of liberal education, have recently established a college at Bourbon, Indiana.

TWO ENGLISH publishing houses are competing for the exclusive right of publication of the revised edition of the Bible now in progress in England. One offers $50,000, and the other $150,000.

THE Catholic World says that with six million members there is but one Catholic paper in the United States with over ten thousand paying subscribers, and scarcely one that can afford to pay for contributions.

IT IS ESTIMATED that the Jewish population of New York city is seventy-five thousand; and that there are two hundred and twenty Israelite congregations in the United States, forty of which are in New York.

IN Islington, England, a "Children's Church" has lately been established. The service begins at half-past six in the evening and closes at half-past seven. The prayers are read, and the sermon is about twenty minutes in length.

ACCORDING to the statistics of the Baptist Hand Book, more than half of the pastors of Baptist churches in England have held their positions for five years and upward, and nearly a third for ten years and upward. Some have held them fifty years.

THE Bishop of Salisbury recently confirmed at Weymouth two hundred and fifty sailor boys in the English naval service. It seems that at a certain stage in their service they are expected to be confirmed, as a part of their naval routine, after scarce any religious instruction, and with no reference to their religious principle.

THE Christian Recorder, the organ of two hundred thousand African Methodists, has barely five thousand subscribers, and is in greatly embarrassed circumstances. The paper is ably edited, and deserves a much larger patronage. At present it is dependent chiefly on the sale of books for its support, and the publisher makes an earnest appeal to the members of the African Methodist Church in its behalf.—Independent.

THE Roman Catholic Bishop of Montreal has forbidden the pupils of the convents and Roman Catholic boarding schools in his diocese to take a vacation at the holidays, demanding the sacrifice as a proof of sympathy with the Pope in his "imprisonment." Any child who shall transgress that order by visiting her friends will be refused admittance to her convent if she attempts to return, or to any other convent which she may seek to enter.

THE Irish Episcopal Church is completing as fast as possible its preparations for the coming separation from the state, and everything, it is thought, will soon be in readiness. Some difficulty, however, is anticipated in regard to funds, and a great effort will be needed to place the disestablished church in a position of financial security. The clergy, it seems, are insisting upon such advantageous terms for themselves that there is little prospect of a surplus for the future church.

ACCORDING to statistics given in the Church Journal, the Episcopal Church in 1860, before the act of secession was passed, had 37 bishops, 2,028 clergy in 33 dioceses, 139,611 communicants, and 113,912 Sunday school scholars. There are now 39 dioceses and 9 missionary bishops, 2,780 other clergy, with 220,000 communicants and 202,729 Sunday school children. The contributions for missionary and church purposes for last year amounted to $5,002,722. There have been 208 ordinations, and the deaths of the clergy, including two bishops, were 38.

THE Methodist Episcopal Church has 101 institutions of learning, which employ 719 instructors. There are 27 universities and colleges, and 5 theological seminaries, one of which is a mission institution in Germany. The amount invested in buildings for these institutions is $2,985,137, and their endowment is $2,653,123. There are 69 ladies' colleges, seminaries and academies, with an entire investment in buildings, apparatus and endowment of $2,882,802. The last year's attendance upon these schools was 9,296 young men and 6,884 young women, making a total of 16,180.

CONSTANTINOPLE, like Rome, it seems, is to have its Ecumenical Council. The Sultan has given his consent to the meeting of the General Council of the Eastern churches, which the Patriarch of Constantinople has been for some time trying to bring about; and invitations have been or are to be issued to the three patriarchs of Alexandria, Antioch and Jerusalem, the Archbishop of Cyprus, the head of the Greek Synod of Athens, the metropolitans of Servia and Roumania, and the metropolitan of the Orthodox Russian Church. But we do not understand that the Emperor of Russia has yet withdrawn his refusal to allow the Russian metropolitan to attend.

A SMALL THING in itself often places the missionary work in vivid light before us. This week we met Rev. Mr. Snow, of the Micronesian mission, now in this city, attending to the printing of his translation of the gospels of Matthew and Luke into a dialect and language known to no other white persons than himself and wife. It was but a few years ago he went to live among savages, with no written language. He caught and fixed their sounds in an alphabet, made a literature, taught the people how to live, preached Jesus, converted and civilized them, organized a church, and is now here with a "Church Manual" in hand, containing confession and covenant, catalogue of members, covering several pages, and the Epistles of John, to see through the press other and larger portions of the Bible. All this in one short score of years. Who shall say that Protestant or Evangelical Christianity is a failure?—Independent.

LOUISIANA CONFERENCE, METHODIST E. CHURCH (NORTH.)—We learn from a brother present at the Louisiana Conference, which met at New Orleans on the fourteenth ultimo, that Bishop Scott presided, and Rev. L. C. Matlack was elected secretary. The past year, on the whole, has been a prosperous one. The work is divided into four districts. Two of the presiding elders are white and two colored men, and all have labored in harmony and with success. Dr. Vincent was present and awakened the deepest interest in the Sunday school work. His visit has been a great blessing to the Conference, and it will inaugurate a new era in the Sunday school cause. Dr. Rust was present and addressed the Conference in an effective speech upon the importance of an educated ministry. Plain truths and earnest appeals were presented, and they found a lodgment in an interested audience. The cause of education has not taken so deep a hold upon our colored pastors in the South as the cause they represent, and their necessities imperatively demand. There has not been any great increase in our membership, but there has been a good work of solidification.—Western Christian Advocate.

PROF. DOLLINGER and two others of the Munich professors have determined to refuse submission to the dogma of infallibility. They will probably retain their professorships, being appointed by the state; but it is thought that many of the bishops will forbid the students to continue to attend their lectures. In Germany considerable excitement has been caused by a conflict which has arisen between Father Renftle, the parish priest of Moring, who repudiates the new dogma, and his ecclesiastical superiors. The Bishop of Augsburg suspended him; but he set the order at defiance. And his parishioners, though warned by the prelate's commissary that sacraments administered by him would have no efficacy, uphold him in his resistance. The Bishop has since excommunicated him, on account of Renftle's expressions to the Bishop's commissary: "I deny the Bishop of Augsburg's right to suspend me. The Bishop no longer belongs to the Catholic Apostolic Church, as he has accepted the conclusions of the so-called Vatican Council. I am priest of that church which, in 1817, concluded a concordat with the King of Bavaria. To that society of believers with which the Bishop has lately been connected I will not belong."—Independent.

THE GOSPEL AMONG THE INDIANS. Bishop Clarkson, of the Protestant Episcopal Church in Nebraska, reports to one of his church papers respecting the work among the Indians: "There are seventy-five thousand Indian inhabitants in the diocese of Nebraska, and the government has given his church all the agencies to deal with them. All these Indians asked was to be taught the ways of civilized nations. They have established two mission houses, five Indian chapels; they had three Indian converted preachers, and several students were preparing for the ministry; they had translated the prayer book and part of the Scriptures into their own language, and were found to be tractable and ready to acquire. Out of the entire population of seventy-five thousand, fifteen thousand of them attended the various services. If such a comparison—twenty per cent. of the whole—could be made with the city of New York, there would be two hundred thousand attendants at the churches—a far greater number, he was sorry to say, than at present attended divine service. Bigamy among Indians was nearly abolished. He has lately married the renowned chief Warbrusbaw, according to the rites of the Episcopal Church, and at least two thousand others have offered to be married over again under the same conditions afforded by the church."

THE friends of Christ and religious liberty just now have a combined and twofold satisfaction: First, that the Italian King and government have at last actually gone into Rome; second, that in the very heart of "the Eternal City," close to the Pantheon, a place of worship has been opened where, though without formal permission from the government as yet, the Scriptures are every evening searched to "see whether these things are so." And the number of those present increases daily. Signor Lagomarsino writes: "God has opened a door in many families where I go daily to read and explain the Scriptures." Brought into such near vicinity of the Vatican, and now visited with its official excommunication, the Italian government will be rather stimulated to go forward with the people into greater liberty, both civil and religious, than backward along the path trodden for centuries by the detested government which it has succeeded. The people see most clearly, as manifested in the recent elections, that, if Italy is really to be free; united and prosperous, the Pope must content himself with being simply a Christian pastor—"just that, and nothing more;" and where the people see this so clearly a reactionary policy in the government is not to be looked for in this age, when vox populi rather than vox episcopi is (to governments, at least) vox Dei.—Independent.

MEXICO.—The prospect for the successful spread of the gospel in Mexico was never so bright as now, and the strongest reasons for the evangelical churches of our country to go up without delay and possess the land, are presented by those most familiar with the field and the promise it holds out. The Presbyterian Monthly Record for January makes the following interesting statement:

"Are our readers aware of the fact that just over the river which forms our southern border lies one of the most inviting fields of missionary labor on the face of the round world? Do they know that those familiar with the facts would strike out the words 'one of,' and say, 'the most inviting and urgent mission field in the world to-day is Mexico.'

"A work is going forward in that Republic which imperatively claims our notice and calls for our aid. Despotism and Romanism, hand-in-hand, are struggling to crush civil and religious freedom. At the same time the Spirit of God is awakening many to ask for the way of life. The work is one from within and not from without. It is not a mission from abroad, a foreign element, but an awakening within, among the Mexicans themselves, though aided by light that has radiated from Christian men and women from the United States. No less than forty congregations of Mexican men and women meet every Lord's day for worship and instruction immediately from the Bible. Multitudes are ready to read. The demand for light is pressing. Intelligent Christian men, in whom we have entire confidence, and who are engaged in this work, are begging for plain, clear statements of Bible truth to circulate broadcast, so as to meet and answer the call which has been created by the Providence and Spirit of God. They have appealed to the Board of Publication for the issue of more Spanish tracts, and for grants of those already issued by the board. They must not appeal in vain. Are there not Christian hearts that will respond to this inviting call? Contributions sent to the Board of Publication for this purpose will be used immediately and in a telling way."

LOVE THE FORCE.—Love is the ministrant force of the universe. It is that energy which lies behind all phenomena; which creates law and shapes government, and administers them both. It is that which lies behind all pain and all suffering. These things seem here to spring from malign causes, because many men think they do, to a very large extent; and they are traced back and over to demoniac God, or to demons. But according to the New Testament, God's central nature is love, and his government is the issue of that love; and all the phenomena in the universe, if they were traced back to their source, will be found at last to have been co-ordinated under the great central attribute and element of the divine character.

PATIENT FAITHFULNESS.—It is not by a few, fragmentary or occasionally great and brilliant efforts that Christ's work is to be done, but by those influences, indirect as well as positive, which distill from a life. Patient, earnest Christian labor never fails. Its results may be unostentatious, molding, reforming, vitalizing the character, unrecognized perhaps by the dim spiritual eye of the world, but they are not unseen or unblest by Christ himself, for whose dear sake it has been wrought.

To Subscribers. Any person wishing to subscribe for this paper can do so by paying the Methodist preacher in the circuit, and forwarding to us his receipt for $3, with the address of the subscriber upon it, stating Post Office, State, Circuit and Conference. The receipt ought to be taken in duplicate.

N. B.—Agents are requested, wherever practicable, to invest and remit funds in a POST OFFICE ORDER, DRAFT, or by EXPRESS. If this cannot be done, REGISTER the letter at our expense.

When money is forwarded in either of the above methods we will be responsible for it, but not otherwise.

POST OFFICES.

As changes are being made in the post offices of the preachers, they will greatly oblige us by furnishing their addresses as early as possible. Don't forget to give the post office from which your paper is to be changed, as well as that to which it is to be sent.

OUR PUBLISHING AGENT.

We are glad to announce that the Publishing Committee, at its recent meeting, have arranged with Rev. Robert J. Harp to take charge of the business department of the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE. Bro. Harp assumes the onerous duties of this position at the earnest desire and solicitation of the editor and the Publishing Committee, who regard him as the man for the place, and bespeak for him the hearty co-operation of all the agents and friends of the paper. Hereafter all communications of a BUSINESS NATURE should be addressed to Rev. R. J. Harp, 112 Camp street, New Orleans. All communications for the columns of the paper should be addressed, as heretofore, to Rev. Linus Parker.

NEW ADVERTISEMENTS.

HARDEE'S MAP OF LOUISIANA.—It gives us pleasure to announce that Mr. Steel, the publisher, will be able in a short time to fill orders for Hardee's official map of Louisiana. Some of the first civil engineers of the State have testified to the accuracy and completeness of this map. See advertisement in another column.

ATTENTION, TEXANS!—A corps of professors inquire for a suitable location for a college in Texas. See advertisement.

LOUISIANA COTTON PLANTATIONS FOR SALE.—See advertisement of William S. Dixon.

MINUTES.—We are under obligations to the Southwestern Book and Publishing Company for the Minutes of the fifty-fourth session of the Missouri Conference. It is a handsome pamphlet of sixty pages, and contains a large amount of valuable information.

The Minutes of the Virginia Annual Conference, edited and published by P. A. Peterson, are prepared with care and handsomely printed. Thanks to the publisher for his kind remembrance in sending us a copy.

THE property of Christians is to bear the ills of time, and to hope for the good things of eternity.

ALWAYS pray for patience; every day will bring something that will call for its exercise.

TO A PERPLEXED SOUL.

There is no more common source of perplexity than that which relates to the evidences of our acceptance with God. These evidences have reference to a fact of which we wish to be assured. Has God pardoned my sins? Am I a child of God? The condition upon which the blessing of forgiveness is dispensed is clearly stated in Scripture. Faith is the comprehensive and supreme condition. "Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shalt be saved." God is "the justifier of him that believeth in Jesus." If there is truth in God, the sinner is pardoned when he believes in the Lord Jesus Christ. Whatever the evidences may be, they are sure to be present in some degree if the fact has transpired. These evidences are declared with as much explicitness as is the condition. "Therefore, being justified by faith, we have peace with God through our Lord Jesus Christ." "He that believeth on the Son hath the witness in himself." "The Spirit itself beareth witness with our spirit that we are the children of God." "And because ye are sons, God hath sent forth the Spirit of his Son into your hearts, crying Abba, Father." The Christian character is plainly described as that of "a new creature in Christ Jesus," and as walking "not after the flesh, but after the Spirit." If "born again," the fruits of the Holy Spirit will appear in the tempers and disposition, and especially in love to God and to man.

Faith may be the subject of perplexity, not so much in reference to its nature as in reference to its exercise. The object of belief is not obscure, because Christ is it, as an atoning sacrifice. The substance of it is, that he died for me. Faith thus connects the sacrifice with our own person. The atonement embraces the world, but it emphatically embraces me. Trust is perhaps the intensely personal act of faith, in which we rest in Christ's merits—in which we realize how the Lord hath laid on him our iniquity. God's promise is absolute, that "if thou shalt believe in thine heart" thy sins shall be forgiven. We are conscious either that we do or that we do not thus believe. The act of reliance, if it exists, may be recognized in our own consciousness. Is not the trouble often in this: that we expect the witness before we believe, or that we are endeavoring to believe up to the witnessing point, making this alike the condition and end of our faith? The immediate end of faith is pardon—it is to believe with the heart, not unto assurance, but "unto righteousness." The evidences of forgiveness will take care of themselves; and it is the business of the penitent to believe in Christ and to rest in the divine promise. The error of many seekers is that they are straining not directly after justification, but after its inevitable concomitants. Instead of agonizing after assurance, let us seek first for reconciliation and holiness; let us pause to honor God by taking him at his word, and by implicitly believing now that Christ died for our sins.

There are other hinderances to faith. Faith implies and embraces all conditions, and as a single act unifies and concentrates all the powers of the soul in itself. The will, the affections, the intellect, are all engaged, and faith is the movement and grasp of the entire nature in its aspirations after life. Faith is the act of a penitent heart. We need not stop to measure our feelings and emotions in order to determine the reality of our repentance. Think rather of the sense of guilt, hatred and abandonment of sin, confession and restitution. If we cover our sins, if we decline the practical acts of repentance, faith is impossible. The exercise of faith is connected with the acceptance of a most solemn covenant between God and ourselves. It is not a tentative effort or an experimental trifling, but the sealing of a compact with the eternal Jehovah. Before looking further for the cause of failure it is well to see whether we have given ourselves wholly to God, in our bodies, our spirits, our goods, our time and our affections. If the seeker would be converted, let him present himself a living sacrifice, let him lay all upon the altar, and enter finally and unconditionally upon the service of God. Faith is comparatively easy when the penitent gets his consent to be wholly the Lord's.

There are perplexities after conversion and in conversion. The tempter is about, weaving his snares and exerting all his malignant wiles, to discourage and to excite the evil heart of unbelief. "Do people look for too much?" For too much, in some directions possibly, and for some things not warranted in any degree. If we expect to be exempt from temptation, and from the most fearful conflicts with our tempers and passions, we shall be disappointed. To become a Christian is to enter upon a warfare, and the conflicts after conversion are sometimes sharper than before. Believers are often "in heaviness through manifold temptations," they are subject to infirmities and errors, and to the movings of inbred corruption. The privilege of assurance is theirs, but the utterances of Christian experience and of Scripture must be soberly interpreted. A comfortable sense of acceptance in Christ is for all, but we may not fix a uniform standard of degree or of manifestation. Religious enjoyment may be considerably modified by circumstances of health, and of peculiar and afflictive dispensations. Assurance is the concomitant and not the chief end of the religious life, and for this reason we may give it undue prominence in our devotions. If we are intent on holiness of heart, on complete consecration to God, and on a useful life, we shall find that the evidences of our acceptance brighten in proportion as these ends are pursued and attained. The antidote to obscurity, in the matter of assurance, lies largely in the habitual apprehension of Christ as the ground of our continued acceptance. Failures, shortcomings, infirmities may be wielded by the devil, to trouble the conscience and to cloud the spiritual vision; but Christ, as an atoning sacrifice, and as an interceding Saviour, is the sure refuge of the tempted believer. "Who shall lay anything to the charge of God's elect? It is God that justifieth. Who is he that condemneth? It is Christ that died, yea rather that is risen again, who is even at the right hand of God, who also maketh intercession for us."

The unpardonable sin occupies the thoughts of the inquirer. Shelves of commentaries give but little light as to the nature of this sin. We may, however, conclude that a sin which is so hard to ascertain is not often committed. A very judicious writer observes in reference to this matter: "The very fear of a penitent man, that he has committed it, is full demonstration that he has not so done." This is sufficient to relieve the troubled and penitent seeker. Men may grieve the Spirit, they may resist him, they may disobey and trifle with his reproofs, and yet find mercy. The sin which "hath never forgiveness" is perhaps the fearful culmination of invincible obduracy to which these finally lead. The prayerful seeker is certainly not guilty of it. From this topic we move very suggestively into another view of the Holy Spirit as the essential guide of the troubled soul out of all perplexities. After all our attempts to relieve the anxious inquirer, He must lead into all truth. Prayerful dependence upon Him will be rewarded by light and comfort. It is his gracious office to help our infirmities by making "intercession for us with groanings which cannot be uttered." It is his blessed prerogative to bear "witness with our spirit that we are the children of God." He is given to us in our darkness and anguish to enlighten and to comfort, to give some foretaste and earnest of the heavenly inheritance, and to seal the believer unto the day of redemption.

BEWARE of impatience or contradiction. Do not condemn or think hardly of those who cannot see just as you see, or judge it their duty to contradict you.—Wesley.

The St. Louis Semi-Centenary Commemoration.

MR. EDITOR: I inclose you the programme of the week's work at St. Louis. There were meetings each morning in the basement—either prayer meeting, preaching or experience meetings—at 10½ o'clock; and on Monday afternoon a sort of reception meeting, in which the Bishops were introduced, and responses made by them.

The weather was intolerably bad—slush and snow and cold, for the most part, under foot, with some very bright, hopeful days overhead. Still the audiences were then not so large by half as they otherwise would have been, but the solid men were there, and stood squarely up from the beginning. So far as the hospitality of the place is concerned, I imagine nothing could affect that short of a Parisian siege. It was surely never excelled—consisting of a cream diet, for the most part, varied with prairie chickens, quails and oysters. It was enough to place all the visitors hors de combat. The people in St. Louis have many delightful contrivances for mitigating the rigors of their winter, such as pleasantly heated rooms, without any symptoms of fireplace, ample curtains and soft carpets. Then they wear furs and overshoes, and plenty of woolens. And better than all—they know no better, having never breathed the balmy temperature of Louisiana—so feel quite comfortable.

The city is stretching out in beauty and power beyond any other in the United States, having increased in actual numbers more than any city during the past ten years. As its immense resources of iron, of coal, of granite and of grain disclose themselves, one is amazed at its possibilities in the future. Added to all which is the tribute, more or less direct, of twenty-four large trunk railroads—in themselves more valuable than even the city itself. At this point the East will meet the produce of the Pacific slope; and when vessels will hereafter come from the Indian seas, through the Isthmus of Darien canal, they can place their cargoes in St. Louis at less cost than they can place them in New York.

You may judge, therefore, how great an interest was awakened in my heart when I saw this giant center of the New World—knowing that the center of this continent would some day be the true center of the Methodist Episcopal Church South.

The recital on Monday night, by A. Monroe and John Hogan, of the buddings of our church in St. Louis, was to me of great interest. It was late when the audience was called upon, but a hat collection yielded the neat sum of $6,000 to $7,000. This was not known till Thursday night—one person having given nearly the whole. The meeting broke up in a somewhat unpromising way. On Tuesday night there was no perceptible improvement, but things began to get mellow on Wednesday during the day. On Wednesday night $25,000 were subscribed by the members of Centenary church to build a church in south St. Louis. On Thursday night $25,000 more were subscribed by the members of the First church (Eighth street) to build a church in north St. Louis, on condition that a lot be contributed by the Monnd church—which was done, say $7,500, on the spot. After that all went on singing, praying, speaking and preaching until Sabbath night, the twenty-second; after the closing address $25,000 more were subscribed by the St. John's Street Church to pay off the debt upon their house of worship. And then, that nothing be lost, there were twelve baskets of fragments taken up for the support of a city mission, amounting to a lot worth $900, and a cash collection of $500.

The whole week's work sums up near $90,000. And, better than all this, it was the result, not of claptrap appeals, witicisms or a reunion flow, but of sound Christian sentiment, and the grace of the Holy Spirit there and then vouchsafed in answer to fervent prayer. I wait to hear of a revival of religion, the fruit of the riches of liberality. Surely it may confidently be expected, because it is more blessed to give than to receive. K.

IT WILL be seen from the following paragraph, which we find in the Texas Christian Advocate of the nineteenth instant, that Dr. Walker has entered upon his new field of labor:

Dr. J. B. Walker, late of the Louisiana Conference, having been transferred to the Texas Conference by Bishop Doggett, and stationed by Bishop Marvin at Galveston, reached our city last Friday. He came in the midst of a severe norther. It was rather a cool reception, but he assures us that he don't blame anybody for it. His crowded congregation, both morning and night, on the following Sabbath, in spite of cold weather, was a welcome which gave promise of a prosperous year. It is one of the trials of the itinerant's life that he has to part with those to whom his heart is endeared by years of trial and triumphs, but it is one of its joys that a faithful pastor will find a warm welcome and kind friends in every field where God, in his providence, may send him. Leaving his friends in New Orleans, who parted with him with sad hearts, we are glad that our brother finds a field so encouraging in our new State. In a few weeks the new church will be complete, and we trust that his labors in its pulpit and altar, and in his arduous pastoral field, will result in the salvation of multitudes.

NO WHITES IN THE COLORED CHURCH. Dr. Watson, in the Index, relates the following incident:

An incident occurred near the close of the General Conference which developed the principle and fixed the future policy of the church. It was this, that no white man could be a member of the colored church. Some substantial reasons were given by Bishop Miles and others why such persons never should be admitted. He said he did not want to be any whiter, nor did he desire a white brother to be any blacker. Bishop Paine said that was the true key note. Admit one, and others, designing men, might join them for their own selfish motives. They all agreed, so far as we could learn, that the races were to be kept distinct in their churches, fully indorsing the doctrine we have always advocated in the Index.

MINUTES OF THE MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

MR. EDITOR: Contrary to our expectations when the article in regard to it, and published last week, was written, the minutes of the late session of the Mississippi Conference will be published in Jackson, instead of Nashville.

Three thousand copies will be published, and distributed among the districts as follows, viz:

To the Woodville district, 450 copies; Summit, 188; Seashore, 187; Brookhaven, 450; Jackson, 600; Vicksburg, 525; Brandon, 225; Meridian, 375.

Members of Conference will please address me at this place, informing me how to forward their number of copies.

THE LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.

A correspondent of the St. Louis Christian Advocate writes an interesting letter about the Louisiana Conference and its recent session in New Orleans. We select a few paragraphs.

NEW ORLEANS, Jan. 11, 1871.

MR. EDITOR: This Conference has just adjourned. It was the seventh and last in the order of Bishop Doggett's round. The address with which he closed the session alluded to this fact. The sweet thought of being within a step of home added no little to that flood of emotion which already gushed in his soul at that sublime instant of reading out the appointments. The session has been a very harmonious one. Some excellent speeches were made, pro and con, upon a motion to do away with the Standing Committee on Temperance. The Conference concluded that it was no time to give an uncertain note upon this question. Fifteen hundred millions of dollars spent each year in whisky is sufficient to sustain the charge which has been made; that the people of the United States are a nation of drunkards. Beyond this, it was stated that scarcely a church in the land but had its representative drunkard. The committee was continued, and Bp. Marvin followed the vote with a few remarks enforcing the demand of the hour, that the discipline should be effectively brought to bear upon the evil. Resolutions were passed—one inviting transfers, and another complimentary of Dr. Walker, who transfers to Galveston. These were timely. No Conference can so illy afford to part with its members, especially such effective ones as the doctor, and no one presents a larger number of circuits "to be supplied"—many of them without one local preacher in their boundaries. The cry for men for the West should give place for a while to that which comes up from Mississippi and Louisiana.

The preaching during the Conference was excellent, but its lack of a love-feast and a sacrament were capital defects, and might have been seen in the spirit of the session. It was an unusual omission, and it is to be hoped will not occur again.

The minutes of this Conference report 8,896 white and 2,342 colored members. The amount required for the support of widows and orphans was $2,250, the whole of which was raised, ninety-one per cent. of it by a four per cent. rule, and the other nine per cent. by gentlemen and ladies in the Conference room. For twenty years this four per cent. plan has been maintained—a year at a time. It has met with opposition annually, and this year notice was given in advance of a fight over it again next year. So that we may conclude that in the mere working of Methodism nothing is settled, nor ever can be, no matter how well it may be adapted to the ends desired. That nothing should be stable is in accordance with the imperfectability of all human systems, but much precious time is wasted by this endless mobility.

Several other changes were made in its methods of working, and reminded one forcibly of the text, "Old things are passed away; behold, all things are become new."

The missionary collection for the year added up $1,482.85. On Saturday morning at eleven o'clock the "old debt" was called up, it being the order of the day. The missionary secretary was present—calm and confident. After the experience of the past three months it was a small matter for him to gather up the sum which had been assessed to this Conference, and several baskets of fragments over, $1,450. This collection, and the one which was doubtless going on for the same object, simultaneously, in Florida, would about finish the matter. This fact is surely working on the doctor's mind—he is getting ready for a funeral. Nature never put up his face for any unusual expression of grief, but the lines of it are evidently lengthening. The burial of the old debt must soon come off. One can, in imagination, already see the remains of the distinguished dead lying in state. The burial "casket" in which the deceased reposes is covered all over with Chinese storks and dragons—all painted in New York. A pair of Chinese slippers are on the feet and a pillow of Confederate notes is under the head, while a most sweet and noble expression of honesty is upon the face. The pall-bearers are at the door, with Chinese umbrellas; presently the doctor follows the hearse, a solitary mourner, drenched in his own feelings! He has taken up his last "old debt" collection! Let us all commiserate his condition, and hereafter allude to his great bereavement with becoming delicacy.

On Saturday night the missionary meeting was an additional success. Bishop Marvin and the secretary both spoke with effect, and a further sum of $500 was realized.

A GUILTY conscience is like a whirlpool, drawing in all to itself which would otherwise pass by.

DR. McFERRIN'S LETTER.

From a communication of Dr. McFerrin's, published in the Nashville Christian Advocate, we give some extracts. The letter is from New Orleans, and about the Louisiana Conference and our city.

By the way, I remark here that about one-third of the missionary money raised during the past year, in the Louisiana Conference, was given by the Sunday schools. These schools have collected and forwarded to China during the year a handsome sum of money in aid of the China mission schools.

There is great destitution of ministerial help in Louisiana; many circuits and missions were left "to be supplied." The Conference, by resolution, designated a day of fasting and prayer, that God would send forth laborers into his vineyard. May the prayer be heard, and may every portion of the fair land of Louisiana have the word preached in power and in the Holy Ghost!

The citizens of New Orleans entertained the Conference in a very generous manner, and their contributions to the cause of Christ were liberal. The Board of Finance received ninety-one cents on the dollar estimated for the relief of the widows, orphans and superannuated preachers of the Conference. A few gentlemen and ladies, present when the report was made, promptly came forward and contributed the remainder.

A worthy couple, members of the Carondelet Street Church, who were united in holy matrimony, in Missouri, some years since, by Bishop Marvin, presented the Bishop during the Conference with a very handsome gold watch as a testimonial of their love for him as a minister of the gospel, and a spiritual adviser. The parties have been prosperous, and they determine to be generous.

The Methodists in New Orleans are not very numerous, compared with the population, but they are a worthy class, and it is to be hoped their number will increase. Two or three more large houses of worship, properly located, are greatly needed; with these our prospects would soon brighten for church extension. The Methodists were among the first, if not the very first, Protestants who raised the banner of the cross in the Crescent City. John Bowman was, perhaps, the first preacher in New Orleans. He was succeeded by others, and they in their turn by others still. Many able preachers have occupied the Methodist pulpits in the city—most of whom have gone to their reward. We mention Lewis Hobbs, Mark Mooro, John Menifee and William Winans as among the early preachers. Many others labored here from time to time, with varied success. New Orleans was returned as late as 1826 and 1827 as a mission, with less than fifty white members; Benjamin M. Drake was then the preacher; since that Graves and Curtis and W. H. Watkins and J. Hamilton, etc., headed several years by Dr. Winans, preached to the people, and pushed forward the cause of Christ. Now we have several churches in the city, and the prospect of extending the work is encouraging. We have also several prosperous German churches. Our preachers did a great work among the colored people years ago, but their churches were taken by our Northern brethren under military rule, as I understand, and are still retained. They ought to be returned, and that without delay and without litigation.

The great trouble in advancing the cause of Christ in Louisiana grows mainly out of the character of the population, and the prevalence of Romanism. The Sabbath is desecrated in New Orleans, and sin committed openly, all under the sanction of those who profess to be followers of Jesus. The power of Romanism must be broken in America as it has been broken in Europe.

BOOK COMMITTEE.—The Book Committee met in New York on the twelfth instant, in accordance with previous arrangement, for the purpose of investigating the complaints against Dr. Lanahan. Bishops Janes, Ames, Scott and Simpson were present by invitation of the committee. Dr. Lanahan is assisted by able counsel, in the persons of Judge Reynolds and Rev. Dr. Buckley. E. L. Fancher, Esq., is acting in behalf of the accusers. Dr. Brooks, the chairman of the committee, presides. The Bishops will witness the entire proceedings, but take no part in them. When the final decision is reached they will concur or not concur, according to their own judgment, and in their own way. Reporters for the public prints are admitted. Nothing is to be done in secret. But little progress has been made as yet, and the indications are that the investigation will be thorough, and that much time will be occupied. If the conclusion is reached within a month we shall be gratified.—Western Christ. Advocate.

THE FLORIDA CONFERENCE.

This Conference closed its session at Tallahassee, Florida, January 9—Bishop Wightman presiding. We are indebted to his kindness for some interesting items, and a copy of the appointments. The session was a very pleasant one, in point of weather, cordial and hospitable entertainment on the part of the community, and the presence and blessing of God upon the varied exercises of the occasion. Notwithstanding the dismal condition of public affairs, under the prevailing misrule which has afflicted that beautiful land since the close of the war, religion still survives; and the gratifying fact was made manifest, by the statistical returns, that there was, during the past year, an increase of nearly two thousand in the white membership of the Methodist Episcopal Church South. There is, nevertheless, a considerable deficiency in the means raised for the support of the preachers in many places. The movement of the Conference, however, is decidedly upward, and the prospect is very hopeful of better days for the "land of flowers." The following were admitted on trial, viz: D. W. Core, J. W. Barnett, S. S. Moore and R. M. Ellzey. G. C. Leavel was admitted and ordained deacon. J. C. Rast, C. P. Murdock and S. A. McCook were readmitted. J. M. Stokes was received by transfer from Missouri, and W. M. Jerdone from Virginia. F. Pasco, a deacon of the Northern Methodist Episcopal Church, and a graduate of Harvard University, was received into full connection and ordained elder. W. Watkin Hicks was received from the Lutheran Synod of South Carolina. He is an able, eloquent and hard-working minister, who will doubtless make his mark in the important field of labor assigned him.

T. W. Tomkies, S. E. Phillips, G. C. Leavel and S. S. Moore were ordained deacons. D. W. Core and F. Pasco were ordained elders. D. L. Branning and J. W. Jackson were located at their own request. The proviso vote was unanimous, twenty-two voting in the affirmative.

R. M. Tydings and T. K. Leonard were appointed delegates to the Sunday School Convention.

The next session to be held at Madison, Florida.—Nashville Christian Advocate.

THE COMMEMORATIVE SERVICES.

The St. Louis Christian Advocate of January 18 contains the following notice of the opening of the St. Louis semi-centennial services:

Bishops Keener and Marvin reached the city on Thursday last, and Bishop McTyeire, accompanied by his daughter, and Rev. Robert A. Young and his wife, arrived on Saturday morning. Of other invited guests, we note the presence of Revs. George Smith, Horace Brown, H. A. Bourland, W. M. Rush and Andrew Monroe, of the Missouri Conference; Revs. J. S. Frazier and Lewis Powell, of the St. Louis Conference, and Bro. J. C. Bryan, of Washington station; Rev. G. W. Horn, with his wife, of the West St. Louis Conference, and Rev. M. J. Law, recent transfer from the Arkansas Conference. Others are expected to arrive during the week.

The snow storm of Friday last brought us most unpropitious weather. At the date of this writing (Monday) the condition of the weather and of the streets continues unfavorable. Nevertheless the Sabbath services, so far as we are informed, were well attended, and the audience on Monday night was quite large.

The programme for the Sabbath and for Monday, as it appears in this week's issue, was carried out, with the exception of the appointment of Dr. Redford for the night service at Centenary church, which was filled by Father Andrew Monroe, and the appointments at St. John's church, Bishop Wightman and Rev. N. H. Lee not having yet arrived. Rev. W. M. Rush filled that pulpit in the morning, and Rev. M. J. Law at night.

We had hoped to furnish a report of proceedings up to the time of going to press on Tuesday morning, but have found that it would be incomplete, and have accordingly deferred it. We may now only say in general that the exercises thus far have been interesting.

THE WARM sunshine and the gentle zephyr may melt the glacier which has bid defiance to the howling tempest; so the voice of kindness will touch the heart which no severity could subdue.

A MAN may go to heaven without health, without wealth, without honor, without learning, without friends; but he can never go to heaven without Christ.

THE envious man is like that rich man in Quintilian who poisoned the flowers in his garden, so that his neighbors' bees should get no more honey from them.

FATHER HYACINTHE, in a letter to a friend in this country, from which we are allowed to quote, dated from the Deanery of Westminster, says:

"I have received your kind letters; and if I have failed to reply to them as promptly as I ought, the reason of it is to be found in my wandering life, and still more in the sorrows of my country, which are my own sorrows, and with which I am utterly overwhelmed. The war continues its work of destruction and demoralization slowly but pitilessly. The present is indeed gloomy; but the future is gloomier yet. Poor France seems reduced to cry out, like the Jerusalem of the prophet: 'God has delivered me into a hand from which I cannot escape.'

"The year 1870 must be written down nefastissimus. Following hard upon the disaster of the Catholic Church, it has seen the disaster of the great Catholic nation!"—Independent.

Obituaries.

MISS FRANCES ELIZABETH BLENT was born in Warren county, Mississippi, on the tenth of June, 1831, and died at the residence of her brother, Mr. Beverly Blunt, near Edwards' Depot, in Hinds county.

She was religiously raised, and professed religion and joined the Methodist Church in her seventeenth year. She was for many years a resident of the city of New Orleans, and a member of the Felicity street charge, where she was for a number of years an efficient and faithful Sunday school teacher. It was as her pastor that I enjoyed her acquaintance and friendship, and was enabled to know and appreciate her many estimable qualities. Hers was a spirit of singular gentleness and purity, and utterly divested of selfishness. She was scrupulously conscientious in all of her social and religious duties, walking in love and charity with all, and serving God with a perfect heart and with a willing mind. Humility was prominent in her Christian character, sometimes attended with a disposition to distrust her preparation for death. In the main, however, she enjoyed the comfortable assurance of acceptance, and rested with cheerful composure in Christ as her almighty Redeemer. Her fear was that she might be betrayed into sin, and that her own heart might by any means deceive her. Hence her habitual watchfulness and vigilant self-examination, her constant review of the grounds of her hope, and the solemn anticipations of death and eternity. Serious and devout, she was yet cheerful in the society of her friends, sunny in her looks, and contributed to the pleasure and enjoyment of every circle in which she moved. She loved little children, and drew them to her by an almost irresistible attraction. For years she was an invalid—a great and a most patient sufferer. For the last few months her sufferings at times were extreme, but she "endured as seeing him that is invisible." The triumph of divine grace was eminently illustrated in the cheerful and humble submission which she exhibited in her severe and protracted afflictions. Lowliness and self-abasement characterized her experience to the very last. Hopeful and trusting alone in the merits of Christ, she had a mean opinion of her own progress and attainments in the divine life. In the estimate of her friends who knew her best, she was a most beautiful and complete exemplification of all the Christian graces, and one in whom the maturest and richest fruits of the Holy Spirit were manifest. She fell asleep in peaceful assurance of a blessed immortality. Among her last utterances were the following inspired words: "Yea, though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death, I will fear no evil: for thou art with me; thy rod and thy staff they comfort me."

LINUS PARKER.

Died, on the twenty-sixth of October, 1870, in Harrison county, Mississippi, GEORGE W., youngest son of Samuel and Jane Walker, aged two years, eight months and fourteen days.

One short week of suffering, one feeble struggle for life, a gasp, and all is over, and the dear little form which a short time ago was animated with health now lies still and cold in the silent tomb! Another of earth's fairest flowers has been transplanted to the garden above, where in perpetual spring it will bloom and never fade. Another devoted but stricken household is left in mourning, and weeps in bitter grief over the grave of their lost darling. But weep not, disconsolate ones. Your precious babe is not dead, but has only gone before, and is an angel now in the abode of Him who said: "Suffer little children to come unto me, and forbid them not, for of such is the kingdom of heaven."

"I take the little lambs," said he,
"And lay them in my breast:
Protection they shall find in me,
In me be ever blest." LAURA.

Died, of diphtheria, near Abbeville, Louisiana, on the twenty-eighth of November, 1870, MYRON L. WHITE, aged two years and five days; and on the twenty ninth of the same month, of the same disease, JOSEPH A. WHITE, aged four years and eight days, being the son and the daughter of Dr. W. D. White and Mrs. Lou. White.

By their untimely death a family has been sadly bereaved, and with little Maggie died the pride of a mother's heart and a father's hope. Both were sprightly and lovely children, and little Joe was a most interesting boy. He was, as all such children are, the idol of his parents and the pet of all who knew him. He had formed strong attachments for me, and I for him. He remembered my appointments, and knew when to expect me—frequently meeting me on the prairie some distance from the house—and seemed glad and jubilant. "Are you going to church?" he would ask. "Yes." "Are you going to preach?" "Yes." "What are you going to preach about?" "The love of God to man." "Does God love little boys?" "He always loves good little boys." He would then say that when he became a man he would be a preacher; and I thought it probable that it would be so, for he was of a family from which God had chosen several shepherds, and as some of them had been called to their reward I thought perhaps their mantle had fallen on him. I had marked out for him a life of usefulness in his Master's vineyard. But He who seeth not as man sees has blasted all such hopes by taking him to that kingdom composed of little ones. He is gone! There are no more inquiries made and no more questions to answer.

I was with him in his last illness. His patience was remarkable; and never did I hear so young a child pray like he did. He seemed conscious of the approach of death, and was resigned. When the last hour came, and while gasping for breath, he said to his weeping mother: "Do not cry for me, for I am going to heaven, and will be happy there." Then turning to his father, he requested him not to cry; when, seemingly exhausted with his efforts to talk, he waved his little hand and asked all not to cry. Asking to embrace his pa and ma, he breathed his last, and departed to his eternal habitation. The parents should be consoled by the reflection that their loss is their children's eternal gain. J. V. 40 and 42 Broadway, New York,
SOLE AGENTS FOR THE U. STATES,
and have authorized them to sell their great EUREKA ALUMINUM GOLD WATCHES for $3, and to warrant each and every one to keep correct time for one year. This Watch we guarantee to be the best and cheapest timekeeper that is now in use in any part of the globe. The works are in double cases, Ladies' and Gent's size, and are beautifully chased. The cases are made of the metal now so widely known in Europe as Aluminum Gold. It has the exact color of gold, which it always retains; it will stand the test of the strongest acids; no one can tell it from gold only by weight, the Aluminum Gold being 1-10 lighter. The works are made by machinery, same as the well known American Watch. The Aluminum is a cheap metal, hence we can afford to sell the Watch for $3 and make a small profit. We pack the Watch safely in a small box and send it by mail to any part of the United States on receipt of $3.50—fifty cents for packing and postage. Address all orders to

WILBOR'S COD LIVER OIL AND LIME
Persons who have been taking Cod Liver Oil will be pleased to learn that Dr. Wilbor has succeeded, from directions of several professional gentlemen, in combining the pure oil and lime in such a manner that it is pleasant to the taste, and its effects in long complaints are truly wonderful. Very many persons whose cases were pronounced hopeless, and who had taken the clear oil for a long time without marked effect, have been entirely cured by using this preparation. Be sure and get the genuine. Manufactured only by A. B. WILBOR, Chemist, No. 102 Court street, Boston. Sold by all druggists.

The Child's Corner.

AN OLD CAT'S CONFESSION.

I am a very old pussy,
My name is Tabitha Jane;
I have had about fifty kittens,
So I think I mustn't complain.

Yet I've had my full share of cat's troubles.
I was run over once by a cart;
And they drowned seventeen of my babies,
Which came near breaking my heart.

A gentleman once singed my whiskers—
I shall never forgive him for that!
And once I was bit by a mad dog,
And once was deceived by a rat.

I was tied by some boys in a meal-bag,
And pelted and pounded with stones;
They thought I was mashed to a jelly,
But it didn't break one of my bones.

For cats that have good constitutions
Have eight more lives than a man;
Which proves we are better than humans,
To my mind, if anything can.

One night, as I wandered with Thomas—
We were singing a lovely duet—
I was shot in the back by a bullet;
When you stroke me I feel it there yet.

A terrier once frightened my kittens;
O, it gave me a terrible fright!
But I scratched him, and sent him off howling,
And I think that I served him just right.

But I've failed to fulfill all my duties;
I have passed half my life in a dream:
And I never devoured the canary,
And I never lapped half enough cream.

But I've been a pretty good mouser,
(What squirrels and birds I have caught!)
And have brought up my frolicsome kittens
As a dutiful mother-cat ought.

Now I think I've a right, being aged,
To take an old tabby's repose;
To have a good breakfast and dinner,
And sit by the fire and doze.

I don't care much for the people
Who are living with me in this house;
But I own that I love a good fire,
An occasional herring and mouse.

LITTLE NETTIE.

It was a time of deep religious interest in my parish, and our prayer meetings were well attended. We held them usually in the church; but good Deacon C—— and his wife had become so infirm that we met in their house one evening, at their request, for prayer and praise. The house was small, and one room was not large enough to hold all the people. Two adjacent rooms were crowded with young and old.

Nothing unusual occurred during the first half hour. The meeting was opened in the ordinary way. The deacon, his head white with age, in faltering tones spoke of his love to Jesus through a long life, and of his Saviour's faithfulness; and exhorted the young to make him their friend. Two or three others prayed, and there was a pause in the exercises; when Nettie, the deacon's grand-daughter, a little girl about eight years old, rose, and said in a very gentle voice:

"I love Jesus because he has pardoned my sins; and I do not wish to be ashamed of him who has done so much for me. I want you all to pray for me." And then her tears flowed freely; and, overcome with emotion, she sat down. We were all taken by surprise. A new spirit came over the meeting. Many wept. Nettie's grandmother sobbed aloud for joy. Exhortations and prayers followed, and we all felt that Jesus had come near to us; and we remembered the scene in the temple when he said: "Have ye never read, Out of the mouth of babes and sucklings thou hast perfected praise?"

I lost no time in calling to see little Nettie, and found her very desirous of joining the church, and sitting with the Lord's people at his table. I had a long interview with her mother, who, in the course of conversation, remarked:

"I believe Nettie was converted two years ago; and she has lived like a Christian ever since. She goes away by herself to pray four or five times a day. At first, when we missed her, we used to go and look for her; but now we know where she is and what she is doing, and do not disturb her."

Little Nettie had her wish. She was made welcome to the Lord's table; and, as I gave her the right hand of fellowship, I recalled Christ's tender words; "Suffer the little children to come unto me, and forbid them not; for of such is the kingdom of God;" "Feed my lambs."

Children sometimes think they are too young to become Christians. But this is a sad mistake. Jesus loves the little ones. When his disciples came to him inquiring, "Who is greatest in the kingdom of heaven?" he called a little child, and sat him in the midst of them, and said: "Verily I say unto you, Except ye be converted, and become as little children, ye shall not enter into the kingdom of heaven. Whosoever, therefore, shall humble himself as this little child, the same is greatest in the kingdom of heaven." In the same occasion he said: "Take heed that ye despise not one of these little ones." And we may be sure that he would not do what he warned us to avoid; and we know that he rebuked his disciples for attempting to drive the little children away, and took them in his arms and blessed them.

Converted persons, whether old or young, love to pray. Little Nettie proved her love for prayer by withdrawing to her own room several times a day for that purpose. Reader, do you love to pray?—The Children's Friend.

WHAT A BOY CAN DO.

About two hundred and sixty years ago a poor lad of seventeen was seen traveling on foot in the south of England. He carried over his shoulder, at the end of a stick, all the clothing he had in the world, and had in his pocket an old leather purse, with a few pieces of money given him by his mother, when, with a throbbing, prayerful heart, she took her leave of him on the road a short distance from their own cottage.

And who was John? for that was his name. He was the son of poor but honest and pious people, and had six brothers and five sisters, all of whom had to labor hard for a living. He was an honest lad, and at fourteen was disappointed in getting a place as parish clerk, and with his parents' consent set out to get employment.

At the city of Exeter, where he first went, he met with no success; but as he looked on the beautiful cathedral, and in the booksellers' windows, a strong desire sprung up in his mind to become a scholar, and at once he set out for the university at Oxford, some two hundred miles off, walking the whole way. At night he sometimes slept in barns, or on the sheltered side of a haystack, and often met with strange companions. He lived chiefly on bread and water, with occasionally a draught of milk as a luxury.

Arrived in the splendid city of Oxford, his clothing nearly worn out, and very dusty, his feet sore, and his spirits depressed, and he knew not what to do. He had heard of Exeter College in Oxford, and thither he went, and, to his great delight, was engaged to carry coal into the kitchen, to clean pans and kettles, and that kind of work.

Here, while scouring his pans, he might be often seen reading a book. His studious habits soon attracted the attention of the authorities, who admitted him into the college as a poor scholar, providing for all his wants. He studied hard, and was soon at the head of his class. He rose to great eminence as a scholar, was very useful as a minister of Christ, and many years before his death, which took place when he was seventy-two, he visited his father and mother, who were delighted to see their son not only a "great scholar," but an eminent bishop.

Such was the history of Dr. John Prideaux, who used to say: "If I had been parish clerk of Ugborough I should never have been Bishop of Worcester." He left many voluminous works of his industry and learning.—Young Pilgrim.

DON'T BE TOO CERTAIN.—Boys, don't be too certain. Remember that nothing is easier than to be mistaken. And if you permit yourself to be mistaken a great many times everybody will lose confidence in what you say. They will feel no security in trusting your word. Never make a positive statement without you know it is as you say. If you have any doubts remove them by examination before speaking confidently. Don't be too certain!

"John, where's the hammer?"

"It is in the corn house."

"No, it is not there. I have just been looking there."

"Well, I know it is. I saw it there not half an hour ago."

"If you saw it there it must be there, of course. But suppose you go and fetch it."

John goes to the corn house, and presently returns with a small ax in his hand.

"Oh, it was the ax I saw. The handle was sticking out from a half-bushel measure. I thought it was the hammer."

"But you said positively that you did see it, not that you thought you saw it. There is a great difference between the two answers. Do not permit yourself to make a positive statement, even about small matters, unless you are quite sure; for, if you do, you will find the habit growing upon you, and by and by you will begin to make loose replies to questions of great importance." Don't be too certain!

NOW OR NEVER, TEACHER.—A blacksmith, when he pulled his iron out of the fire, used to call out to his son: "Quick, Bill, quick! Now or never!" By this means he taught his son to strike the iron when it was hot, well knowing that if he once let it get cold he should not be able to form it into a shoe. Now the disposition of a young person is somewhat like the hot iron—it can be easily bent into a proper form by education; but the mind of an aged person is like the cold iron, not very easily altered—indeed, if it has been altogether neglected, it is next to impossible to form [illegible]ight.

The Farm and Garden.

BEET SUGAR.

The Alvarado beet sugar factory is now fairly started on what may be regarded its trial trip. Active work began about the middle of November, and at the end of the month one hundred and sixty tons of beets had been consumed. This, however, is considerably below the working capacity of the factory, which, it is estimated, will dispose of nearly fifty tons of beets per day, when the hands have become accustomed to their work, and the machinery is in perfect running order. We gave, not long since, some account of the proposed operations of the Alvarado Company, and the San Francisco Bulletin has just published a more detailed description. Seeds of the white sugar beet were imported from Germany, and the experience of the past season has shown that the species grows well in California. In Germany considerable loss often occurs by reason of frost, and the practice in that country is to bury the beets, or keep them in a storehouse. In California there is scarcely any danger from frost, but the managers of the Alvarado Company, who have had an extensive experience in Germany, are this year adhering to their accustomed method of burying. Californians hope that their land will, under favorable conditions, produce twenty tons of beets to the acre, but the average amount of sugar which can be extracted from a given quantity of beets is yet to be ascertained. It is supposed that it will be from five to eight per cent. The establishment of so important a branch of industry as the manufacture of sugar is of the very greatest interest to our agricultural population, and if the Alvarado enterprise succeeds—there seems to be no reason to doubt that it will—we may yet see the time when we shall use sugar of the best quality, grown on our own land. The soil best adapted for the cultivation of the beet is moist and loamy, and that the quality of sugar which can be produced from American-grown beets is excellent is evident from the fact that a sample of beet sugar, made at Chatworth, Illinois, was lately placed on the Chicago market without a brand, in order to procure an unbiased opinion of its quality and value, and was pronounced by experts to be A 1 New York sugar.

SUGAR PLANTING.—Small Farms and the "Share System."—The New Iberia Times, of December 23, says:

"Small, industrious farmers make money in the cultivation of cotton and sugar cane in this country, even at the low prices of these articles at the present moment. Those who were not in debt, who have made all they could for their own consumption, corn, potatoes, pork, beef, mutton, vegetables, chickens, etc., and all the cotton or sugar they could make besides, have made money. All experiments with white labor on the share system, when fairly made, the laborers having families to co-operate with them, have proved successful.

"Success, then, in making money out of this soil from sugar or cotton, since the war, has been confined principally to those who have abandoned the old, costly, wasteful, extravagant system, and have made improvements at the smallest possible expense, and with reference to utility alone.

..."The little cheap sugar house, costing but from $500 to a few thousand dollars, close attention to business by the little farmer and his household, the closest saving in all things, and usually a fair proportion of white labor, have secured success. Black labor has given a lucrative business to the merchants, and plenty of spending money to the negro, but it has, since the war, done but little for the large planter.

"Then Iberia parish, and all the other sugar parishes, want simply thousands of white families who cultivate the soil each to a limited extent. The large planters will have to resort to the share system and white labor. Negro labor may do for a few years to use in gangs of eight or ten, if watched and followed up by a working manager. But black labor in the South is bound to be an ultimate failure. Most of the large planters, and nearly everybody else, admit that this is inevitable."

HOW TO BANISH FLEAS.—A missouri correspondent of the Country Gentleman gives his experience in ridding his premises of fleas, as follows:

Some years ago I had a barn that a hundred head of hogs were allowed to winter in until late in the spring. The fleas became so numerous that it was not safe to approach nearer than twenty yards, unless a man was proof against their bites, as many are, to my knowledge. I determined to clear them out, and directed two negroes to remove all the dust and dry dirt, haul eight or ten barrels of water, and wet the floors and walls perfectly; collect a quantity of pennyroyal and black walnut leaves; cover the floor three inches deep, and set some boughs of the walnut against the walls and troughs. In six days there was not a flea to be seen, and a trainer of race horses occupied the barn all summer without molestation. I have known sheep turned into the stable and barn yard, and kept there, and the fleas get in the wool, and perish, or are carried off to the pasture.

The Scientific American gives the following:

The oil of pennyroyal will drive these insects off; but a cheaper method, where the herb flourishes, is to throw your dogs and cats into a decoction of it once a week. Mow the herb, and scatter it once a month. I have seen this done for many years in succession. Where the herb cannot be got, the oil may be procured. In this case saturate strings with it, and tie them around the necks of dogs and cats; pour a little on the back and about the ears of hogs, which you can do while they are feeding, without touching them. By repeating this application every twelve or fifteen days the fleas will flee from your quadrupeds, to their relief and improvement, and your relief and comfort in the house. Strings saturated with the oil of pennyroyal, and tied around the necks and tails of horses, will drive off lice; the strings should be saturated once a day.

JERSEY CATTLE.—I have recently made a tour among some of the breeders and importers of Jersey cattle in Massachusetts, hoping to find some choice animals for sale at a moderate price. In this I was disappointed. The inquiry for this breed, which my own correspondence had indicated, seems to have been more active there. The demand from the West is increasing, and there were several large orders being filled for California. For the few cows that I especially coveted, I should have to pay no less than $1,000 each; so I came home with only a very choice yearling bull, for which I paid a round price, and $200 worth of eight-months-old heifers. These high prices, however, attach only to choice animals; second class stock, such as is brought by the ship-load, on speculation, from the Island of Jersey, is sold at moderate figures, and, in my judgment, is very dear at the price. These speculators' lots are generally picked up from the cheap refuse of the island, and are sold here to the large class who attach more value to the simple fact of importation than to careful and judicious breeding.—Correspondence in American Agriculturist.

Scientific.

THE Kaieteur waterfall, in Demerara, is described in Nature as having a clear descent of seven hundred and fifty feet, as indicated by barometric observation, while the width is estimated at two hundred and forty feet. The central portion forms a small horseshoe, and here the water retains its consistency for a few feet below the edge. Below that and everywhere else all semblance of water vanishes into spray or foam, with rocket-like spirts, as at the Staubach. As a whole the fall resembles a vast avalanche of snow, enlivened by rainbows of great splendor. In the afternoon the rainbow takes the form of a loop or ring, through which the whole column precipitates itself into the dark abyss below.

PROFS. HITCHCOOK AND HUNTINGTON, with four assistants, are zealously carrying out the enterprise of making scientific observations on the summit of Mount Washington. They brave not only the rigors of severe cold, but the fury of storms and isolation from the rest of the world. They are, however, in telegraphic communication with Hanover; and daily reports are now made of the meteorological conditions. The government signal service has detailed a skilled observer to be of the party, besides furnishing some instruments. Other parties have lent assistance, and nearly enough has been contributed for the necessary expenses; while the observers look for no remuneration for their own time and labors.

THAT the corona of the sun is auroral in its character is argued at some length by Prof. W. A. Norton, in the Journal of Science. The streamers which radiate from it, in some cases to the distance of one million miles, he judges to be analogous to those which shoot from the earth's atmosphere. As in the terrestrial aurora also, they are not permanent in extent and position. "To suppose that the rays of the corona are actual radiations of luminous matter is only to suppose that a portion of the photospheric matter of the sun becomes subject to the operation of the same forces that we perceive the sun to exert upon a portion of the matter of comets." He further supposes that the substance of terrestrial aurora is furnished by a portion of this solar auroral matter reaching our atmosphere.

MISCELLANEOUS.

THE ARROW TIE.

FOR BALING COTTON THE ARROW TIE is the most popular, being the best Cotton Tie in use.

Planters and Cotton Press men everywhere prefer it to all others.

THE ARROW TIE

was used to cover MORE THAN HALF THE CROP OF 1869, giving entire satisfaction.

The patentee and manufacturer of the celebrated ARROW TIE, J. J. McComb, formerly of New Orleans, now residing in Liverpool, having control of the best and most extensive Rolling Mills in Europe, is constantly importing large stocks of this popular Tie, manufactured of the very best quality of English iron, to meet the increasing demand for it throughout all the Cotton States.

Planters can buy or order the ARROW TIE of all dealers in Iron Ties, and of country merchants generally, at the lowest market price; and we respectfully solicit the patronage of Planters and Factors everywhere.

BRACES AND TRUSSES.—DR. JOHN G. ANGELL informs the medical profession and others that he has constantly on hand and for sale a complete assortment of BANNING'S TRUSSES, Spinal and Shoulder Braces, and other appliances for the prevention, relief and cure of general debility, vocal weakness and derangements of public speakers and singers, palpitation of the heart, bronchitis and weakness of the lungs, spinal weakness and deformity, dyspepsia and nervous affections, constipation and chronic diarrhea, female derangements and extreme displacements of the womb, RUPTURE, PILES, prolapsus-ani, and weakness of the male and female system.

These light, cool and springy auxiliaries are the special favorites of the profession, are intensely common-sense and rational in their action; supply a missing link in treatment; place the above affections in a new and more hopeful light, and often complete cures where medicine can only mitigate, any more than it can cure a hernia or a dislocated joint.

He specially desires an examination of these appliances by the profession and sufferers. Where necessary the professional application of the above braces will be under our supervision or that of the family physician.

These valuable appliances are sanctioned by a large number of the medical profession in the United States and Europe as the best adapted to fulfill the purpose for which they are intended, and the Trusses and Braces are adopted by the United States government for the use of the army and navy. Terms cash. Consultations free. Send for their pamphlet; it is better to call.

TRIFLES.

The massive gates of circumstance
Are turned upon the smallest hinge,
And thus some seeming pettiest chance
Oft gives our life its after-tinge.

The trifles of our daily lives,
The common things scarce worth recall,
Whereof no visible trace survives,
These are the mainsprings, after all.

GUIZOT AS A SPORTSMAN.—In the autumn of 1829 (cheu! Posthume, how fugacions are the years!) there was a numerous assemblage beneath the hospitable roof of General Lafayette, at Lagrange, of French, English and Americans. Among the last was this deponent, and among the first was the then Prof. Guizot, a grave but not ungenial gentleman, who seemed to have got about midway upon the journey of our life. One morning the chateau was in great commotion. There was to be a grande chasse. Guns and dogs and huntsmen and sportsmen mustered in such slaughterous style that terrible would have been the trepidation of the intended victims could they have guessed what was going on. Garrulous Gauls do certainly know how to make a fuss, and are always delighted with much ado, even about nothing. I remember feeling quite confident, from the stir, that we should perpetrate an amount of murder which would almost file our minds—that beasts and birds would at least be bountifully bagged, if not, perhaps, destroyed to wasteful excess. Fair laughed the morn, and we began the march in magnificently blithe array. Chance put me by the side of M. Guizot and his son, a boy only a few years my junior. We blazed about all day, and truth compels the statement that a rabbit and a couple of cailles were all our evening prey. My popping was bad, that of the professor wasn't better, and that of the youngest wasn't the best. Fortunately, however, none of the other parties had much more to brag of, so that I came to the conclusion that a chasse might be grand without being great. How much more attentive should I have been to the words that dropped from my companion's lips than to the birds that I hoped to see drop before my gun, could I have foreseen what future interest and value they would possess! He was quite as communicative as my bloodthirsty feelings at the time could have wished; but even if he did say anything worth remembering, it certainly made no impression between the conflicting sensations of aiming and missing. Nevertheless, it is a satisfaction now to look back and see the illustrious man in his shooting-jacket, with more anxiety upon his philosophic face in regard to the result of his shot than perhaps he ever exhibited as to the consequences of an oratorical discharge—to behold him with mental optic as "he cocked his eye and gun," to quote the masterly translation of oculum telumque tetendit.—Lippincott's Magazine.

INDIAN TERRITORY.—On the twentieth of December the council of the nations of the Indian territory, sitting at Okmulgee, adopted a constitution, by a vote of fifty-two yeas to three nays, which is to be submitted to the different nations for their adoption. The document provides for the usual three departments of executive, legislature and judiciary. The Senate must consist of one member for each two thousand inhabitants, with due provision in favor of fractional parts of that number. The House must consist of at least one member for each nation, and one additional member for each one thousand or fractional part over five hundred. Members must be twenty-five years old. Term of office, two years. Limit of annual session, thirty days. Three district courts are provided for, the judges of which must meet twice a year, and constitute a supreme court. Each nation will regulate its own elections, and prescribe the qualifications of its voters. The document provides for an economical government, and is modeled after those of our States in its general features. Their treaties of 1866 are taken as the basis of the new government, and the provisions of those treaties are made paramount to the new constitution and to all laws made under it. The council will meet again in June to put the new government in motion if it shall have been found acceptable to the several nations.

A SAD CONFESSION.—The other day, while a teacher was hearing a boy recite his lesson, the following passage occurred: "The wages of sin is death." The teacher, wishing to get the word "wages" out by deduction, asked: "What does your father get on Saturday night?" The boy answered promptly: "He gets drunk."

EDWIN P. WHIPPLE, the well-known essayist, is preparing a lecture on Charles Dickens.

HOUSEKEEPERS' DEPARTMENT.

IT MAY NOT be known to many of our readers that the fine roses of China varieties may be readily propagated by means of slips. Cut from the well-ripened wood, three or four inches in length, strip off a part of the foliage, and insert them in clean white sand, placed in pots or boxes. Keep them regularly watered, so that they may not get dry, and at a regular temperature. They strike root very freely. Ladies may also propagate any of the choice roses desired, by budding, in the same manner as fruit trees are budded. It adds much to the beauty of the hardy climber to have the main trunk variegated with branches of roses of different shades of coloring.

ABOUT SALADS.—Nothing spoils a salad so much, both in appearance and flavor, as cutting it up too fine. Every atom should maintain its individuality. Radishes cannot be cut too fine, but the slices should be in rings, and not dice shape. Onions must remain a matter of taste; but not so as regards mint. Every salad should contain from three to six leaves of young mint, as it greatly assists in digestion. No salad can be properly made without one or two hard-boiled eggs, because the yolks are necessary to blend the oil. The mixture should be made thus: Boil two eggs quite hard; when done take them out of the saucepan and put them into cold water. This causes the eggs to shrink, and the shells can easily be removed without disfiguring the white. Cut each egg into three parts, and remove the yolk into the salad-bowl; cut the white into fine rings, some of the best of which should be preserved to place on the top of the salad when served. With a wood or silver spoon break up the yolk in the salad-bowl, and add one tablespoonful of oil; rub these ingredients together, and they will blend; then add at least three tablespoonfuls more of oil, and again rub all together; now add a teaspoonful of moist sugar, again rub, and all will blend. Now add gradually, a little at a time, the vinegar, in quantity about twice as much as the oil used; lastly, put in pepper, salt and ready-mixed mustard, the latter but little; but on no account use mustard that has not been previously mixed with water. A little tarragon vinegar, used scantily, improves every salad. It is very essential to mix the ingredients in the order laid down as above. When this is carefully done an excellent salad will be the result—soft, yet aromatic; creamy, but not greasy.

There are true chemical reasons for mixing the yolk of an egg with oil, as there are for mixing flour of mustard with water, and not vinegar; but this is not the place for examining them—the facts stated must be accepted. It is the general want of the knowledge of how to blend the oil that causes the common remark: "I am very fond of salad, but I'll not take any oil, thank you." Of course, served up as it frequently is, all floating and greasy, few things can be more objectionable, unless it be that rancid potion sold in ring-bottles in shops, under the name of "Salad Cream." Avoid this. Beet-root, as a staple to a salad, is not used sufficiently in England. At least half a good sized beet should be cut up with every salad. It is digestible, nutritious, and in general favor.—Septimus Piesse.

LULLABY.—Trench has given many illustrations of the amount of history which is wrapped up in a single word. He has done great service in stimulating lovers of linguistic studies to work in the same line of observation and research. Any one of tolerable quickness may find stores in words that fall unheeded from his lips every day. It would be a profitable amusement with one, when too ill or too weary to drudge, to take up a word and crack it, and pick the meat out of it, as the children are now doing with their Christmas shellbarks. Here is one suggested by the "Lullaby" sung so sweetly by Miss Carey on Saturday afternoon.

There was a legend among the Hebrews that Adam had a wife before Eve, whose offspring were all devils. Her personal peculiarity was her wonderful hair. Her name was Lilith. The popular superstition, according to the Rabbinical accounts, was that a specter—this same Lilith—had the power to kill little children who were not protected by amulets or charms. It is asserted by competent authority that the Christians learned from the Jews about this malignant specter, and that nurses were accustomed to sing to sleeping children, Lilla, abi, abi—Lilli, away, away—and that from this usage comes our word "lullaby."

ONE of the miseries of life is to be beaten in an argument, and immediately afterward to think of some expression which would have totally annihilated your opponent.

STRIVE to make everybody happy, and you will make at least one so—yourself.

Guyot's Geographical Text-Books.

"Incomparably superior to anything published."—Agassiz.

Introduction to the Study of Geography.
Elementary Geography.
Intermediate Geography.
Common School Geography.

Guyot's System is approved and indorsed by the most distinguished literary and scientific men of our nation; such as Profs. Agassiz, Dana, Tenney, Henry and others, celebrated in science throughout Europe as well as at home.

The fact that ONE MILLION (1,000,000) copies of the work are in use in the schools of our country, at the present time, is proof of the unparalleled success attending the New System, for no other series of books ever published in America have ever secured so rapid and extensive introduction. They are the text-books in nearly all the colleges, seminaries, normal schools, etc., in the United States; in the public schools of the cities of New York, Brooklyn, Rochester, and most of the cities and towns of the Eastern States; Cincinnati, Cleveland, Columbus, Springfield, Toledo, Marietta, and most of the other important towns and cities, numbering nine thousand schools in Ohio, and hundreds of towns and cities in the other Western States, while in the Southern States and California they are being extensively adopted.

Believing that the publication of Professor Guyot's series has marked a new and better era in the presentation of geographical science, that by it the pupils of this generation will obtain a clearer, more definite and exalted knowledge of the world on which they live, and that it is so systematized as to render that knowledge more valuable and permanent, we commend it to the attention of all interested in educational improvements and progress.

SCHOOLS AND COLLEGES.

FLORENCE WESLEYAN UNIVERSITY,

FLORENCE, ALABAMA.

W. H. ANDERSON, D. D., PRESIDENT.

This institution of learning, so widely known through the South, will begin its next session on WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 14, 1870.

The Faculty is composed of men of experience and ability. The course of study is comprised in the Literary Department, Law Department, Department of Biblical Literature and Commercial Department. The advantages of this University are seen in its healthful and attractive location, thorough course of study, excellent discipline, the character and success of its instructors, and the reasonable rates at which board and tuition are furnished.

Licentiates in the ministry and sons of ministers in the regular work are admitted to recitation on paying the incidental fees.

EXPENSES PER SESSION OF FIVE MONTHS.

Tuition in the University classes	$30 00
Tuition in Grammar School	25 00
Tuition in Law Department	40 00
Incidental fee	2 00
(Tuition and incidental fee required in advance.)
Chemical fee, paid once	5 00

Boarding can be had in the best families at from $16 to $20 per month.

For particulars see circular, or apply to the president, Rev. Dr. Anderson, or to Hon. W. B. Wood. GEO. W. FOSTER,
Jy23 1f President Board of Trustees.

TUSKEGEE FEMALE COLLEGE,

TUSKEGEE, ALABAMA.

The Fifteenth Annual Session begins SEPTEMBER 15, 1870, and continues forty weeks; divided into two equal terms.

REV. GEO. W. F. PRICE, M. A., President.
REV. B. B. ROSS, M. A., Professor of Latin and Mathematics.
DR. S. M. BARTLETT, Director of Music, with Nine Assistants in the various departments of instruction and discipline.

The president calls particular attention to the fact that Rev. B. B. Ross, of the Alabama Conference, has accepted the professorship of Latin and Mathematics in the institution. Brother Ross is a graduate of Lagrange College, Alabama. He was professor of Mixed Mathematics in that institution for two years. Subsequently he was president of Talladega Female Institute. His classical education, his experience in the practical business of teaching, his acceptable career of itinerant service, his many excellent personal traits, all entitle him to the unlimited confidence of our people.

The College has just closed a most successful year. Its prospects were never more flattering. The present organization of the institution combines all the best features for securing the thorough instruction and efficient discipline of its pupils. The Faculty contains none but tried and trained teachers, whose success has been tested by years of service. The boarding arrangements are under the immediate control of the president, who resides in the building, and supervises the social recreations and the professional duties of the pupils. The health of the girls is in charge of an experienced matron. The table, kitchen and laundry are in care of a thoroughly trained housekeeper. Miss Shelley, of Talladega, is the governess, and brings to the office high social position, experience as a teacher, liberal education, and matured Christian character. The pupils are trained in gymnastic and calisthenic exercises, thereby developing their physical powers, strengthening their constitutions, and imparting grace and dignity to their movements. Religion is the basis of the system of education, and girls are taught that "the truth as it is in Jesus" is the highest attainable wisdom.

WESLEYAN FEMALE INSTITUTE,

STAUNTON, VIRGINIA,

will begin its next session September 20, 1870, and close June 22, 1871.

REV. WILLIAM A. HARRIS, President.
With Thirteen Professors, Teachers, etc., etc.

Than this no College for Young Ladies ranks higher. System of teaching like that pursued in the University of Virginia. French is taught by a native master of the language. Professor in Department of Music has no superior in any school; among others, is assisted by the distinguished vocalist, Madam Bertha Ruhl. This is one of the healthiest climates in America, and young ladies who come here from the South with feeble constitutions are entirely restored to health. The grounds are large and beautiful; buildings stately and elegant, fanned by the purest breezes, overlooking the entire city, and commanding the most magnificent rural and mountain scenery for thirty miles along the beautiful Valley of Virginia, making it one of the most delightful college homes in the Union.

(From Judge John N. Hendren, M. A., University of Virginia.)

I regard the Wesleyan Female Institute in this place, under the management of Rev. William A. Harris, as one of the very best and most attractive schools in the State. * *

(From Hon. John B. Baldwin.

The Wesleyan Female Institute is surrounded by influences which make it in all respects a most desirable place for the care and education of the daughters of Christian parents.

(From Prof. William E. Peters, LL. D., University of Virginia.)

Young ladies committed to the care of Prof. Harris will enjoy advantages of an intellectual and moral training rarely found.

(From Rev. William E. Munsey, D. D.)

* * * From personal knowledge I believe that as the president of a female college Rev. William A. Harris has no superior; indeed within the purview of my acquaintance he has no equal.

(From Bishop E. M. Marvin, D. D.)

The Wesleyan Female Institute is an honor to the church. Instruction is thorough. All classes stand high. In music advantages are offered of a very high order. The most talented professors are employed, and neither pains nor expense are spared to make this department eminent. The school is very prosperous, and deserves to be so.

TERMS FOR THE ENTIRE SCHOLASTIC YEAR. Board and tuition in the Collegiate Course, $225. Music and other extra studies moderate.

SCHOOLS AND COLLEGES.

LOUISIANA STATE UNIVERSITY,

(Name changed from Louisiana State Seminary,)

BATON ROUGE, LOUISIANA.*

Founded and supported by the State of Louisiana.

The ninth session, now in progress, will close last Wednesday in June, 1870. The next session will begin first Monday in September next, and will continue ten months.

The Academic Board consists of a full corps of able instructors in all branches of literature and science usually taught in the best Colleges and Universities.

The Course of Study embraces a Preparatory and an Academic Department, including a Literary, Scientific and Optional Course, a Special School of Civil Engineering and a Commercial School.

Literary Apparatus and Cabinets are well selected and valuable. The Geological and Mineralogical Cabinets, etc., the largest and most complete in the South, embracing the extensive collections of the late Col. Walles, of Mississippi, and the Cabinets of the Topographical, Geological and Botanical Survey of Louisiana.

Admission granted to cadets not under fifteen years of age, who know arithmetic, English grammar and geography.

Expenses of every kind, except clothing, for ten months, $350; $200 payable in advance, balance February 1; or by accepted draft, at eight per cent., for ninety days. Payments may be made through the Canal or Citizens' Bank.

Cadets received at any time during the session and charged from date of entrance.

Discipline, military, with daily drill. A battery of four guns will afford facilities for instruction in artillery. Uniform of cadet: Gray cloth, to be had at the institution at a cost of $25 per suit.

Baton Rouge, La.

Office of the University in New Orleans, at Swarbrick & Co.'s, 59 Camp street.

* Until the rebuilding of the College edifice, lately destroyed by fire, near Alexandria, the Institution is temporarily located at Baton Rouge, in the Deaf and Dumb Asylum. Location very healthy, and accommodations ample for a large number of cadets. Number this session, 170. je11 4m

VIRGINIA FEMALE INSTITUTE,

STAUNTON, VIRGINIA.

REV. R. H. PHILLIPS, M. A., Principal.

With Nineteen Assistants.

The Twenty-sixth annual session will open SEPTEMBER 14, 1870.

From over a thousand testimonials from Southern patrons we select the following, from General Robert E. Lee, president of Washington College; General Francis H. Smith, president of the Virginia Military Institute, and General W. N. Pendleton, Lexington, Virginia:

"We, the undersigned, have had daughters educated at the Virginia Female Institute, in Staunton, under the care of Rev. R. H. Phillips. They therefore know it to be an admirably conducted and superior institution for young ladies, and they cordially recommend it to favor, even beyond its past extensive patronage. R. E. LEE.
FRANCIS H. SMITH.
WM. N. PENDLETON.
LEXINGTON, VA., March 14, 1870."

For circulars, with full information, address Rev. R. H. PHILLIPS, Principal, or Rev. J. C. WHEAT, Vice Principal, Staunton, Virginia. je11 3m

HOMER COLLEGE.

The scholastic exercises of the Fall Session of this College, located at Homer, Louisiana, under the care of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, will begin on the FIRST TUESDAY of September next.

FACULTY.

Rev. J. E. Cobb, President and Professor of Mental and Moral Science, Greek Language and Literature.
A. W. Nicholson, Professor of Pure and Mixed Mathematics, and Natural Science.
———, Professor of Civil Engineering.
A. C. Calhoun, A. B., Adjunct Professor of Languages and English Literature.

The Preparatory Department is under the care of all the Faculty.

TERMS PER SESSION OF FIVE MONTHS.

Tuition in Collegiate Department	$25 00
Preparatory studies	$15 00 and 20 00
Contingent fee	1 50

Board in private families, per month, $14. Board with room furnished, $15.

Total expenses for board and tuition will range from $85 to $105 per session, while the course of studies is as full and thorough as that of any college in the land.

Active measures have been taken for a full and permanent endowment.

For health and association it is believed that the location cannot be surpassed.

It is the aim of the Trustees to place Homer College in the front rank.

STONEWALL INSTITUTE,

Thirteen Miles North of Selma, Ala.

This School for Boys opens its sixth annual session OCTOBER 3, 1870.

D. C. B. CONNERLY, Principal and Teacher of Languages.
JOHN P. SEABROOK, Teacher of Mathematics.

But few schools accomplish as much for its pupils as this does.

It is in the quiet country. Its teachers give instruction nine hours per day, including two at night.

The Institute belongs entirely to the Principal.

Two Hundred and Sixty Dollars will cover nine months' board, tuition and washing.

Transportation from Selma to the Institute on every Wednesday and Saturday in October to the twenty-second, free of charge.

Refer to Bishop J. C. Keener and John M. Bonner, Esq., New Orleans, Louisiana.

ROANOKE COLLEGE, SALEM, VA.

Next Session Begins September 5.

This Institution has a full corps of instructors, a thorough course of studies, and aims at a high grade of scholarship. Its superior educational advantages, moderate expenses, healthy location, and excellent mail, traveling and telegraphic facilities, render it well worthy the attention and patronage of the South.

Expenses for session of ten months, about.....$210 00

This estimate includes board and tuition, embracing modern languages. A slight advance on the above for students boarding in private families.

For further particulars, catalogues, etc., address REV. D. F. BITTLE, D. D.,
jy16 3m President of the College.

TENNESSEE FEMALE COLLEGE,

FRANKLIN, TENNESSEE.

Fall Session for 1870 Begins Monday September 5.

The claims of this institution rest on the style, extent and thoroughness of the culture it bestows. The climate is favorable for study, the only magic that makes scholars.

It refers to its patrons, including distinguished educators and gentlemen eminent in the pulpit and in the professions.

Catalogues sent on application.

R. K. HARGROVE,
jy23 3m President.

NEW ORLEANS MARKETS.

From the N. O. Price Current.

We have no material change to notice in the general market since our last report. Most branches of the wholesale trade have met only a moderate demand. The better qualities of sugar and molasses have been in limited supply and good request, while the inferior have been dull and drooping. There has been a fair demand for flour, both for export and for the local trade, and grain and provisions have been in good request, but the supplies have been too limited to admit of any activity.

COTTON.—The following are the arrivals since the twentieth instant:

Louisiana and Mississippi.....bales..	16,036
Lake	188
Florida	142
Mobile	657
Texas	263
Total	17,286

On Saturday the movement commenced with only a moderate degree of animation, but after the receipt of telegrams reporting a stronger market at New York, the demand became more active, and 10,300 bales changed hands at steadier prices, without any quotable variation. On Monday the opening rates showed no material change, but after the receipt of the New York dispatch, reporting an advance of ¼c., buyers came forward with more spirit, and although factors raised their pretensions ¼ to ⅜c., yet the sales summed up 11,050 bales, at fuller prices for the better qualities, and an advance of ⅛ to ¼c. in the medium and lower grades, good ordinary closing at 13⅜ to 13¾c., low middling at 11 to 11⅜c., with sales as high as 14½c. and middling at 15c. On Tuesday the market opened with a less active demand, and a tendency to easier prices for all descriptions from average low middling down, and although, particularly toward the close, factors showed a disposition to accept offers which they had previously refused, yet the movement continued languid, and the business did not exceed 7,400 bales. Strict low middling was in very limited supply, and, as well as the higher grades, commanded full prices, even-running selling at a fraction above our outside figures, but average low middling and the lower grades were manifestly weaker, without presenting any marked falling off.

This makes an aggregate for the past three days of 28,700 bales.

The receipts at this port since the first of September (exclusive of the arrivals from Mobile, Florida and Texas) are 666,471 bales, against 590,003 bales to the same date last year, and the increase in the receipts at all the ports, up to the latest dates, as compared with last year, is 386,321 bales. In the exports from the United States to foreign countries, as compared with the same dates last year, there is an increase of 474,949 bales to Great Britain, 36,266 to other foreign ports, and a decrease of 141,124 to France.

Referring to our remarks above, we quote as follows:

Ordinary	12 to 12½
Good ordinary	13½ to 13¾
Low middling	14 to 14½
Middling	to 15
Strict middling	15¼ to 15½

SUGAR.—A fair demand has prevailed since our last review, and especially for the better descriptions, and prices are about the same as previously. The supplies are mostly soft, wet and poor in quality, and are disposed of at 5 to 5¾c. per pound for inferior, 6 to 6¾c. for common, 7 to 7½c. for good common, 7¾ to 8½c. for fair to good fair, 8¾ to 9c. for fully fair, 9¼ to 9½c. for prime, 10c. for strictly prime, 10¼c. for prime to choice, 7½ to 10c. for seconds, 10½ to 11¾c. for yellow clarified, and 11½ to 12¾c. for white.

MONETARY.—Gold, 110⅜ to 110⅝.

American silver half dollars, 108 to 108½, and Mexican dollars at 1¼ to 1¾ per cent. premium in gold.

The sales of bonds include $25,000 new City Seven per cents on Saturday at 69¼ to 69⅝; and $1,000 Parish of Plaquemine, one year, due February 14, at 70.

The sales of warrants include $900 small new State on Tuesday at 72½. Dealers have bought new State at 70, new Metropolitan Police at 97 to 98, and asked 70½ to 72 for the former, and 98 to 98½ for the latter.

City Treasury notes are quoted at 25 per cent. discount.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 27.—House.—The bill authorizing the sale of the Chattanooga Rolling Mill to the Southwestern Iren Company passed.

The Indian appropriation bill passed.

The following resolution passed: Resolved, That the Senate bill to repeal so much of the act, approved July 14, 1870, entitled "An act to reduce the international taxes, and for other purposes," as continues the income tax after the thirty-first day of December, 1869, be returned to that body, with the respectful suggestion on the part of the House that section seven, article one, of the constitution vests in the House of Representatives the sole power to originate such measures.

Senate.—Fourteen thousand citizens of western Pennsylvania protest against the obstructions to navigation by the erection of a bridge at Cincinnati.

The committee to investigate the charges against Senator Sprague for illicit trading with Texas during the war, have been authorized to send for persons and papers.

General Sherman has been appointed regent of the Smithsonian Institute.

The civil service bill was discussed to adjournment.

RICHMOND, Va., Jan. 27.—In the United States District Court to-day Katie Cummings, a colored woman who was sent South as a teacher by a benevolent society in New York, obtained a verdict for $1,100 damages from the Orange and Alexandria Railroad Company for having been ejected from a train at Alexandria, because she, having a first-class ticket, refused to go in the colored people's car.

The joint committee of the Legislature agreed to-day that of the agricultural land scrip fund, one-third should go to the colored people's college and the remainder be divided between the two State colleges.

NEW YORK, Jan. 30.—An address to the King of Italy, with numerous signatures of prominent citizens, will shortly be forwarded. The address closes as follows:

"The triumph of the past will stimulate you to new achievements. We assure yon of our heartfelt sympathy with all your efforts for the good of Italy. We believe you agree with us that the truest wisdom of all rulers is found in justice and beneficence to all men, and the greatest earthly gift to the people is that universal education which is the strength of our country, and which must be the hope of yours.

"We wish for you a long and glorious reign; for your people progress and prosperity; for united Italy independence, stability and honor while the world stands."

FOREIGN.

LISBON, Jan. 25.—Advices from Rio de Janeiro to January 6 have been received. Permission accorded to ships owned in other countries to trade between Brazilian ports has been prolonged until the end of the present year. The rate of interest upon Brazilian treasury bonds has been reduced by one-half of one per cent.

The Borneo was wrecked midway between Montevideo and Santos, and thirty-five persons were drowned.

(This is supposed to refer to the bark Borneo, of Liverpool, Captain Dunlap, from Callao, bound to Liverpool.

A battle was fought near Montevideo, in which the rebels were defeated.

The revolution in Entre Rios is extending to the surrounding provinces

LONDON, Jan. 27.—An official dispatch from Versailles, Friday morning, says: Favre returned yesterday to Paris. He will come to Versailles again to-day, accompanied by a military officer, for the purpose of settling the terms of capitulation.

There has been no firing on either side since midnight.

Robert Payne Smith, regius professor of divinity at Oxford University, has been appointed to succeed the late Rev. Henry Alford as Dean of Canterbury.

VERSAILLES, Jan. 27.—The capitulation of Paris has been signed. The terms are the surrender of the garrison and the summoning of a national assembly.

LONDON, Jan. 27.—The following particulars have been received regarding the first visit of Jules Favre to the German headquarters at Versailles:

It appears that Favre arrived at Versailles on the twenty-third, at five o'clock in the evening, in Bismarck's carriage, which had been sent to the Prussian outpost for him. He was much fatigued, but drove at once to the Chancellor's office, where, after a long interview, he took dinner with Bismarck. The latter held a conference with the Emperor at eleven o'clock the same night.

Odo Russell, the representative of the British foreign office, was apprised beforehand of the approaching visit of Favre.

FLORENCE, Jan. 27.—The difficulty at Tunis, between the Italian consul and the government of that country, has been amicably settled.

The ex-prefect of the Seine, Baron Von Hausen, is at Rome, in consultation with the Italian government regarding the demolition of the old building, and the reconstruction of the city, in conformity with the requirements of the future capital of Italy.

LISBON, Jan. 27.—The ministerial crisis was caused by the appointment of the Bishop of Algarves to the vacant dignity of patriarch of Portugal.

LONDON, Jan. 27.—Favre was in conference with Bismarck at midnight. Bismarck carried his point. The capitulation involves peace; the cession of Alsace and German Lorraine, and part of the fleet; a money indemnity to be guaranteed by the municipalities; a portion of the German army is to return home, and the war is to cease.

It is necessary that some territory be retained to secure the fulfillment of the compact. The mobiles are to be sent home, and the German army to enter Paris. The Emperor will return immediately to Berlin.

PESTH, Jan. 28.—During a discussion in the Lower Chamber of the Austro-Hungarian Parliament, the statement was made by ministers that the reconstruction of Germany was a fixed fact, and that, too, with the free assent of Hungary. The Germanization of Hungary was not involved, and her neutrality was not threatened by this happy solution of the problem of German unity.

LONDON, Jan. 28.—Smallpox has become epidemic in London. The rapid increase of mortality causes alarm. The deaths from the disease, which in the first week in January were seventy-nine, in the third week increased to one hundred and eighty-eight.

It is stated in diplomatic circles that the negotiations for the capitulation of Paris would have been concluded earlier, had not Bismarck insisted on the acceptance of the conditions of peace.

The French iron-clad Solferino, westward bound, has put into Queenstown harbor.

Prince Frederick William will hereafter be styled Imperial Highness and Crown Prince of Germany.

LONDON, Jan. 28.—A special telegram from Vienna to the Daily News represents that Turkey is opposed to Austria's introduction of the Danubian question in the conference. The Observer supposes the conference will be adjourned on account of the capitulation of Paris.

LONDON, Jan. 29, 4.30 P. M.—Emperor William sent the following dispatch to the Empress:

VERSAILLES, 2 P. M., Sunday.—Last night an armistice for three weeks was signed. The regulars and mobiles are to be interned in Paris as prisoners of war. The national guard will undertake the maintenance of order. We occupy all the forts.

Paris remains invested, but will be allowed to revictual as soon as the arms are surrendered. The National Assembly is to be summoned to meet at Bordeaux in a fortnight.

All armies in the field retain their respective positions. The ground between the opposing lines to be neutral. This is the reward of patriotism, heroism and sacrifices. Thank God for this fresh mercy. May peace soon follow.

WILHELM.

SUNDAY, 5.30 P. M.—A Versailles dispatch, just received, says: "The twelfth Saxon corps, at ten this morning, occupied Rumaville, Noisy and Nogent; the Bavarians, Charenton, Montrouge and Vanores; and the Silesian corps, Avry and Bicetre.

Paris is to pay two hundred million francs.

Berlin is rejoicing to-day over the news from Versailles.

No confirmation of the reports of capitulation were received there last night, and it was only this morning that the announcement of the actual signing of the terms was received. The first official dispatch was read in the churches.

It is reported that Rothschild will retire from the representation of the city of London, and be called to the House of Lords, with the title of Earl of Mentmore.

Pere Hyacinthe writes to La Liberte, denying the validity of the Pope's encyclical and syllabus, and denouncing generally the hierarchical pretensions of the See of Rome.

LONDON, Jan. 29.—A revolt has broken out among the Tartars in China, and at last accounts it had reached alarming proportions. The rebels had seized many points of importance.

VERSAILLES, Jan. 29.—German troops occupied the forts around Paris at ten o'clock this morning. The entire garrison of Paris, except the national guard, surrender their arms. The armistice expires on the nineteenth of February.

FLORENCE, Jan. 29.—The bill removing the capital of the kingdom to Rome passed by ninety-four to thirty-nine. A resolution complimentary to the city of Florence was adopted.

VERSAILLES, Jan. 30.—Entrance and egress to Paris is forbidden.

The revictualing of Paris is proceeding under German supervision.

Confidence is expressed at German headquarters that peace is secured.

The German troops are chagrined at being forbidden to enter Paris.

LONDON, Jan. 31.—The armistice began instantly at Paris, and three days later in the departments, and expires on the nineteenth of February at noon.

2.30 P. M.—The reassembling of the conference was again postponed in consequence of the illness of Earl Granville.

Postal communication between London and Paris has been reopened.

The Prussians are driving cattle into Paris to feed the inhabitants.

Bismarck has notified the British foreign office that the Dieppe line alone is at present available for the transportation of provisions to Paris, but that until sufficient supplies can be received the Germans will share their stores with the citizens.

The execution of the terms of the convention between Bismarck and Favre proceeded yesterday without interruption.

As the French forces were again advancing south of the Loire, the Prussians destroyed the bridge at Blois. This stopped the advance, as the French subsequently retreated southward. The fourth Prussian reserve took two hundred prisoners at Pattervaut.

The cutter of the war steamer Shenandoah beat that of the British war steamer Pelican in a race in Havre harbor. The American crew made the fastest time on record.

Manteuffel incloses the army of Bourbaki on the Swiss frontier. He overtook the retreating French west of Point Arlier, and captured Chappay and Sambrecourt, with three thousand prisoners and six guns.

The Echo du Monde asserts that a general of the army has committed suicide. No name given.

NEW YORK, Feb. 1.—New warlike complications appear in the East. Austria is rapidly preparing for war. Furloughs are revoked, and it is understood that the Austrian cabinet foresee that Prussia will next attempt to absorb German Austria. In case of war an alliance with France is certain.

Gambetta openly favors a renewal of the war. He has instructed the authorities throughout France to continue the drill and equipping of troops.

War material is still going forward from New York to Havre and Brest.

No faction will consent to cede Alsace and Lorraine. The Empress, the Orleanists and the republic all sternly refuse.—Times.

BORDEAUX, Feb. 1.—It is believed that on the Assembly meeting its first action will be the election of a president of the ministerial council. Favre, Gambetta, Thiers, Picard and Grivyar are the probable candidates.

LONDON, Feb. 1.—A special telegram to the London Times, from Berlin, says that the conditions of peace prescribed by Bismarck to Favre embrace the cession of Alsace and Lorraine, with Belfort and Metz; the payment of ten thousand millions of francs as indemnity for the expenses of the war; the cession of the colony of Pondicherry, and the transfer to the German navy of twenty first-rate frigates.

Favre referred these terms to the National Assembly, to meet at Bordeaux.

IF ANY ONE speaks evil of you, let your life be so that none will believe him.

EXPLOSION OF THE W. R. ARTHUR.

PARTICULARS OF THE DISASTER.

MEMPHIS, Jan. 28.—The following additional incidents have been learned regarding the W. R. Arthur disaster: The books and papers of the boat were all lost, so that there is no means of obtaining a correct list of those who perished. The body of Martin Graney, second steward, of Evansville, has been found. Graney, Miller, Harper and Allen, all belonging to the cabin crew, occupied one room in the texas. Graney and Miller, who slept in the forward berths, were lost, while Harper and Allen, in the after berths, escaped without a scratch.

Mr. Dillon, second mate, went up the river from the wreck on the steamer Lockwood.

From the appearance of the wreck two of the midship boilers must have exploded simultaneously, one going straight up from its foundation and the other being thrown out aft, it being found on the after guard.

Miss Mary E. McClary, a young girl from Chicago, on her way home, was drowned after the explosion. She made her way to the guard of the ladies' cabin, and was seen by the pantryman seemingly stupefied by fear, and as the boat sunk and the water came nearly up to where she was she plunged into the water and sunk.

Edward Anderson, barkeeper, was also saved. Thomas Leonard, of Madison, Indiana, was lost. George Sweeney, of St. Louis, was lost. Mr. Ryan, steersman, saved, but badly burned.

LATER, MIDNIGHT.—It is now definitely known that upward of fifty people lost their lives by the accident this morning. An inquest will be held upon several of the bodies in the morning.

The steamer Cheek went to the wreck at dark, and is now working to get out the bodies of those buried. Mr. Bowman, the clerk, is said to be among them. Three additional bodies have already been recovered.

The following is an additional list of those saved: K. J. Cole and wife, Leavenworth, Indiana; William Byrne, second cook, St. Louis; James Smith, deck hand, St. Louis; Charles Drates, John Johnson, James Fitzgerald, Pat Laughlin, William Harrison, Mike Coleman, deck hands; Ed. D. Oliver, colored, ronster; Charles Hudson, deck hand; George Bowers, passenger, Uniontown, Kentucky; George Nelson, colored; Charles McKinners, deck hand, badly burned; Michael Boyland, Pittsburg, badly burned; W. Hogue, Illinois, slightly; C. L. Dodson, texas tender, Cincinnati, slightly; John Scantz, Illinois, seriously; John Center, Matteon, Illinois, slightly; Louis W. Harper, St. Louis, slightly; George Richie, pilot, badly; Mrs. Paxton and son, slightly.

Those lost are Miss Paxton, Mr. and Mrs. J. Ulen and child, a Mr. Russell, wife and boy, and others whose names cannot now be ascertained.

Captain Brolaski, his wife, child and sister-in-law were saved and were not seriously injured. He put a watchman on the wreck.

Much of the cargo can be saved. He will await instructions.

The clerk was lost.

MEMPHIS, Jan. 29.—Captain Barnard, agent of the St. Louis underwriters, went to the wrock of the W. R. Arthur last night with a steamer, and is now engaged in removing her cargo. Up to the time of the latest information from the wreck four additional bodies had been recovered, none of whom were recognized.

Those at work expected to get fifteen or twenty more, as it is now stated that at the time of the disaster there were a large number of the deck crew—some twenty-five or thirty—asleep on the cotton in the deck room aft of the boilers, all of whom are supposed to have been killed by the explosion, or buried in the ruins. Should this prove true the loss of life will be far greater than at first reported, and will not fall short of eighty persons.

DEATH OF A DISTINGUISHED ENGLISH CLERGYMAN.—Hon. and Rev. Lelund Noel, Vicar of Exton, Ruthandshire, died on Thursday, December 22. The deceased clergyman was the brother of Rev. Baptist Noel, and uncle of the Earl of Gainsborough.

THE celebrated agriculturist, David Dickson, of Georgia, used Murfee's Subsoil this year, (1870,) and says it is the best.

SOME men need a tempest to save them from a wreck.—Alleine.

NEW PUBLICATIONS.

HISTORY OF LOUIS XIV. By John S. C. Abbott. New York: Harper & Brothers, publishers, 1871.

We are indebted to George Ellis & Brother, 82 Camp street, New Orleans, for a copy. It is an elegant 12mo of over two hundred pages, illustrated. Mr. Abbott is too well known as an author to require any characterization now. He goes over a most interesting portion of French history in this volume. One of his faults as a historian is that he paints his characters rather better than they really were. The present work is not altogether clear of this defect.

SHAKSPEARE'S "MERCHANT OF VENICE." Edited with notes by William J. Rolfe, A. M. New York: Harper & Brothers, publishers, 1871.

This little volume, beautifully bound and illustrated, is a gem of typographical art, and very convenient for perusal. It contains an introduction, historical and critical, and elaborate notes, which shed all needful light upon this "most perfect work" of the great dramatist. For sale by Ellis & Brother, 82 Camp street, New Orleans.

LIGHT AT EVENING TIME: a Book of Support and Comfort for the Aged. Edited by John Stanford Holmes, D. D. New York; Harper & Brothers, publishers, 1871.

We imagine that the publishers have seldom sent out a more elegant volume than this. It is richly bound, and printed on cream-tinted paper. The type is large, clear and well adapted to the failing sight of the aged. The editor has executed his task with taste and judgment. It is a compilation of extracts from the best authors on subjects especially suited to the comfort and edification of those who have entered the decline of life. As a gift to an aged friend we can conceive of no uninspired volume more suitable. For sale by George Ellis & Brother, 82 Camp street, New Orleans.

A GERMAN READER: To Succeed the German Course. By George F. Comfort, A. M. New York: Harper & Brothers, 1871.

This work is by the professor of modern languages and æsthetics in Alleghany College, Pennsylvania. For obvious reasons we cannot get very deep into the merits of the selections from German authors. We can see that the arrangement is judicious, and that the index, explanatory notes and vocabulary are convenient and voluminous. Those of our household who are dabbling in German pronounce it a valuable work. It is, of course, for students, and for such as are considerably advanced in the study of the language. For sale by Ellis & Brother, New Orleans.

THE SOUTHERN REVIEW.—A. T. Bledsoe, LL. D., editor. January, 1871. Baltimore: Poisal & Roszell. This number has been looked for with more than usual interest, as it was to initiate the theological element, and to come under the more formal indorsement and patronage of our church. Our readers will not be disappointed, many of whom begin their acquaintance with the present number. The theological element is in it, and strong enough to suit the deepest evangelical Arminianism. The article on "The Suffering and the Salvation of Infants" shows how the doctrine of the everlasting torment of infants took its rise in the Christian world, and how it found its way into the symbolic books and writings of orthodox Protestant denominations. Another article is to follow, in the February number, on the same topic, in which the hypothesis, invented to reconcile the doctrine of infant damnation with reason and conscience, will be examined. "Marriage and Divorce" is not much in the theological line. The article is an historical exhibition of the doctrines and laws of divorce, rather than a discussion of its scriptural grounds and principles. "The Reviewers Reviewed" is an answer to articles which appeared in the Southern Presbyterian Review on the "Theodicy and the Theology of Dr. Bledsoe." The reader will see that the Calvinistic controversy is still a live issue. In this article there is full scope for Dr. Bledsoe's unrivaled powers as a polemical writer. We are glad to note that the doctor has the better of his antagonists in temper as well as in argument. "New England and Secession" is the only article that can be classed as political. It is, however, no more than a vindication of the truth of history, and no objection can be made to its tone or conclusions. This article, if published a generation hence, would excite no suspicion of partisan or sectional animus. The article on "American Education" should be read twice over by all who are disposed to undervalue the importance of a thorough classical course. Of the other articles we cannot now speak particularly. We are exceedingly anxious that all should take the Review, and read it for themselves. Some of our preachers, we are sorry to say, are too poor to subscribe for it. Will not our generous laymen, in such cases, not only take it themselves, but see that their preachers have it? The complete table of contents is: 1. The Suffering and the Salvation of Infants; 2. Pathetic Poetry; 3. Madagascar—its rapid progress; 4. New England and Secession; 5. Marriage and Divorce; 6. American Education; 7. The Reviewers Reviewed; 8. The Beauty of the Universe, a poem; 9. Notices of Books.

THE METHODIST QUARTERLY REVIEW, JANUARY, 1871.—D. D. Whedon, LL. D., editor. New York: Carlton & Lanahan. This number is the best we have seen for a long time. Every article is good, and the editor's department is able and scholarly. The contents are as follows: Monumental Theology, by Prof. Bennett, Berlin, Prussia; The Slavic Races, by Albert S. Long; Constantinople; The Logic of Infant Church Membership, by B. H. Nadal; Mohammedanism in Western Africa, by Edward W. Blyden, A. M.; The Problem of Babel, by Prof. A. B. Hyde; Spectrum Analysis, by Prof. Rush Emory, A. M.; The Rhemish New Testament, by Bostwick Hawley, D. D.; Foreign Religious Intelligence; Foreign Literary Intelligence; Synopsis of the Quarterlies; Quarterly Book Table.

Our Sunday school periodicals for February are to hand. 1. Our Little People, strikingly illustrated, and full of good things for the very little folks. The boys must look at Lazy Bill well. We have seen a great many who are exactly like him. 2. Sunday School Visitor. Here are sixteen pages of beautiful pictures and choice reading matter, equal in a year to a valuable library, and only seventy-five cents. We advise parents and children to take care of the numbers and have them bound at the end of the year. Families living in the country, and who have no Sunday school organization within reach, should subscribe for the Monthly Visitor. 3. The Sunday School Magazine. This number is altogether satisfactory, and will prove a valuable aid to Sunday school teachers. They will find in it much valuable information, and many important suggestions bearing directly upon their special work. We are sure that the general use of this magazine will soon give to our church a greatly improved corps of instructors in our schools. Claiming for it this distinctive mission, we would earnestly commend it to all parents and teachers. Notes for teachers and Bible students in the present number are of great value, and constitute a most important item in the table of contents.

EVERY SATURDAY is becoming one of the finest illustrated publications of the day. Along with considerable literature which we regard as objectionable, there is much that is excellent. The literary merit of this weekly has improved of late, but the striking feature is its illustrations. Many of these have artistic merit, and must cost the publishers an almost incredible sum. The number of January 28 is surpassingly rich in this line.

N. TIBBALS & SON have published the Children's Pictorial Emblems, a neatly bound book, 16mo, with nearly as much reading as a dollar book; containing seventy-three articles and anecdotes on almost every subject of religion, morals and manners, precisely in a style to interest and instruct our children. Also forty emblem pictures, with their explanations. Altogether it makes a manual for our children which is without a parallel in the history of books. Price, thirty-seven cents. Sold only by agents. Sample copies sent by mail on receipt of price.

MISSA STREET CHURCH.—The week of prayer has thus far been a blessed season for this charge. Elder Grant has been preaching every evening since watch night, and there has been a powerful awakening. Ten or twelve persons have come forward for prayers, and the membership and Christians who have come among them have been greatly blessed. The meeting will continue, and bids fair to be a glorious revival.—San Francisco Spectator.

THE WOMAN THAT WAS A SINNER.

BY GEORGE MACDONALD.

Her sister's words, her heart awoke,
Awoke her slumbering truth;
She pledged him well; but he is she looks,
And feel to him for ruth.

With tears she washed his weary feet;
She wiped them with her hair;
He; kisses call them not unmeet,
When they were welcome there.

What saint a richer crown to [illegible]
Could Love's ambition reach?
Her eyes, her lips, her hair, down-
In Love's despair of speech.

His holy manhood's perfect wrath
Owns her a woman still;
It's impossible henceforth
For feet to stoop to ill.

Her to herself his words restore,
The radiance to the day;
A creature to herself no more,
Not yet a castaway.

And so, in kisses, ointment, tears,
And outspread, lavish hair,
Love, shame, and hope, and griefs, and fears
Mingle in worship rare.

Mary, thy holy thoughts not spread
Around the holy feet;
Dost only bless the holy head
With spikenard's ointment sweet;

Or if thou hidst, as some would hold,
Thy heart the lesson caught;
The abandonment so humble-bold,
From her whom pardon taught.

And if thy hair thou, too, didst wind
The holy feet around,
Such penitent tears thou couldst not find
As possessed woman found.

Later in grief the first he read,
And Love, the word of sweet:
He's not content to cross His head;
Let's once cast at His feet.

Such kisses [illegible]
Her tears are priests to faith;
Eye not her hair's worldwise veil,
Baptized in pardoning peace.

For God hath pardoned all her sin,
Her forgiveness hath thirst;
He's love could never have been such
Had not his love come first.

Then rejoice, ye sisters fair,
With early know her case:
There is no sin but has its cure,
In love's unsealing grace.

He did not leave her soul in hell,
Mong shards the silver dove;
But raised her pure, that she might tell
Her sisters how to love.

Sing gave him all your best love can,
Was he despised and sad?
Yes: and yet never mighty man
Such perfect homage had.

Jesus, by whose forgiveness sweet
Her love grew so intense,
We, sinners all, come round thy feet:
Lord, make no difference.

Signed by Variation.

OUR FINANCES.

MR. EDITOR: For several years the various mouthpieces of the church have been full of complaints about our financial deficiencies.—These complaints are likely to become chronic. Indeed the state of our finances not only alarms him who has merely at heart our corporate welfare, but hints with sad significance at a defective spirituality.

Numberless financial reports have been adopted, numberless plans tried, and yet in every item our collections are behind. This campaign against purse-strings has but begun. Let us not vainly hope that after a few more Conference resolutions the victory will be ours. A calm review of the situation may not prove unprofitable.

The inquiry from one end of the church to the other has been: "Give us a plan."

Is there not right here a subtle but radical and dangerous error? Is there not concealed in this eager and jostling contention to produce a successful plan the same latent principle of mischief that was hidden in what Mr. Bledsoe calls the 'great error of the eighteenth century"—that "governments and institutions make the people." We compare "small things with great." On the contrary, institutions of all kinds, and financial systems among the rest, are the product not the cause) of circumstances, together with the intellectual and moral state of the people. Plans, systems, institutions, are the fruit of the tree, which is the people. "Can a man gather grapes of thorns or figs of thistles," if he have ever so good a gathering machine?

Let there be a disposition to give, and a fixed habit of conscientious and systematic giving, and there will necessarily and inevitably be evolved a suitable plan. When the bird has an egg to lay it will build some kind of nest instinctively. Now different birds have different nests—the egg of an ostrich would crush a dozen sparrow nests, and a humming-bird's egg would fall through the interstices of an eagle's aerie. So with many procrustean financial schemes.

Our church has peculiar difficulties. It is more cosmopolitan than any other. We thrive in cities, in villages and in sparsely settled countries. Our powerful connectional and itinerant system forces us everywhere. Like the winds, shifting to every point of the compass, we force ourselves over obstacles, insinuate ourselves into every nook and forgotten cranny, bearing upon our mighty wings the seed of spiritual truth. Other churches are like rivers confined between narrow, conventional dykes.

Thank God! the dykes of Methodism are feeble. We can overflow when there is a freshet from on high. Methodism has churches to support in a thousand places where no other body would think of venturing. Here is our difficulty. A plan adapted to the city will not suit the country.

All admit that scriptural weekly contributions are the most effective. The trouble is to collect them, especially in the country. Many plans of collection proposed are simply preposterous in the sparsely settled districts. There is both a wise policy and a benevolent spiritual end in the scriptural plan.

As a policy it makes the money easy to collect; and in this way: It makes the contributor his own collector. It accomplishes this by creating a habit. Here is the gist of the whole matter—a habit. The force of habit depends upon the frequency and perpetuity of recurrence of the act. We wash our faces every morning, and never forget it. If the act of ablution was performed once a month it would never become a habit. If a people were trained to give or lay aside every Sabbath, and thus became a habit, it would no more be forgotten than the act of dressing for church.

In large circuits, with monthly services, there might be in every household a contribution box, in which, every Sunday, might be deposited the weekly sum. Some such method of keeping up the habit is vital to the success of the scriptural policy.

This scriptural plan is not only a policy, however it aims at a spiritual effect, and is not a pandering to our selfishness. In generating a habit of giving it perpetually reminds us of our dependence and obligation, it continually revives the impression of gratitude and duty, and is an inaudible but practical exhortation every week to lay up our treasure in heaven.

As before stated, however, we must not expect immediate success. The hour of travail must be often repeated. Let resolutions and plans and complaints be continually emitted and incubated. Thus continual agitation will in the rush of years work its effect. Rather, it is itself a necessitated effect, the incoherent outpourings of progressive public opinion striving for utterance.

Life, corporate and individual, is a series of births and transmutations—a constant dissatisfaction with the present—ever struggling after better, ever in the furnace or being welded into higher forms. Does not this necessitate agitation? The church must ever complain of itself. When has it ever pointed to its life or work and said: "Behold, it is good." None but God can do that. God forbid that we should ever be satisfied with our financial report.

REPENTANCE.—You might pound a lump of ice with a pestle into a thousand fragments, but it would still continue ice. But bring it in beside your own bright and blazing fire, and soon, in that genial glow, the living waters flow. A man may try to make himself contrite. He may search out his sins, and dwell on all their enormity, and still feel no true repentance. But come to Jesus with his words of grace and truth. Let that flinty, frozen spirit bask in the beams of the Sun of Righteousness—then will it melt.—Dr. James Hamilton.

EARLY PIETY.

"When Jesus was here among men,
He called little children as lambs to his fold."

A sweet and lovely spirit of piety in a little child's heart, is like the sunlight shining on the dewdrops of the morning.

Our Father is good and kind to his little ones; he listens to their earliest prayers, and rejoices in the first faint fragrance of the opening bud, which, if tenderly shielded and prayerfully nursed, will even now yield the ripened fruit of a holy life.

"Jesus loves a little child:
He was lowly, meek and mild."

"He will feed his flock like a shepherd; he will gather the lambs with his arms, and carry them in his bosom."

Every child knows what it is to love his mother, but can he tell you anything more about it than that he feels it? Can any man say more?

Every child can take hold of his father's hand and go with him in the dark, and that is having faith in his father; but he cannot tell what faith is.

The child Samuel could say: "Speak, Lord, for thy servant heareth," though he could not know the voice of the Lord from the voice of Eli.

So the little child can believe in Christ, and love Christ, though he cannot know all of the deep things in religion. He can live upon the sincere milk of the word, and grow thereby, and that is all that is necessary for his being gathered to Christ.

So the little one does not know how he believes in Christ, and how he lives by faith; but he does. And the tall trees of the forest, and the giant oak on the hill, can no more tell how they are nourished by the rain and the sunshine than the violets that grow in the crack of a rock; and the lofty tree in the garden and the frail lily are alike fed, they know not how. When the child has said that he feels love to Christ in his heart, could a Newton, with all his great mind, say more?

"The lambs of Jesus, who are they
But children who believe and pray—
That keep God's laws and ask his grace,
And seek a heavenly dwelling place?"

There is no doctrine of the word of God which a child, if he is capable of salvation, is not capable of receiving. Teach children all the great doctrines of truth, without a solitary exception. As soon as a child is capable of being damned, it is capable of being saved. As soon as a child can sin, that child can, God's grace assisting it, believe and receive the word of God.

"'Tis truth that binds, and truth makes free;
And sets the soul at liberty
From sin and Satan's heavy chain,
And then within the heart doth reign."

What system of education is more baneful, soul-ruinous than this, that a child is to reject God and all holy principles till he arrives at mature age? Whence the doctrine that children must first give their hearts to work wickedness with greediness, drink in iniquity as the ox drinketh in water—some four, six, eight or ten years before bowing to King Jesus, form habits of evil-doing that are more difficult to eradicate than for the Ethiopian to change his skin or the leopard his spots.

It is the duty of every Christian parent living in communion with God to bring up his children so that they shall be Christians from the beginning.

The grace of God is given just as much during the process of education and unfolding as afterward during the process of deliberate volition in adult life; yea, more abundantly. Yet how greatly is the work neglected! You cannot, parent, bequeath to your children anything that shall be equal to a heart in alliance with God. It is very well to leave your child property; it is very well to leave him an honored name. It is very well to see him well connected, affianced, and filling an honored place in society. Surround him with joys; scatter gold mines under his feet; span the crystal dome over his head; send winged birds to sing for him of joy and peace. But you have done but little for him; he is but a bankrupt unless there is added to all these an abiding faith in the life to come, and an abiding trust that for him there is a place among the sons of God. All is for naught if it does not lead him to trust in the Lord Jesus Christ, and to live for the world to come, and not for the world that now is. It is a very solemn thing to take God's children and attempt to rear them. But it is an awful thing to prevent them by bringing them up for this world, and utterly forgetful of the world that is to come. We are making slow work in converting; we must begin at the other end. Let us begin now to take care of little children.

"To the little ones offer flowers
Of stainless beauty—let religion's glow
Be holy on the yet unshadow'd brow.
So shall thy spirit's ladder manhood be
From passion's storm and guilt's wild darkness free;
And visions of Divine age, like tints of Eden,
Bright with unutter'd bliss, melt into heaven."

SERMO AD CLERUM.

CLERICAL AND SECULAR EMPLOYMENT.

"And he left the oxen."—I KINGS xix, 10.

The text is spoken of the prophet Elisha, who lived about nine hundred years before Christ. He was, as we learn from the context, a man of property—a farmer of substantial character, who oversaw his own workmen, and assisted himself in the operation. "He was plowing with twelve yoke of oxen, and he with the twelfth." This marks his importance and the extent of his agricultural business. He was no mean man, no insignificant farmer, and no idler waiting for an adventure to better his condition; but a man of note in his day—a man of means, and a man of industry and energy. But when Elijah passed by him, and cast his mantle upon him, he left the oxen. All of them—as well the yoke he drove himself, as the eleven others that went before. He did not even stop to give instructions in regard to the continuance of the work, or the putting out of the crop. All that was declined by him, and devolved upon other parties. His avocation was honorable; it was useful and it was profitable; but he left it all to accept a higher position, to engage in a nobler calling. His Master had a better work, and a more glorious reward.

He left the handles of the plow for the mantle of the prophet. He did it instantly. There was no hesitation, no weighing of considerations. He left the oxen. Not that he despised manual labor or honest industry, but because he was called away. The call was divine, and must be obeyed. It required his entire time and thoughts, and could not be fulfilled by a partial attention. He could not prophesy as he plowed, therefore he left the oxen. He did not take them with him. He had no use for them in his new vocation. Other instrumentalities were to be used. Those he left would pass into other hands. He left the oxen. The separation was final—he never came back. His life was long and eminent, and much checkered by vicissitudes of fortune, but Elisha never returned to the plow. His inclination did not incline him; his health did not require it, and the necessity of life did not compel him. Called to be a prophet, he magnified his office, and his office supported him, or God supported him in it. He was not rich, but he was not in want. And when he was offered rich gifts he declined them positively and instantly. God provided him with all things necessary. He left the oxen, but he did not starve or beg his bread. And in his case was illustrated the saying of the Psalmist: "I have been young and now am old, yet have I never seen the righteous forsaken or his seed begging bread."

His eminence was distinguished, and his mission marked by God's signal favor. None more so. His name lives, and will live forever, in the oracles of the saints—in time, and when time shall be no more.

What it would have been, had he not left the oxen, we can only surmise. Or what, had he left them and returned, we may only speculate. We will not be wise above what is written. Let the text teach its own lesson. A few practical observations in conclusion:

INFERENCE.

From this subject we infer:

1. That no one should leave his oxen for the ministry unless he is divinely called.

2. That, being so called, he should leave them promptly, heartily and entirely.

3. That, having so left, he should never return, but devote himself wholly to the work of the ministry.

4. That if he do so faithfully he will be crowned with success and honor.

"He that endureth to the end shall receive a crown of everlasting life."

When we see a minister of the gospel engage in secular employment we say to ourselves: He is going back to the oxen. When we see his sermons, in consequence, lose their interest, and degenerate into the mere assertion of unquestioned platitudes, or equally unprofitable declamation, we inquire: Why does he not leave the oxen? When the audience becomes sparse, the support small, and the interest less, we think: Will he not leave the oxen? When we find the congregation growing still smaller, the dissatisfaction increasing, and the support diminishing, until it is wholly inadequate, and the poor pastor leaving, from sheer necessity, to seek another field, we are sick at heart, and mentally say: Why did he not leave the oxen?—Christian Observer.

GENUINE Christians, by their holy lives and holy conversations, are the means of directing others not only how to escape all of the dangers to which they are exposed on the rough and tempestuous ocean of human life, but also of leading them into the haven of eternal safety and rest.

Henry Alford, Dean of Canterbury.

The Interior contains the following notice of the life of Dean Alford:

The submarine cable brings to us the intelligence of the sudden death, on the thirteenth ultimo, in London, of Henry Alford, Dean of Canterbury, in the sixty-first year of his age. Dr. Alford graduated at Trinity College, Cambridge, with high honors, and at an early age entered upon the literary career which was to prove so distinguished. In 1831 he published a book entitled Poems and Poetical Fragments, followed three or four years after by one with the title, The School of the Heart and other Poems, this latter volume bearing the name of the author. He became a fellow of Trinity College in 1834, and in 1841 and 1842 he was Hulsean professor at Cambridge, and from 1841 to 1857 was examiner of logic and moral philosophy in the University of London. His edition of the New Testament, by which he is so well known in this country, was issued, the first volume of it, in 1841, and the fifth, completing the work, in 1861. It has given him the highest rank among the biblical scholars of the age, and the favorable position it holds it will be likely to maintain. Dr. Alford is also the author of an edition of the New Testament for English readers, a work of high value. Several volumes of his sermons have also been issued from time to time, and received with much favor. He was editor for several years of the Cotemporary Review. As a preacher he exerted much influence, and during his ministerial connection with Quebec St. Chapel, London, from 1853 to 1857, crowds were attracted to hear him. In 1857 he received, through Lord Palmerston, the appointment of Dean of Canterbury, a position he continued to hold till his death. His volume entitled The Queen's English, published in 1861, was designed to correct some of the errors of expression in common use among English-speaking people, and the work, from its character not less than the execution, enjoyed a wide circulation. He has died before reaching a ripe old age, but has lived long enough to leave, in the fruits of his busy and useful life, a monument to his learning, scholarship and worth that kings and princes might well envy.

The Independent, in an article on the character of the eminent scholar and divine, speaks of him in the following terms:

The poet-commentator is dead. It is a singular combination of faculty; but in Dean Alford's case it was a singularly happy one. It is an odd history, this of a man whose early poems have often been compared to Wordsworth's, and who had a poetical reputation of no mean order within his reach, but who turned away from it to give his life to the critical and painstaking study of the Greek Testament, standing at last at the very head of English critical commentators, and producing the only work of English scholarship worthy to rank with the great German works of this class. Looking at the amazing learning and labor embodied in the compressed sentences and condensed type of the four stout volumes, it seems incredible that its author could have been a poet also. But, as a man must be something of a critic to be a true poet, so we think he must be something of a poet in order to be a great critic. The poetic insight of Dean Alford is one of his most valuable qualities as a commentator. Wherever he throws up the highway of his criticism the green grass of poetic feeling adorns the margin. And the poetic intuition renders his criticism in many places more substantial service than adornment. Stier is the only German expositor that we know whose insight is at all comparable to Alford, and he lacks the counter-balance of Alford's practical English common sense.

A liberal evangelical, a churchman in the most catholic sense, there was that in Dr. Alford's theological positions that in some sense opened to him avenues of influence into all sections of the English Church, while he did not want for opposition from all. Disliked by the extreme evangelicals for his liberality and his wholesome hatred of the slavish literalism of the harmonists, he was almost savagely denounced, on the other hand, by the Westminster Review for his adherence to the doctrine of inspiration. It may be long before the Anglican Church finds herself possessed of another scholar combining a learning so varied, an insight so acute, a judgment so sound, and a candor and diligence so admirable.

We cannot close this sketch without quoting the eloquent words with which he closed his great labor in the Prolegomena to Revelations (third edition:)

"I have now only to commend to my gracious God and Father this feeble attempt to explain the most mysterious and glorious portion of his revealed Scripture; and with it this my labor of now eighteen years herewith completed. * * * May he spare the hand which has been put forward to touch his ark; may he for Christ's sake forgive all rashness, all perverseness, all uncharitableness which may be found in this book, and sanctify it to the use of his church; its truth, if any, for teaching; its manifold defects for warning. My prayer is and shall be that in the stir and labor of men over his word, to which these volumes have been one humble contribution, others may arise and teach, whose labors shall be so far better than mine that this book and its writer may ere long be utterly forgotten. Even so, come Lord Jesus."

SHORT TEMPERANCE SERMONS.

Every moderate drinker could abandon the intoxicating cup if he would; every inebriate would if he could.—John B. Gough.

In the intoxicating cup discontent seeks for comfort, cowardice for courage, bashfulness for confidence, sadness for joy; and they all find ruin.

O that men should put an enemy in their mouths to steal away their brains! that we should with pleasure and applause transform ourselves to beasts.—Shakspeare.

Those men who destroy a healthful constitution of body by intemperance and an irregular life, do immediately kill themselves as those who hang, or poison, or drown themselves.—Sherlock.

I challenge any man who understands the nature of ardent spirits and yet for the sake of gain continues to be in the traffic, to show that he is not involved in the guilt of murder.—Dr. Lyman Beecher.

I am deeply convinced that the evils of intemperance can never cease till the virtuous in society shall unite in pronouncing the man who attempts to accumulate wealth by dealing out poison and death to his neighbor as infamous.—J. Pierpont.

Some of the domestic evils of drunkenness are houses without windows, gardens without fences, fields without tillage, barns without roofs, children without clothing, principles, morals or manners.—Franklin.

Who has a stupid intellect, a broken memory, a blasted wit, and which is worse than all, a blind and benighted conscience, but the intemperate? So impossible is it to make to turn sot without making himself a blockhead too.—Dr. South.

Truly, there is no enemy more dangerous than drunkenness, and no slavery more terrible than that of the drunkard. At one time he encounters man under the form of custom, habit, friendship; at another under the deceitful garb of pleasure! But when it has once completely fastened on its victim, what a pitiable state of moral degradation is he reduced! He will readily barter his own liberty, his honor, his character, his peace, and the very existence of his family—for what? For mere brute gratification! for senseless, stupid indulgence!—Daniel Kimball.

BE DECIDED.—A gentleman and his wife were present at a camp meeting. Neither had ever made profession of religion. Under one of the sermons the lady was deeply and sorely convicted of sin. She desired to go forward and kneel at the altar as a poor penitent. Her husband protested against it, and tried to lead her from the ground. Her convictions were so profound and intense that she insisted upon presenting herself at the altar. He used his authority, forbidding her to go. She plead with him for her soul's sake not to interfere with her conscience. He threatened to disown her if she dared to go. "Never shall you return to my house if you go," said he. Swept as by an irresistible current of anxiety and longing, she ran to the altar. Casting herself upon the ground, she plead for the divine mercy. Such earnest looking found a speedy response, and the "peace of God" rested upon her spirit. "O where is my husband?" she exclaimed as she tried to rise from her knees. "Here I am," said he, as he bed the crushed and penitent one who had followed her in her flight toward God, and had fallen by her side, himself crying for mercy. Peace soon came to his heart, and they went from the meeting rejoicing in God.—Sunday School Journal.

CROOKED HABITS.—While shaking hands with an old man, the other day, we noticed that some of his fingers were quite bent inward, and he had not the power of straightening them. Alluding to this fact he said: "In these crooked fingers there is a good text for a talk to children. For over fifty years I used to drive a stage, and these bent fingers show the effects of holding the reins so many years."

This is the text. Is it not a suggestive one? Does it not teach how oft-repeated facts become a habit and once acquired, it remains generally through life.

The old man's crooked fingers dear children, are but an emblem of the crooked tempers, words and actions of men and women.

MY WIFE AND I.

A sky of azure, a bit of heaven,
An hour of bliss to mortals given,
A church, a dainty dress by my side,
A solemn service, a kiss—a bride;
Then thronging friends,
A last good by;
And so we are married—
My wife and I.

Long hours of rapture, long days of joy,
Time passing unheeded—without alloy;
A tour when everything looks its best,
A river in autumn glory dressed;
No thought of trouble,
No care nor sigh,
For we are so happy—
My wife and I.

A slow awakening, as from a dream,
A drifting once more into life-work's stream,
A little respite from toil, and then
The world with its hopes and fears again;
But a home and a love
That shall last for aye,
For now we are settled—
My wife and I.

And the hours vanish in Time's quick flight,
And our life's fair morning grows to night,
And aching cares with our pleasures stay,
And our heads are streaked with the silvery gray;
Yet shall love increase
As the days go by;
And we live for each other—
My wife and I.

THE ASTRONOMY OF JOB.

Every one is acquainted with the story of Galileo. It is a dark scene on the pages of history. We are not about to repeat the account. Our object is simply to bring out a new point in biblical criticism which recalls Galileo to mind. When the ecclesiastical tribunal, in 1683, condemned the Italian astronomer for maintaining propositions in regard to the revolutions of the earth philosophically false, erroneous in faith, and expressly contrary to Holy Scripture," and triumphantly pointed to the command of Joshua, "Sun, stand thou still upon Gibeon; and thou, moon, in the valley of Ajalon," and the sun stood still, and the moon stayed," the churchmen argued that the Ptolemaic system was as incontrovertible as the Aristotelian philosophy, and that both were in entire accordance with the Scriptures. They had been, years before, amazed and enraged by the letter of Galileo to the Abbe Castello, written to prove that the Scriptures were not intended to teach us science and philosophy, and that it was equally difficult to reconcile the Ptolemaic and Copernican systems with expressions in the Bible. They little thought, however, that there was a passage in Scripture, written more than two hundred years before Joshua crossed the Jordan, in which the doctrine of the revolution of the earth upon its axis, taught by Galileo, is fully affirmed. Yet such is the case; and had their eminences been as good Hebraists as they were priests and inquisitors, they would have known that the Lord, when he answered Job out of the storm, had distinctly declared it, and would not have darkened council by words without knowledge."

Perhaps some of our readers will be not less surprised than the cardinals themselves would have been to find that the old patriarch had received a revelation on astronomy. They may say that the science of the heavens was born in the pure atmosphere of the Orient, where the moons of Jupiter can be seen without the aid of the glass of Fiesole, and that it is not strange that the "greatest among the sons of the East" would be acquainted with the peculiar science of his native land; but they are not prepared to acknowledge that Job was in advance of Copernicus. He was so, however, as we propose to show to their satisfaction.

A few years since the Rev. Carteret Carey, incumbent of St. John's, Guernsey, published a "Translation of the Book of Job." It is in blank verse, amply illustrated by critical notes and a commentary. The work is but little known in this country, though it possesses great merit. We extract the following lines from the thirty-eighth chapter. They begin with the twelfth verse—a well known passage in the English Bible:

"Hast thou since thy days, commanded the morning?
And caused the day-spring to know his place?
That it might take hold of the wings of the earth
That the wicked might be shaken out of it?
It turneth round like a seal of the clay,
And things stand out as though in dress."

An explanation of the original will satisfy any one moderately acquainted with Hebrew that Mr. Carey is correct. The words will not bear the rendering given them in the Anglican version. A verbal critic would be out of place here. The translation alludes to the turning round of the earth like a seal of clay. Both in Assyria and Egypt these clay seals are found. They are made in the form of a wheel, and have their designs wrought in relief upon the tire, and when used were rolled over the soft wax or whatever was intended to take the impression. Thus the "objects" or designs "stand out," and as the seal rolls round, the revolution of the earth is declared and illustrated, and one remarkable agreement between science and Scripture is established conclusively.

In Galileo's time, had not a knowledge of Hebrew been limited to very few, and had not the ecclesiastics of that day, like too many of the clergy of our time, contented themselves with such acquaintance of Holy Writ as may be obtained from versions, there would not have been enacted the dark scene which affords, in the punishment and retraction of Galileo, so triumphant an exhibition of the wickedness and weakness of man. "Human nature," says Sir David Brewster, "is here drawn in its darkest coloring; in surveying the melancholy picture it is difficult to decide whether religion or philosophy has been most degraded. While we hear the presumptuous priest pronouncing infallible the decrees of his own erring judgment, we see the high-minded philosopher abjuring the eternal and immortal truths which he has himself the glory of establishing."

We will add that they who make it a business to interpret the Scripture should inform themselves in regard to the original languages in which Scripture was written, and should not be terrified at the developments of modern scholarship. Appletons' Journal.

SUSANNAH WESLEY MEMORIAL.

Some years ago a movement began to erect a suitable memorial to the mother of the Wesleys. This has been completed, and was on the nineteenth of December unveiled in front of the old City Road Chapel, London. The inscription is as follows:

"In the Bunhill Fields
Burial-ground, opposite,
Lie the remains of
SUSANNAH WESLEY,
Widow of
The Rev. Samuel Wesley, M. A.,
Rector of Epworth, Lincolnshire,
Who died July 23d, 1742,
Aged 73 years.
She was the youngest daughter of
The Rev. Samuel Annesley, D. D.,
Ejected by the Act of Uniformity
From the Rectory of
St. Giles, Cripplegate, Aug. 24, 1662.
She was the mother of
The Revs. John and Charles Wesley,
The former of whom was under God
The founder of
The Societies of the People
Called Methodists."

Addresses were made by Rev. Marmaduke C. Osborn, Rev. Dr. Jobson, Hon. Mr. McArthur, M. P., and Hon. Rev. Charles Reed, M. P. The latter said:

Many of us are reminded of Christian mothers without whose blessed influence we should not be as we are at the present moment. It is well that we should record in this public manner our testimony to the worth of women whose private life and domestic influences soften our characters, and, by the mercy of God, have a power over us that nothing else could possibly exert. I am glad to think that in this city there is a memorial of this kind to that noble woman, Selina, Countess of Huntingdon; and that now another is reared to the memory of Susannah Wesley—one quite as noble as the Countess of Huntingdon, but without the title she bore. She was the daughter of one of those noble men who, in a period of strife and difficulty, religiously, in this country, renounced the valuable preferment he held in the parish of Cripplegate, and became, in common with thousands more, one of the "ejected ministers," who preached the gospel to every creature. Knowing more, as we do, of the blessings of civil and religious liberty, we have reason for feeling grateful that we can place this memorial here to the memory of one who, coming from such a noble stock, did such a noble work in this land of ours. Susannah Wesley does not belong to you only. I am a Congregationalist, but I feel deeply interested in her memory; I feel it belongs to this whole country and to the Christian church; for she was the mother of two men, at any rate, who made their mark while God permitted them to live, and whose memories remain to us.

INFLUENCE OF MODERATE DRINKING. The Buffalo Christian Advocate contains the following:

Horace Greeley says a man may drink moderately but steadily all his life, with no apparent harm to himself, but his daughters become nervous wrecks, his sons epileptics, libertines or incurable drunkards, the hereditary tendency to crime having its pathology and unvaried laws, precisely as scrofula, consumption or any other purely physical disease. These are stale truths to medical men, but the majority of parents, even those of average intelligence, are either ignorant or wickedly regardless of them.

A LADY recently said to an Irish man servant: "I wish you would step over and see how old Mrs. Jones is this morning." He returned in a few minutes with the information that Mrs. Jones was seventy-two years old.

PURITY OF CHARACTER.

Never in any age was it more important to impress our youth with the value of this great essential principle than at the present time. "Time is money." How important then is it to us all! Here is pure gold unalloyed, without which our time will be a "drug" upon the market, before entering the world's great banqueting hall.

Young man, stop a moment and think. What is life? It is a vapor—a dream when one awaketh. Yet life is more than mere mist—it is not a phantasm, but a reality. Yes,

"Art is long and Time is fleeting,
And our hearts, though stout and brave,
Still, like muffled drums, are beating
Funeral marches to the grave."

And we are passing away. Whither are we drifting? Has it well been asked: "Young man, what is your life?" It is a precious boon. Now, then, in youth, lay the foundation of a good, manly character; let purity be the beau ideal of thy beautiful life; let thy thoughts be pure, then shalt you go forth well equipped for thy warfare; for life, indeed, is often a struggle. Be prudent, thoughtful; "speak evil of no man." Remember that charity suffereth long and is kind—beareth all things, endureth all things. "Keep thy heart with all diligence, for out of it are the issues of life." The fountain being pure, the stream will be pure. Remember this fact—"you are really what you are in secret." When alone, your meditation, your reflection will give shape to your conduct, and your character will thus be formed. You have admired the loveliness of the rose, the flower, and "the beautiful snow."

You have looked upon the plum and the apricot—did you notice the bloom and beauty of these? That soft, delicate blush overspreading the cheek is said to be more exquisite than the fruit itself. Now, if you strike your hand over it, it is at once gone forever; for it never grows but once. The flower that hangs in the morning impearled with dew, arrayed as no queenly woman ever was arrayed with jewels, once shake it so that the beads roll off, and you may sprinkle water over it as you please, yet it can never be made again what it was when the dew fell silently upon it from heaven. On a frosty morning you may see the panes of glass covered with landscapes, mountains, lakes and trees, blended in beautiful fantastic pictures. Now, if you lay your hand on the glass, and by the scratch of the finger or the warmth of the palm, all the delicate tracery will be obliterated. So there is in youth a beauty and purity of character which, when once touched and defiled, can never be restored; a fringe more delicate than frost work, and which, when torn and broken, will never be re-embroidered. A man who has spotted and soiled his garments in youth, though he may seek to make them white again, can never wholly do it, even though he wash them with his tears.

When a young man leaves his father's house with the blessing of his mother's kiss still wet upon his forehead, if he lose that purity of character, it is a loss that he never can regain—never! Such is the fearful consequence of crime—the deep stain of sin; its effect cannot be eradicated—it can only be forgiven, and that forgiveness comes only from the God of all purity.

"Nor bleeding bird nor bleeding beast,
Nor hyssop nor sprinkling priest,
Nor running brook, nor flood nor sea,
Can wash the dismal stain away.
Jesus, thy blood, thy blood alone,
Hath power sufficient to atone;
Thy blood can cleanse us white as snow—
No Jewish types can cleanse us so."

ANCIENT TELEGRAPHING.—The communication of intelligence by the electric telegraph, now come into use at the East, recalls an interesting circumstance of ancient history. Compare it with the mode employed lately in sending news to Constantinople from Ephesus, that the railway was completed to the latter place from Smyrna. The ancient message was dispatched over the same route.

When Helena, the mother of Constantine the Great, was prosecuting her pious researches in Jerusalem, she caused a series of towers to be built along the sea coast from Tyre to Constantinople, and when she had effected what she and the Christians of the fourth century regarded as her great discovery, the uncovering of the beams of wood in the pit near Calvary, which she believed, for some reason which we may well doubt, to be the wood of the cross of Christ, she "telegraphed" the account of the discovery to her son in Byzantium. A fire blazing on the hill of Acra sent the intelligence to the hill at Ramah, the city of Samuel, and thence it flew to the hill of Samaria, where the city of Omri was then splendid in its Roman decorations. They saw it from far-off Carmel, and lit their fires to tell the news to those who watched on the spur of Lebanon that goes down to the sea of Tyre, and so it flashed along the shore by Berytus and Tripoli, and Laodicea of Syria, and the strange story was dropped from the line at Antioch, then the most lordly and magnificent city in the world. It crossed the battle plain of Issus; it blazed along the Tarsus. It crossed the hills above Philadelphia, it leaped the mountain passes about Colosse, it lit with starlike radiance the waters of the archipelago as it went from hill to hill by Thyatira and Pergamos, and over Ida, "many-fountained Ida," and the plains of Troy. From the summit of high Olympus (Olympus in Asia) the inhabitants of the new city of Constantine saw the flash of the expected message, and their shouts and hymns of thanksgiving in the mid-streets answered the enthusiastic rejoicings of the people in Jerusalem. The towers of Helena stand in mournful ruin all along the route of that dispatch. It would not be surprising if the wires of Morse's invention are some time affixed to the walls of those very towers.

The Largest Sunday School in the World.

"Stockport! Stockport!" The porter's clear voice rang through the carriage in which I had been for some three hours seated, and reminded me that I must alight here if I intended to see the largest Sunday school in the world.

It was on the evening of Sunday, June 16, 1805, that the committee and teachers and children met on the site of the present building, the foundation stone of which had been laid the evening before, "to celebrate in a solemn manner the commencement of this undertaking." At that time Stockport was much smaller than it is now, and the £4,000 that the building was estimated to cost was a vast sum. The building when completed would accommodate four thousand children, but it was soon filled, and four branch schools were built in various parts of the town. In 1835 an addition was made to the original building, involving an outlay of £2,500, and providing twenty-five more teaching rooms. About eighteen years after, the organ, which had cost £500, was replaced by a new one of much larger size, at a cost of £700. Two years later the jubilee was celebrated by wiping off the debt that remained after the enlargement in 1835. A grand tea meeting was held, to which one thousand two hundred tickets were sold at 1s. 6d. each. The [illegible] presided, and the father of the present queen, with several members of Parliament and other notables, were on the platform. The address to the public at this time describes the establishment as strengthened by four branch schools, the whole erected at a cost of £20,000, supported by an annual expenditure of £500, raised by voluntary subscription; in which five thousand children are now educating under the care of four hundred and forty teachers, and on whose registers are inscribed the names of seventy thousand scholars and three thousand five hundred gratuitous teachers, who use the Bible, without note, comment or Apocrypha, as their class book, and offer to every poor child in the town or neighborhood of Stockport who applies for admission the inestimable blessing of a moral and a religious education.

From the last published report (1869) I find that the number of scholars is five thousand one hundred and fifty, and four hundred and thirty-two teachers; of whom four thousand and thirty-five scholars and three hundred and twenty-three teachers are in the central school. Of these four thousand and thirty-five scholars, two thousand and eighty-three, and of the three hundred and twenty-three teachers, one hundred and eighty-four are on the male side of the school. The number of the last registered scholar is eighty-four thousand two hundred and sixty-three, and of the last registered teacher, four thousand six hundred and fifty. The total working expenses of the school last year amounted to £856 17s. 9d.—Sunday School Journal.

THERE are many rocks on which many souls that hear the gospel are split. Some think all religion consists in some external observances, without any spiritual frame; others apprehend that they shall be saved because of some good meaning in them, though they have never had a heart to do any good. Some think it enough to admit some conviction of sin, and feel some regret for the same, though they never amend their ways, as if they expected that pardon was to be a remitting of their duty, instead of a remitting of their sin. Others again conceit they may live very good lives, though they never had any serious sense of the evil of sin, nor any humble contrition for the same; and some think they can be religious toward God, though unrighteous toward their fellow-men.—Wm. Crawford.

A LADY, in reply to some guests who praised the mutton on the table, said: "Oh! yes, my husband always buys the best; he is a great epicure."

GOD will never withhold from those who trust him the means to carry on his work.

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

MANY Baptist churches in England practice the dedication of infants in a special service without baptism. The English Independent asks whether "it will hurt very much to add the symbol to the thing signified?"

ACCORDING to a writer in the New Jerusalem Messenger, there are only seventy Swedenborgian churches in this country, and only half of the seventy have ministers, and there are just four theological students in the New Church Divinity School.

JAPAN.—The Foreign Missionary of the Presbyterian Church says in its January number: "The prejudice against Christianity in Japan is very much weakened. The present government is more liberal, and the old hostility to foreigners is rapidly dying out."

A LAW has been enforced throughout Italy for the removal of the numerous shrines of the Madonna. The British and Foreign Bible Society, having secured a suitable locality in the Corso, Rome, have opened a Bible depot, with the sign over the door, "Sacre Bibbie in Diverse Lingue."

THE Liberal Christian and the Christian Register, the two principal organs of the Unitarian denomination, are sustained through the payment of large amounts of money annually by a few wealthy and enterprising Unitarians. The deficit of one of them alone amounted last year to $30,000.

THE JEWS.—The Jewish Messenger complains that not one family in a hundred erected booths at the late feast of tabernacles. It adds that there are intelligent Hebrews who will erect Christmas trees on the twenty-fifth of December, but yet look with contempt on such antiquated notions as the booth.

AT A RECENT dedication of the Unitarian church in Cincinnati, portions of the Analectics of Confucius, of the Koran, and extracts from the sacred writings of the Hindus, were read as of equal authority with the Christian Scriptures. We cannot conceive why these religionists should wish to retain the name of Christians.

THE Lutheran Observer says: "Our industrious 'Gleaner' announced last week from his 'Garret' that one hundred and seventeen new Lutheran churches had been dedicated in the United States during the year 1870, being a fraction over two every week. This indicates a progress which is truly encouraging, and greater than that of any other denomination in this country."

THE church almanacs for 1871 of the Lutheran and Episcopal churches of this country show these two denominations to be about the same in size. The Lutheran Church reports 2,211 ministers and 392,721 members. The Episcopal Church reports 2,803 ministers and 207,762 members—a difference of 184,959 members in favor of the Lutherans, and of 592 ministers in favor of the Episcopalians.

A CONVENTION of delegates from the Baptist churches of California assembled at Vacaville, December 1. They accepted the college recently purchased from the Methodists, elected trustees, and took all necessary steps to incorporate, under the college act, a first-class college. The trustees chose a president and a faculty for the infant college, and made all preparations to commence the session on January 1, 1871.

IT IS thought that the deputation appointed to visit the Czar, to entreat him to ameliorate the condition of his Protestant subjects in the Baltic provinces, will reach St. Petersburg in time for the Easter festival. It is expected to cooperate with similar delegations representing the European branches of the Evangelical Alliance; and its members include Bishop McIlvain and Bishop Simpson, the Hon. George Bancroft, the Hon. J. P. Marsh, the Hon. Theodore Fay, Prof. Morse and Mr. Cyrus Field.

DR. MERLE D'AUBIGNE, author of the History of the Reformation, recently delivered an address at the opening of the thirty-ninth year of the Geneva Theological School, of which he is president. Of himself he said: "The last few months have been to me also a sorrowful campaign. This, however, is not unnatural, considering my age; and when God visits me with suffering I ought to be grateful to him that it is no worse. For the last four months I have been obliged to desist almost entirely from talking."

IN 1870 the Methodist Church Extension Society raised over $100,000, and aided one hundred and seventy churches, in thirty-six different States and Territories. The Baptist Church, which, with a membership of 1,222,000, raised in the first thirteen years only $30,000, in 1869 raised over $100,000 for church extension, and aided fifty churches, in seventeen States. The Congregational Union, organized in 1852, raised in 1869 $50,000. The Presbyterian Church raised in 1869, in both branches, $73,000, and aided in the erection of one hundred and twenty-five churches.

ACCORDING to the Catholic Directory, the "Sacred College" of Cardinals at Rome has not less than nineteen vacancies, and that consequently as many red hats are at the disposal of the Pope. Of the fifty-one members of the college, five are cardinal bishops, thirty-nine cardinal priests, and seven cardinal deacons. There are forty living cardinals who have been created by Pius the Ninth, and ninety-three members of the college have died during his pontificate. The total number of archbishops and bishops of the Roman Catholic Church in the British empire is one hundred and fourteen.

THE clergy of the Irish Episcopal Church are resolute in their opposition to Ritualism. Thus Mr. Dane proposed in the Synod of Clogher that it is the duty of the General Synod to take prompt measures to "stamp out" every tendency to Ritualism. The Lord Primate, who presided, like others of the prelates, was opposed to the suggestion, considering it dangerous, and it was shelved for a short time by a count out. Mr. Dane, however, returned to the charge on the reassembling of the synod; and ultimately a resolution was adopted generally condemning all Ritualistic practices.

THE Ritualists of England, says the Nonconformist, have organized a new Liberation Society, which is, if possible, more outspoken than the old one. It then quotes the following words of the Rev. Orby Shipley, who may be considered in the light of president: "A free church is the only antetype to a free State." "Our present position (that of subjection to the State) * * * I do not hesitate to stigmatize as utterly anomalous, scandalously unjust, and undeniably godless." "It is a violation of all consistency, that an emancipated nation should either hold in subjection, or be held in subjection to, a church still politically enslaved."

A MOST remarkable scene occurred in the Embury Methodist church at Freeport, Illinois, a few weeks since. In the absence of the pastor, Joseph Cary was called upon to lead the prayer meeting. He opened the meeting with a fervent prayer, and urged the church to improve the high privilege of addressing a throne of grace. The meeting "dragged" a little, despite the goodly number in attendance. After a season Bro. Cary prayed the second time, something unusual with him. He then arose and spoke of the Christian, and said that some great generals had occasionally suffered defeat. "But," shouted he, "glory to God! the Christian is always triumphant." The words were scarcely uttered when he fell to the floor dead.—Northwestern Christian Advocate.

THE third annual meeting of the Woman's Board of Missions, recently held in Boston, reports twenty-five missionaries, thirty Bible women, and eight schools. Receipts for the year $21,106, appropriations $26,143. In several of the schools there has been a remarkable outpouring of the Holy Spirit. In Ceylon, of fifty-two pupils fourteen are members of the church. At Aintab, Central Turkey, all the pupils but four. Out of a congregation of one hundred and fifty, forty-two have lately confessed Christ and joined his church. These seasons of special interest all date from the week of prayer. The happiest results on their future families everywhere follow this Christian education of the women in heathen lands. Their children cannot be and, as facts show, are not what others are. The candle of the Lord shines in their homes. Their habitations cease to be those of lust and cruelty.

THE BOY MORTARA FOUND.—About fifteen or eighteen years ago the world was aroused by the seizure of a Jewish child named Mortara, by the authorities of Papal Rome. The pretext for this act lay in the fact that when the infant was supposed to be dying, his Catholic nurse had sprinkled water upon him. This was claimed by the Romanists as a valid baptism, and as constituting the child a member of the Catholic Church. As such he must be removed from his Jewish parents, lest they should instill wrong teachings. And he was accordingly kept from his home.

Now, at the age of twenty, the boy reappears as a priest, and publishes a letter of gratitude to those who stole him from his parents and prevented him from being educated as a Jew. So it is to secure power to re-enact such deeds as these that the Catholic world is demanding the restoration of the Pope as head of an absolute monarchy.—Christian Observer.

"THAT bed is not long enough for me," said a very tall, gruff old Englishman, upon being ushered into his bed-room by an Irish waiter, at one of our hotels. "Faith, an' you'll find it pretty long, sir, when you get into it," was the reply; "for then there'll be two feet more added to it."

To Subscribers.—Any person wishing to subscribe for this paper can do so by paying the Methodist preacher in the circuit, and forwarding to us his receipt for $3, with the address of the subscriber upon it, stating Post Office, State, Circuit and Conference. The receipt ought to be taken in duplicate.

N. B.—Agents are requested, wherever practicable, to invest and remit funds in a POST OFFICE ORDER, DRAFT, or by EXPRESS. If this cannot be done, REGISTER the letter at our expense.

When money is forwarded in either of the above methods we will be responsible for it, but not otherwise.

POST OFFICES.

As changes are being made in the post offices of the preachers, they will greatly oblige us by furnishing their addresses as early as possible. Don't forget to give the post office from which your paper is to be changed, as well as that to which it is to be sent.

OUR PUBLISHING AGENT.

We are glad to announce that the Publishing Committee, at its recent meeting, have arranged with Rev. Robert J. Harp to take charge of the business department of the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE. Bro. Harp assumes the onerous duties of this position at the earnest desire and solicitation of the editor and the Publishing Committee, who regard him as the man for the place, and bespeak for him the hearty co-operation of all the agents and friends of the paper. Hereafter all communications of a BUSINESS NATURE should be addressed to Rev. R. J. Harp, 112 Camp street, New Orleans. All communications for the columns of the paper should be addressed, as heretofore, to Rev. Linus Parker.

MINUTES.

The Minutes of the Louisiana Conference will be out in a few days. A very large edition will be printed, so that the churches may have a full supply. Preachers will please furnish Bro. Harp with their post offices immediately, that supplies of them may be forwarded without delay. Wherever practicable, give instruction how they may be sent by express, or as freight by rail or steamboat—to whose care they may be shipped and at what point, as in some instances it may be better to ship them than to send by mail.

SERMON REPORTED.

The Times of this city, following the fashion of some of the New York dailies, publishes reports on Monday morning of the services and sermons of some of the churches for the Sabbath. In its issue of last Monday morning we have an account of the services at the Dryades Street German Methodist Church, in which the name of the preacher and the sermon are both wrong. It was not Mr. Ahrens that preached, neither was the sermon or text the same as reported. As the preaching and entire service were in German, the reporter of the Times has exhibited a great deal of cleverness, verging on genius, to have made up the whole from his own unaided resources.

THE faith that unites to Christ separates from iniquity.

A PROVOKING ZEAL.

Paul mentions a fact of special significance in connection with the liberality of the Corinthians when he tells them: "And your zeal hath provoked very many." The great apostle was eminent for methods and expedients, willing to catch men "with guile," and to compass their salvation in any way consistent with truth and righteousness. He stirred up Macedonia by exhibiting the forwardness of Achaia, and he tells the Corinthians for their encouragement: "I boast of you to them of Macedonia that Achaia was ready a year ago." The principle of godly provocation is recognized in other duties when the same apostle exhorts that we "consider one another, to provoke unto love and to good works." The incitement of example is chiefly in view, rather than the application of the most stimulating precepts.

One of the benefits of Christian denominations is found in the emulation inspired by their occupancy of the same fields. It may sometimes degenerate into mere sectarian rivalry and engender a spirit of bitterness, but still the kingdom of God is extended. Bigotry and vain glory may be mixed up with better motives, and the pure flame of love darkened by unworthy passions; but these infirmities are, under divine mercy, guided to a favorable result. Paul rose so high in his evangelical spirit that he could overlook the contention in which Christ was preached, so that he was preached. He cared not how much they sought his humiliation, and to add affliction to his bonds, if Christ were preached to a perishing world. "What then? notwithstanding, every way, whether in pretense or in truth, Christ is preached; and I therein do rejoice, yea, and will rejoice." Here, at any rate, is a lofty magnanimity and breadth of spirit which silences all sectarian animosity in the result of a more widely diffused gospel. Christian denominations are by their efforts in the missionary fields leading each other to greater acts of self-denial, and to more ample plans for the salvation of the world. Side by side at home, their religious enterprises act upon each other, and an ever present and pressing competition stimulates to more urgent efforts. The industry and generosity of one church challenges another to shake off its sloth, and to awake to more devotedness.

The denominations do well in the effort to outstrip each other, while by so doing they extend the range of salvation, and bring the world to Christ. If a sister church passes us in the race of usefulness, in a given field, it is a call for us to mend our pace, not that we would have others slacken, but that we must increase our speed. If they are getting ahead of us, the fault is in our slowness, and not in their surpassing celerity. Are they building more churches, endowing more colleges, and bringing more people under their influence? Is their literature more widely scattered, their periodicals better sustained? Let us thank God for their prosperity at the same time that we awake from our comparative slumber. If our Sunday schools are inferior in their attendance, here is a strenuous call upon us to work harder than ever for this important enterprise. The issue is not whether a community shall be absorbed by other denominations, but whether the world shall be converted to Christ. When they have saved all they can, we have still a net of our own to draw to the shore. Their greater success condemns us.

As between churches and sections within our own communion, there is application for this provoking zeal. Our unity is not in question, but our equal devotion. One live society certainly may provoke many sleepy ones to awake and arise. We are, as individuals and as societies, to "consider one another, to provoke unto love and to good works." What a provocation in a church is one really earnest and holy man who comes up to the measure of a consecrated life! And how deplorably does one prominent example of churlishness bring things down into the dust! It should be a pleasing reflection to individuals and to societies that in reaching a striking point of zeal they are stimulating and quickening many others. The eminent faith of the Christians in Rome was "spoken of throughout the whole world," the zeal of the Corinthians in giving was something for the apostle to boast of, and for their encouragement he declares: "Your zeal hath provoked many." This kind of zeal is specially potent when it reaches the degree of true generosity—when the giving is large in proportion to the means. Let one move in a congregation and others follow; let one church signalize its love in this way, and others are apt to feel uneasy and to begin to devise liberal things. The readiness of Achaia, the forwardness of Corinth, appealed to Macedonia, and thrilled the most distant churches. Paul could not afford to throw away so striking an example, and hence he boasted of it, that it might incite other churches to a like expression of their faith and gratitude.

The recent demonstration in the great metropolis of the West may be mentioned in this connection.—Ninety thousand dollars given for the extension of Methodism in St. Louis is a most gratifying result. If Paul were alive to-day he would not miss his opportunity. All the churches would be sure to hear of it, and a collection begun on the strength of such an example. We hopefully believe that we may soon salute the Methodists of St. Louis in true Pauline style: "Your zeal hath provoked very many." We have colleges languishing for want of repairs and endowment; we have missions inadequately supplied, and circuits and stations crippled for want of pecuniary support. To hold our ground in New Orleans we have the most urgent need this year of $20,000, and as much more, two years hence, if we expect to be an aggressive church in this most important and most difficult field. Who will raise a standard equal to the emergency, and exhibit a zeal which shall provoke the entire church to do something worthy of apostolical boasting?

THE ARMISTICE.

Paris has at last surrendered, and an armistice agreed upon. It is thought that a treaty of peace will soon be signed, and that the war is virtually over. Negotiations will occupy some time, and the reconstruction of the French empire will take a good while. The advent of peace, contrary to the expectation of many, has not raised the price of cotton. Gold has rather gone up, and the great staple has declined a little. Our planters and merchants will be wise to make their plans and arrangements upon the basis of low prices for cotton. For recent news see first page of this paper. The price current will be found on the eighth page.

SWEET POTATO SYRUP.—We are indebted to Mr. C. H. Monton for a sample of sweet potato syrup. It is a very fine article, and equal to any made from the juice of the cane. The process by which it is made is patented, and promises to produce a revolution in the syrup business. A memorial is now before the Legislature, praying that a joint committee be appointed to examine this process of extracting the syrup from the sweet potato. If the statements in the memorial regarding the profits of this new and comparatively inexpensive industry be reliable—and we suppose they are—we earnestly second the prayer of the memorialists. An examination and report can do no harm, and certainly need not commit the Legislature to an appropriation.

OUR HOME JOURNAL is the title of a new weekly journal, published in this city, and devoted to agriculture, manufactures, literature, science, commerce and news. The agricultural department is specially prominent, and will prove of great interest and value to planters and all who are in any way devoted to the cultivation of the soil. The Home Journal is a handsome quarto of sixteen pages, embellished, and printed on good paper. It is published by James H. Hummel, No. 106 Camp street, at $3 per annum. We wish the enterprise the utmost success.

COMMERCIAL CENTERS.

The effect of the locomotive upon the great centers of trade can be seen in the very rapid growth of London since the first laying down of the London and Manchester railway. The number of trains going in and out of any of the London depots each day is something incredible. It is said that a supply of food for twenty-four hours for that vast population passes each day into the great metropolis. To a great extent the whole of Great Britain has thereby become suburban to it. The consequence is, that vast city has grown in the last ten years more rapidly than the mushroom villages of the West. This same effect of the railway system is being rapidly developed in this country. New York, St. Louis and New Orleans are three great centers, the two first of which are engrossing a vast circle of population and territory in their rail currents, for a railroad is but a commercial river capable of running two ways.

While the effect upon these centers can be easily estimated, it is not so easy to exhibit the effect which railways have upon the country which they drain—how far they enhance the value of lands, increase the agricultural resources of the farmer, or the demand for his products. It may, however, be safely said that within a circle of three hundred miles the effect of the center is quite perceptible. But we doubt much if the State of North Carolina is much advantaged by the building up of New York. We doubt if Indiana is as much benefited by the increase in the size of New York as in the growth of Chicago. So we might ask: What gain can possibly accrue to Mississippi, to Louisiana, to Arkansas, to Alabama, from the growth of a commercial center in the State of New York? Of course all products of every kind are enhanced by the growth of population, whether in country or in city; still the growth of a center does not necessarily increase the amount of consumption—it only transfers consumers from a wide area to a small one. To our mind the growth of New York will not be felt in many of those sections of country that seem very solicitous to be tributary to that distant and populous mart. Whereas the growth of New Orleans as a Southern center and a near center would be very sensibly felt in the increased value of every farm within the States of Mississippi, Alabama, Louisiana, south Arkansas and east Texas. In the great effort which is being made to advance Northern railroad lines, it would be well for our people to take these views into their calculations. K.

REVIVAL IN SAN FRANCISCO.—The pastor, Rev. A. M. Bailey, writes to the Spectator of January 19:

The revival at Minna street church, in this city, continues with increasing power. The meetings have been held twice every day since Friday before the new year, and will continue until over next Sunday. When it closes I will give you a detailed account of the work of God among us. At present allow me to say that all who have attended these meetings, so as to imbibe the spirit of them, agree in pronouncing it one of the deepest and most powerful revivals of pure religion that has ever taken place on the coast. Christians seem to rise above denominational distinctions and enjoy the pure life of Christian fellowship. Sinners are powerfully converted and believers are established in the faith.

DEATH OF MRS. LUCY PINCKARD.—We are pained to hear of the death of the wife of Rev. P. M. Pinckard of St. Louis. The St. Louis Advocate brings the sad intelligence.

Sister Pinckard, wife of our Bro. P. M. Pinckard, died in this city on Saturday, the twenty-first ultimo, at four o'clock P. M., and was buried on Monday. This announcement will cause painful regrets in thousands of hearts. The church mourns the loss of a most excellent Christian woman. Having been her pastor during her membership at Asbury church, we formed for her warm regards as a consistent and earnest disciple of Christ. Her illness, of typhoid fever, was protracted, and in it all the sustaining grace of God was beautifully illustrated, culminating in perfect triumph over the last enemy.

MAN'S DOMINION.

Dominion over this lower world is man's divinely given prerogative. It distinguishes him from and raises him above inferior sentient natures. In other respects these less honored creatures excel man in their natural power to move in the water, through the air and on the earth. Very many animals on the land and fishes in the sea are greater in size. Many are stronger and many are swifter, and many are endowed with some one sense more exquisite and perfect than the corresponding sense possessed by man. But man is rational, and in the exercise of his reason excels all inferior natures even in their own elements, or in the exercise of their best endowments. God has given man dominion, and commanded him to subdue the earth, and make all its elements, resources and tribes subservient to his will. As the ages have rolled away man has steadily developed his mental power, and moved with the steps of a conqueror toward the subjugation of the tribes and elements of the earth. In agriculture he has domesticated and improved the wild seeds, plants and fruits of the earth, immensely increasing his comfort and means of subsistence. The earth contains stores of iron, lead, copper, silver and gold. Man has laid his hand upon these long-buried treasures, and converted them into countless forms of utility and beauty. In the direction of architecture man has made the clay, the rocks and the timber yield him habitations, temples and palaces, on the rivers and seas—structures of strength and beauty that may endure for ages.

Man has dominion over the sea. On its bosom he sails to the ends of the earth, circumnavigating the great globe itself. Then its fisheries—whales, oysters, shells and pearls—yield him untold wealth and comfort. All over the earth the animals and birds furnish man labor, food, clothing and ornament. The fiery horse, the strong oxen, the swift reindeer, the enduring camel and the great elephant own his sway, and are the subjugated servants of his will.

We see man's dominion extending more and more in the bright realm of science. The most subtle and intangible elements have been yoked to the car of improvement, and are the swift and tireless servants of man. The winds swell the sails of his ships, drive the wheels of his mills, and bear his balloons on their wings as a chariot of triumph. The water by man's art is expanded to steam, which drives by its tremendous power the wheels of manifold and countless machinery. It hurries his iron leviathans through the waves and storms of all the seas, laden with the various wealth of every clime, to all earth's thousand shores. It hurries the iron horse, with his snort and startling neigh, with a speed swifter than the bird's, drawing after him a thousand men. The winged lightning, the terror of superstitious ages, is harmlessly conducted to the ground; is made to flash and thrill along its narrow path, over mountains and plains, under the deep sea wave, and bear man's messages of power, of love, of joy and of sorrow to distant shores. The gases are made to illuminate our homes, our cities and paths of travel. The very sun, which reigns a king among supernal splendors, is made with artistic skill to paint our pictures and forms of beauty.

This meager sketch and narrow shred of man's dominion is but prophetic of the grander and nobler triumphs to be evolved from the ages to come. As the sun of his intelligence rises above the clouds and mists, the shadows shall disperse, and from a loftier horizon a brighter light shall shine, until from the zenith the cloudless light shall shine on all the fields of nature, and man, illuminated by the accumulated light of the past, shall read all the pages of God's great natural book, and mystery and darkness take wings to themselves and fly away forever.

This train of reflection should call forth our gratitude and adoring love that God has so wonderfully endowed us, giving us dominion over all his works on earth, and making us but a little lower than the angels. These thoughts should awaken our obligations, and lead us to consecrate all the powers of our intellectual and immortal natures to him who hath made us by his power and redeemed us by his love. But further, if man, clogged by clay, wasted by disease, and shut in the narrow span of threescore and ten, can accomplish so much, can advance so far along the path of light, who can tell, nay, who can imagine, what he shall do and what he may be in a thousand centuries freed from infirmity, and associating with the first-born sons of light! These magnificent possibilities clothe man with immortal dignity and render our existence a tremendous trust. W.

GALVESTON, TEXAS.

FROM BISHOP DOGGETT.

RICHMOND, VA., Jan. 26, 1871.

MR. EDITOR: Please publish the following announcement:

The Rev. W. V. Tudor, of Washington city, and member of the Baltimore Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, has been duly transferred to the Louisiana Conference, and is hereby appointed preacher in charge of the Carondelet Street Church, in the city of New Orleans.

In this connection, I am happy to say that I reached home in safety on Friday afternoon, the thirteenth instant. I had a pleasant journey and a joyful meeting with my family. I have the most pleasing recollections of my sojourn in New Orleans, and of the session of the Louisiana Conference. May the blessing of God attend the preachers and their families in their respective spheres of duty. Affectionately,

D. S. DOGGETT.

SOUTHERN UNIVERSITY.

Prof. Lupton writes us a few lines in reference to the Southern University. We are glad to hear that Dr. Wadsworth has so worthy and able a successor. The Southern University is one of our best institutions and should command a large patronage. Bro. Lupton says:

MR. EDITOR: We have secured the services of Rev. John S. Moore until the trustees meet in July. Bro. Moore is a graduate of Randolph Macon, an A. M. of the University of Virginia, and has had considerable experience as a teacher. A number of new students have entered since January 1, and we are looking for other accessions between this and the opening of our second term in February.

Very truly yours,

N. T. LUPTON.

A PREACHER WANTED.

I would like very much to secure the services of a preacher who is a single man, for missionary work, or rather to organize a circuit on the Yazoo river and Silver creek, in Yazoo county, Mississippi. It is territory where, before the war, we had a circuit, but where, for want of preachers, we have not had an organization since the war. The people would support a single man who would give himself to the work. They are anxious for preaching and pastoral service. Any preacher who is willing to take this work will please write to me in reference to it. Address me at Canton, Mississippi.

H. H. MONTGOMERY.

BISHOP WIGHTMAN.

Bishop Wightman spent a day with us on his return from St. Louis. He left Nashville for Charleston on Wednesday evening, via Gadsden, Alabama. He has been suffering considerably from cold, as the weather was very inclement in St. Louis. Yet he was able to put the top-stone on the semi-centenary celebration on Sunday night. We expect to hear a good report from his Address on the Mission of Methodism, which was delivered to an immense audience in First church. He was followed by Mr. Nathan Coleman and the Hon. John Hogan, the latter producing a letter from Mr. John H. Gay to Bishop Marvin, presenting the Bishop a fine residence in the suburbs of St. Louis. A handsome collection for city missions concluded the noble contribution of this memorable occasion. The sums contributed—exclusive of the Bishop's house—amounted, we understand, to some $85,000. Bishop Wightman was delighted with the celebration, and thinks it will give a great impulse to Methodism in Missouri.—Nashville Christian Advocate.

FROM BISHOP MARVIN.

From a letter published in the St. Louis Christian Advocate we make some extracts, showing the impressions and observations of Bishop Marvin concerning our church affairs in Louisiana.

I have been present for some days at the session of the Louisiana Conference. In many portions of the Conference the work is in a prosperous condition, but in some of the districts the prostration resulting from the war was so great that neither the country nor the church has yet recovered from it Many portions of it are not yet reoccupied by us in any effectual way, and it will require several years yet to bring any large measure of prosperity. But, upon the whole, there is decided advancement and a very hopeful condition.

Recuperation in the church would be much more rapid if there were preachers to man the work fully. I have not found a Conference this side of Oregon where there was so great a lack in this respect. It is distressing. Many circuits are left to be supplied, without even a local preacher available to serve them. Some of these circuits would support preachers with small families very comfortably. No one of the Conferences in Texas is nearly so destitute as this. The demand is scarcely greater even in the Western Conference. It is important that the attention, especially of young men in the crowded Conferences, should be turned strongly to Louisiana. The demand is urgent and instant. This Macedonia cries out for help.

There are still quite a number of circuits among the colored people still in connection with this Conference. They will probably be soon united with the "Colored Methodist Episcopal Church in America." For the present, however, they are cared for by this Conference. They are served, for the most part, by men of their own color, some of whom stand high both for intelligence and piety. Indeed, Bishop Keener says that one of them would make a very respectable Bishop. Several were ordained deacons, and one an elder, at this Conference.

New Orleans comes gracefully under the itinerant law, which, now that the exception has been removed, changes their pastors in common with others. Drs. Parker and Walker have been here so long that the memory of many young people runneth not to the contrary. They have been faithful men and deserve well of the church. But the people will receive new men with the heartiest good-will, while many tears will drop upon parting with the old, who are bound to them by so many pastoral endearments.

This suggests New Orleans Sunday schools. They are not mission schools, but missionary schools. The school at Felicity Street Church raised $300 for the missionaries in China last year, and remitted it directly to them. The missionaries send them many Chinese curiosities and write them letters, so that the children come directly into communication with the missionary work. It has a most happy effect. These young people come to realize an intelligent interest in the mission which they are aiding. They learn a great deal about the habits and the heathenism of these people. They come into enlightened sympathy with the great enterprises of the church. Their own relation to the church comes to be a fact of greater value and significance. They are becoming prepared to be workers in the Lord's vineyard.

Some other schools outside of the city made large contributions to the general cause of missions. That at Trenton raised $200. This is a town of only four or five hundred inhabitants, with sixty members of the church. In fact, leaving out the collection at the anniversary, largely over one-third part of all the moneys reported for missionaries purposes came from Sunday schools. All this money comes in dribs, and is in evidence of the great results to be realized from a system that would reach great numbers, and secure a small amount at short intervals from each. The great bulk of the available wealth of the world is in active circulation, and a vast proportion of it is in the hands of those who are comparatively poor. Small sums repeatedly given from the multitudes who are not rich aggregate amazingly.

There are three German churches in this city. One is served by Bro. Ahrens, the editor of the Christian Apologist, and another by Bro. Rabe, a young man who has been in the Conference but one year. They are both educated gentlemen. But they have had their troubles here within the year past. The Northern wolf has been in the fold. An insidious (not to say perfidious) effort was made to carry off one whole church. Philip Barth joined this Conference a year ago. He was appointed to one of the German churches in this city, and deliberately set to work to draw the membership after him into the Northern Church. To a considerable extent he was successful.—Whether he joined the Conference with this purpose in view of course none but himself and his Maker can know. If not, then at least when he determined to leave the church he deliberately made up his mind to betray the trust confided to him by the Conference, taking advantage of the relation he sustained to us, and the access which it gave him to the people, to decoy them off.

The Baltimore Christian Advocate.

The Rev. R. A. Holland announces, in the issue of January 28, his withdrawal as one of the editors and publishers. Dr. Bond, referring to the retirement of his associate, says:

I need not say that I accept the withdrawal of Mr. Holland with profound regret. My intimate association with him under the trying circumstances of the last year's connection has more than confirmed the high opinion of his excellences of mind and heart. The separation is one of the severe afflictions of my life. I know, too, that I shall greatly miss the assistance of his graceful pen and elegant taste; but I must be content to bear what I cannot prevent. Under the circumstances, Mr. Holland has no alternative. I am now alone, both to publish and edit the paper. To do either is work enough for an abler man; and I am warned by growing sense of pressure that I cannot do both without the active sympathy of all who wish the Advocate to maintain its position. I cannot prepare the matter for the paper if my mind is to be harassed with pecuniary anxieties; and harassed it will be unless the readers of the paper will furnish money without the incessant public and private dunning commonly expected by the debtors of small sums to publishers expending large ones. If every subscriber will send me the sum he owes, as soon as he can, without waiting to be dunned for it; if every one who likes the paper will take a little pains to show it and speak well of it; if every one of my friends who purchases in Baltimore will buy from advertisers who are helping to sustain me, then a few months will put the paper in such an easy condition that it will be a pleasure for me to devote myself to improving its religious and literary character. I can expect, at most, but a few more years of active life, and it is my earnest desire to devote them to doing good in the way readiest to me. I daily receive letters assuring me that I do good by writing. I desire no better employment; but I have not fortune sufficient to enable me to give both toil and money to provide a paper for the use of approving readers. Pardon this honest expression of my feelings. I hate cant, but it is in a state of mind the furthest removed from canting that I ask the religious friends of the paper to pray for me that I may have grace and strength to do my work with an eye single to the glory of God, and that he will accept and bless this paper as an humble contribution to the good of men.

NEW ADVERTISEMENTS.

SOULE'S COMMERCIAL COLLEGE.—Mr. Soule is worthy of the confidence and the patronage of our friends. He is an urbane gentleman, and thorough in what he professes to teach. He has built up an institution which has quietly won its way to public favor. If you wish your son to have a thorough commercial education, we think you will not regret sending him to Mr. Soule. See advertisement in this issue.

BURKE'S MAGAZINE has been favorably noticed several times in this paper. See prospectus among our new advertisements.

WE CALL ATTENTION to the card of Mrs. J. C. McAllister. Her house has had a large patronage from the best class of our people. She usually has a few rooms for transient customers.

THE EQUITABLE INSURANCE COMPANY is probably the first in the world. They state, and we have no reason to doubt, that in 1869 they did a business of $16,000,000—more than any other company in the world. See advertisement in this paper.

WE CALL ATTENTION to the advertisement of the Practical Planter, in another column.

ACKNOWLEDGMENT.—We are indebted to the Rev. L. C. Matlack for a copy of the Minutes of the third session of the Louisiana Annual Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church (North.) The pamphlet is handsomely printed, and contains much important statistical information.

TRIAL OF DR. LANAHAN.

The final action of the Book Committee in this case is as follows:

Whereas, The committee find, in their commencing the investigation in the case of Rev. Dr. Lanahan, that they are met by difficulties growing out of the peculiar provisions of the Discipline, as construed by a paper submitted by the Bishops, expressing their opinion of their relations to the investigation, and by a lack of specific directions as to the mode of proceeding; and whereas, They have had a free and full conference with the Bishops who are present as to the best plan to be pursued, they deem it proper to discontinue any further investigation of the complaints against the assistant book agent. But as there are differences of opinion as to business arrangements and methods in the Book Concern, respecting which the committee have published their report, therefore, without any change of previous judgment by any member of this committee, be it

Resolved, That all questions of business arrangements and methods in the Book Concern be referred to a sub-committee of three members of this General Committee and Rev. Bishop Scott, which committee shall have power to call to their aid such accountants as they may deem necessary, and that the decisions of all questions of law which may arise, and also the approval of the selection of accountants, be referred to Rev. Bishop Scott and E. L. Fancher, LL. D., and Hon. G. G. Reynolds. This sub-committee make their report to the General Committee at their annual meeting in February, 1872, so that the matter referred to, with all necessary information, may be presented by the committee in their quadrennial report to the General Conference of 1872.

MORTUARY REPORT FOR 1870.

We copy from the annual report of the Board of Health the following tables: There were 7,391 deaths during the year 1870; 449 were stillborn children. The mortality in the several months was:

January 499, February 456, March 634, April 580, May 651, June 713, July 529, August 521, September 904, October 738, November 596, and December 570.

Color—Whites 4,602, blacks 1,705, and mulattoes 855; not stated 229.

Age—Under 1 year 1,587, from 1 to 2 years 410, from 2 to 5 years 353, from 5 to 10 years 180, from 10 to 15 years 149, from 15 to 20 years 253, from 20 to 25 years 491, from 25 to 30 years 582, from 30 to 40 years 929, from 40 to 50 years 754, from 50 to 60 years 559, from 60 to 70 years 348, from 70 to 80 years 189, from 80 to 90 years 64, from 90 to 100 years 24, 100 years and upward 12, unknown 509.

Countries—Africa 10, Austria 9, Belgium 6, British America 13, Canada 11, China 7, Denmark 15, England 99, France 352, Germany 518, Greece 1, Holland 5, Ireland 551, Italy 199, Madeira 2, Mexico 7, Norway 3, Poland 12, Portugal 10, Prussia 32, Russia 9, Sea 2, Scotland 31, South America 2, Spain 44, Sweden 11, Switzerland 38, United States 4,753, unknown 4, Wales 8, West Indies 54, not stated 571.

The diseases calling for the largest number of deaths were: Consumption, 757; yellow fever, 587; smallpox, 528; premature births, 110; meningitis, 149; marasmus, infantile, 151; disease of the heart, 181; inflammation of the bowels, 104; pneumonia, 188; tris nacentum, 186; pernicious fever, 109; congestive fever, 141; dysentery, 94; dropsy, 70; congestion of the brain, 99; debility, 118; apoplexy, 124; bronchitis, 89; chronic diarrhea, 93; suicides, 11; drowned, 69; burns, 27; gunshot wounds, 15. Deaths from yellow fever, 587, of which natives of Italy 113; France, 86; Germany, 129; United States, 88; Ireland, 48; Switzerland, 18; England, 21; other countries, 86.

Deaths from smallpox 528, of which 418 colored and 110 whites. Of the colored 295 were adults and 123 children.

The number of deaths from consumption seems to have increased during the year 1870, there having occurred 757 deaths from that disease, against 684 in the year 1869, 632 in 1868, and 671 in 1867.

The number of deaths from measles during the year was only 23, against 217 in 1869. There were no deaths from this disease during the year 1868.

The number of deaths from whooping cough in 1870 was only 9, while in 1869 they numbered 121.

There were 997 interments on certificates of coroner, and 86 on certificates of midwives; 1,134 were interred from public institutions.

According to the official census of 1870, the population of the city of New Orleans is 191,512. The total mortality, after deducting the number of stillborn children, (449,) is 6,942—a percentage of 0.36 of the population of the city, or one death to about twenty-eight inhabitants.

THEY who are too poor to trade in the world may buy abundantly in God's market.

WE LEARN, says the Richmond Christian Advocate of January 26, that a fine revival is in progress at Centenary charge, Lynchburg, under the ministry of the new pastor, Rev. W. E. Edwards, and also at Court street, under the ministry of Rev. R. N. Sledd, assisted by Rev. Dr. Rosser. We can have revivals in the winter.

Married.

In Baldwin county, Alabama, January 19, 1871, by Rev. J. A. Pace, Mr. JAMES H. KNIGHT, of Pensacola, Florida, to Miss NANNIE M. CROSBY.

Obituary.

Died, on the twenty-third of January, Mrs. EMMA G. FORSS, wife of Mr. Werner Forss, a member of the Carondelet street Methodist Episcopal Church South, in the thirtieth year of her age.

Emma G. Scrivener was born in Mobile, January 5, 1841; moved to Montgomery, with her now sainted mother, in early life, and was married to Bro. Forss in 1858, residing in New Orleans the past few years.

The writer had the privilege of knowing the deceased from her early youth, in the Sabbath school and class meeting of the Methodist church, Montgomery, Alabama, she having united herself with the church while yet a member of the Sabbath school. Her choice was firm, and her devotion to the cause of Christ sincere—a piety not so much demonstrative, as it was exemplified by a life in which the influences of the religion she professed were observed and praised; and specially as to her light shining in her domestic sphere—a true and faithful wife and mother, an humble follower of her loved Saviour. Religion with her was a lifetime devotion. Her dying was painful and unlooked for—the work of death very rapid and full of suffering, affording no opportunity for religious conversation or expression. But we look back upon her whole life, and find in it the full assurance that she has gone where her loved of earth passed before—to the great company of the redeemed in heaven.

She leaves a babe to the care of a loved sister—the only one of her family on this side the better land; and the prayers and sympathies of his brethren are given to the bereaved husband and daughter in this their sad and unlooked-for affliction. RICHARD JONES.

Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy is no Patent Medicine humbug, gotten up to dupe the ignorant and credulous, but is a perfect Specific for Nasal Catarrh, Cold in the Head, and kindred diseases. The proprietor, R. V. Pierce, M. D., of Buffalo, New York, offers $500 for a case he cannot cure. Sold by druggists, or sent by mail for sixty cents. A pamphlet free.

NEW ADVERTISEMENTS.

BURKE'S MAGAZINE FOR BOYS AND GIRLS, FOR 1871.

The conductors of Burke's Weekly for Boys and Girls, in response to a very generally expressed wish, have determined, with the new year, to change the character of that publication into a

for the Boys and Girls of the South. Gratefully appreciating the remarkable favor bestowed on their Weekly, and the many expressions of entire satisfaction which have reached them from all quarters, they are satisfied that their paper has supplied a want long felt at the South, and that a well-conducted Magazine, of high moral tone, filled with contributions from the best writers, and embracing a large amount of valuable information, can be made highly attractive to youthful minds, without the adventitious and pernicious aid of sensational literature.

The same writers who have aided in making the Weekly so wonderfully popular will contribute to the Magazine. The first number will contain the opening chapters of a new story by the author of "Big-Foot Wallace," "Jack Dobel," etc., entitled "The Indians at Bird-Dauber's Nest: A Tale of the Seminoles"—told in Mr. Duval's best style.

Mrs. Martin Pendleton Kennedy, of Virginia, will contribute a charming story of Virginia life—The Hermitage Children.

Mary Faith Floyd will contribute a beautiful Fairy Tale.

Dr. F. O. Ticknor, Paul H. Hayne, Mrs. McKinnie, Mrs. Mary Ware, Mrs. S. E. Peck, Mrs. E. E. Ford and other well known writers will furnish contributions of great value and interest.

All of the old and popular features of the Weekly will be retained in the new Magazine. The editor will hold his monthly chats with little readers and correspondents through the Letter Bag, and the Chimney Corner will continue to be crowded with Rebuses, Charades, Enigmas, Puzzles, etc.

TERMS.

Burke's Magazine for Boys and Girls will be issued monthly, in numbers of forty-eight pages each, and printed on the best calendered paper, and elegantly illustrated. The price of subscription will be $2 a year—three copies for $5. Burke's Magazine and the Southern Farm and Home, $3 per year.

The Child's Corner.

GOOD NIGHT AND GOOD MORNING.

BY R. MONCKTON MILNES.

A fair little girl sat under a tree,
Sewing as long as eyes could see;
Then smoothed her work and folded it right,
And said: "Dear Work, good night! good night!"

Such a number of rooks came over her head,
Crying "Caw! caw!" on their way to bed,
She said, as she watched their curious flight:
"Little black things, good night! good night!"

The horses neighed and the oxen lowed,
The sheep's "Bleat! bleat!" came over the road,
All seeming to say, with quiet delight:
"Good little girl, good night! good night!"

She did not say to the sun "Good night!"
Though she saw him there like a ball of light;
For she knew he had God's time to keep
All over the world, and never could sleep.

The tall pink foxglove bowed its head,
The violets curtsied and went to bed;
And good Dame Lucy tied up her hair,
And said on her knees her favorite prayer.

And while on her pillow she softly lay,
She knew nothing more till again it was day;
And all things said to the beautiful sun:
"Good morning! good morning! our work is begun."

KATIE'S TROUBLE WITH THE PINS

BY OLIVE THORNE.

"Oh dear!" exclaimed Katie, impatiently throwing down her doll, "I'm tired of my doll, and that old pin won't go in. I've bent up three trying. I wish there wern't any pins!" and she rocked fretfully back and forth in her little chair.

"Katie," said her sister Alice, who was sewing by the window, "shall I tell you a story?"

"Yes," said Katie, hesitatingly; "only I don't want it to be about a cross little girl who talked naughty."

"No, it shall not be about any girl—it shall be about about the pin you couldn't get into dolly's dress."

"What can you tell about that?" asked Katie.

"Oh, I can tell you its history—how it came to be a pin, and not just a piece of brass wire."

"Yes," said Katie, "I'd like that."

"How many men do you suppose it took to make a pin before they used machines to make them?"

"Oh, I don't know—perhaps a few."

"It took fourteen. There were just that number of processes through, and each one was a trade of itself. The man that made the heads did not point them; and so with every part. But now they use the machines—at least in our country—exclusively."

"I shouldn't think such little things could be made by machines."

"Oh, yes. But to begin our pins. The first thing is to buy the brass wire, just the right size, and wind it on a reel."

"What is a reel?" Katie asked.

"A kind of frame to hold the wire."

"Well, go on."

"When the reel is filled, and the machine started, a pair of iron fingers seize the ends of the wire, and pull it just far enough to make one pin, when down comes a snapping little stamp, quick as thought, and bites it off."

"That must be funny," said Katie, laughing.

"It is. That little machine just spends the whole time biting off pins; for as soon as one bit of wire starts on its journey through the machine another follows it; so there is an endless procession of pins all the way through, and a constant shower of perfect pins falling down at the other end of the machine."

"Where do they go when they are snapped off?" asked Katie.

"They fall on to what is called a carrier, which takes them to be pointed. The wire—for it isn't a pin yet—is held fast, while a tiny wheel grinds it, in an instant, to a point."

"What is a file-wheel?"

"It is a wheel, the edge of which is like a file, and sharpens the wire, as you've seen Harry sharpen things with a file."

"Oh! yes. He sharpened nails to put in his arrows to make them stick into things, but papa would not let him, for fear he might hurt somebody."

"Yes. Just so the pin gets its point, but it has to go to a second finer file-wheel, to finish it. The next carrier takes it to the heading machine. There is a long hollow place in this machine, just long enough for the finished pin, and just big enough for it to go in. The headless pins are just pushed in to that hole, and held tight. The ends where the head is to be stuck out a little beyond the hole—and at the end the hole is larger than the rest, and shaped like the head of a pin—a perfect little mold, you see. Well, when the pin is firmly fixed, down comes a sharp little hammer, and just knocks the ends of the wire flat into the mold made for it—and there's a perfect head in an instant! I forget how many thousand pins this hammer knocks on the head in a day, but it is kept as busy as the biting machine."

'And then the poor little pin is done," said Katie.

"No, indeed! It is, to be sure, all headed and pointed, but it is very dirty and the color of brass, while our pins are beautifully clean and white. From the heading machine it drops into a box below, and from there it goes into a boiler containing a solution of cream tartar and tin, and boiled twelve hours."

"How funny it must look to see a kettle full of pins boiling," said Katie, laughing.

"That makes it nice and white," Alice went on.

"Then it must be done," said Katie.

"No, it must have a bath before it is fit for the clean bright papers."

"A buth!"

"Yes, it is put into a round wooden box, filled with hot soap suds, with thousands more like it, and shaken around very lively for fifteen minutes. That cleans and polishes them, and then they go to be dried."

"They ought to be wiped after a bath," said Katie.

Alice laughed.

"They don't use towels, but they go into another shaking box, filled with sawdust. After shaking around a while they are bright and dry, and ready for their last journey, into the papers."

"How can they be put in so even and nicely?" asked Katie.

"All by machinery, and two little girls. In the first place the papers are pressed into little ridges, and punched with holes for the pins by a machine on purpose; so when the thousands of pins are fed into one end of the papering machine by a little girl, another little girl has a big pile of papers all ready to fill. Well, the first girl pours the pins into a cylinder-shaped box."

"What shape is that?"

"It is like a short piece of stovepipe; from this they drop on to a sort of slide; at the bottom of the slide, just right to catch the pins, goes an endless chain. Each link has just as many holes as there are pins in the row; of course every hole catches its pin, and there they hang by the heads. The chain moves on, and when the pins get to a certain place the second girl just holds her pin-paper ready, and in goes the whole row, as perfect and even as we see them; the next link brings another row, and so on, till the paper is filled."

"I never thought it was so much work to make a pin," Katie said.

"And yet how cheap they are," said Alice.

"We can get a whole paper of the very best for fifteen cents."

"There are eight or nine pin factories in our country, and each one can make seven million a day."

"Oh, where do they all go?" asked Katie.

"A good many get bent and thrown away by hasty little girls," said Alice, smiling.

Katie blushed a little.

"In fact they are so cheap that every one is careless of them. It was not so in olden times; to own a half dozen pins then was a respectable allowance, and expected to last a long time."

"I don't see how they could."

"Well, they were made of bronze, and often had gold heads; they were larger than ours, some of them being six or eight inches long. They are found in Egyptian tombs, and the largest were probably used as hair pins."

"How do you suppose they got along before they had any pins?" asked Katie.

"Many nations used thorns, and three hundred years ago they had, in England, nothing better than rude wooden pins."

"Like our meat skewers," laughed Katie.

"Something like them, though not so large."

"Think of pinning one's dress with a wooden skewer!" cried Katie.

"Before I go, Katie," said Alice, folding her work, "I will tell you a little story I read the other day, of how four pins saved a man from being crazy."

"Oh! how could they?"

"He was a nobleman in a country where there is a King. He was put into prison on some pretense, I forget what, and was kept in a dark cell, all alone. He worried and thought, till he feared he should lose sense, and he determined to divert his mind from his troubles. So he turned in his clothes and found four pins. These he threw on to the floor of his cell, and then groped about till he found them. He then threw them again, and again hunted them up.

"Oh, Katie, for six long years the poor man kept up that game, till some kind of a political revolution opened his prison doors. He was so attached to his old battered pins that he preserved them carefully, and his wife had them set in a breastpin, surrounded with splendid diamonds, and wears it all the time."

"So you see, Katie, even so little a thing as a pin can be of use enough to save a man from losing his reason."

PROUD HEARTS and lofty mountains are always barren.

The Farm and Garden.

OUR SEA COAST LANDS.

"Observer" sends this suggestive and, we doubt not, very truthful statement to the Handsboro (Mississippi) Democrat:

I wish to impress upon the minds of your readers the fact that now is the time to prepare the soil and manures for next year's use.

A great improvement is perceptible the past year on our old-time way of doing business—buying everything, producing nothing—and it is hoped the coming season will find many new enclosures covered with a greater variety of crops than have yet been grown in this section.

It is simply nonsense to talk about poor land, drouth, rain, heat, cold, unfavorable seasons, "bad luck," etc. We on this gulf coast are as highly favored a people as there is on the face of the earth. Nature has done all for us that we could in reason ask, and only ourselves are to blame for any shortcomings.

Our soil requires but little nursing to produce, and in great abundance, a greater variety than most any other portion of the United States. We can, by deep and thorough cultivation, prepare the ground to hold all the moisture necessary to carry us through the severest drouth.

Bad luck is but another name for laziness, when applied to farming. We make our luck in most cases, and, if bad, we should look to ourselves as the cause. If there are any among us who still have doubts as to the fertility of our soil, I will, for their special benefit, give the results of farming on a small scale by some of my neighbors, who are too modest to speak for themselves.

One man—seventy-six years old, and a cripple—on two and a half acres of land, with only four days' plowing, harvested a crop worth $500. He had three hundred bushels of potatoes, with corn, hay and coarse food sufficient to winter his stock. From one vine alone he picked over twenty large winter squashes.

Another planted corn—the rows ten feet apart, with potatoes between—and when I saw it the dry stalks stood up like sentinels, each with two ears, and the field was matted with vines. He thought he would have at least fifteen hundred bushels of potatoes, the result of only a few days' labor. Another, from one-fifth of an acre of land, dug seventy bushels of good potatoes, worth $70—land and potatoes accurately measured. The planting, cultivating and digging was all done with less than two days' labor.

And still another—the labor of one old man—five hundred bushels of potatoes, fifty bushels of rough rice, forty bushels of corn, seven hundred pounds of Sea Island cotton, (in the seed,) several bushels of peas, four tons of hay and fodder, with melons, vegetables, etc., for daily use and to sell.

I see also another improvement—many are fattening their own pork; none of the lantern, root-hog-or-be-killed-if-you-can't-live-by-rooting-alone kind, but genuine two and three hundred pounders, which can be pickled or dry-cured here as well as in Cincinnati.

Subsoil Attachments for Plows.

Of late several subsoil attachments for plows have been devised. The object of such an improvement is, of course, to enable the soil untouched in the inversion of the furrow to be stirred and loosened without being brought to the surface. This is ordinarily done, and well done, by running a subsoil plow immediately after the passage of the common one. This involves the use of two teams, two plowmen and two implements. Could a simple implement be made to do the work, the result and advantages are obvious. Apparently the most feasible method of providing such an apparatus is to furnish the lower portion of the plow with digging shares, which, as the mold-board advances, turning the furrow of surface soil in front, shall come behind, disintegrating the soil below, but not lifting it above its previous level. This, in brief, is the principle upon which devices of this character have thus far been founded, and there is no reason why, when properly applied, it should not be successful; but in their production the truth is commonly lost sight of that their use increases the draught of the plow, so that a furrow of ordinary width taxes too highly the strength of an average team. We believe that there is room for the profitable introduction of a plow capable of simultaneously turning the surface soil, and of stirring, without turning, that below; but such cannot be provided by an attachment to a plow constructed for turning furrows of ordinary width. The mold-board and share must be made with special reference to the attachment of the subsoiler, and the width of the furrow must be reduced in proportion to the depth to which it is desired to disintegrate the subsoil. As the parts, in such case, would be much more slender than is now usual, they would be best when made of steel; and the means of connecting the subsoiling device to the mold-board should have greater provision for firmness than the incomplete apparatus hitherto made. Such a plow would prove of much value upon lands having a stiff, impervious subsoil, as its use would materially aid the natural drainage and the permeation of the soil by air and warmth.—American Artisan.

A CHEAP UNDERDRAIN.—There are few farms in the South—perhaps not one—some parts of which would not be benefited by underdraining. But as eight-tenths of us are not able to bear the heavy cost of tile drains, some cheaper mode of reaching the same end must be resorted to, or much of our land must remain comparatively useless to us. Happily this need not be the case. A very good, efficient and cheap drain may be constructed thus: Mark off the line of your ditch and open as deep as you can with a turn-plow, throwing the dirt outward. This will save much hand work with the spade. Now open your ditch with a spade to any depth you may desire. Then place sapling pine (or other) poles that are straight, down in the ditch, in such a way that the third one will rest close upon the first two, thus . Cover these poles with pine-tags or leaves from the woods and tramp them down. (Everybody in the South has an old field, so plenty of the above material.) Fill up the remainder of the ditch with the dirt thrown out, and your work is done. This drain will last fifteen or twenty years. It would be well to cut poles and haul them beforehand, so as not to delay the work. The leaves, too, might be got up and hauled, placing them along the line of the ditch.—B. W. Jones, in Rural Carolinian.

HOW NOT TO BE BEAUTIFUL.—A vacant mind takes all the meaning out of the fairest face. A sensual disposition deforms the handsomest features. A cold, selfish heart shrivels and distorts the best looks. A mean, groveling spirit takes all the dignity out of the figure and all the character out of the countenance. A cherished hatred transforms the most beautiful lineaments into an image of ugliness.

It is as impossible to preserve good looks, with a brood of bad passions feeding on the blood, a set of low loves tramping through the heart, and a selfish, disdainful spirit enthroned in the will, as to preserve the beauty of an elegant mansion with a litter of swine in the basement, a tribe of gipsies in the parlor, and owls and vultures in the upper part. Badness and beauty will no more keep company a great while than poison will consort with health, or an elegant carving survive the furnace fire. The experiment of putting them together has been tried for thousands of years, but with one unvarying result.

Stand on one of the crowded streets and note the passers-by, and any one can see how a vacant mind has made a vacant eye; how a thoughtless, aimless mind has robbed the features of expression; how vanity has made everything about its victim petty; how frivolity has faded the luster of the countenance; how baby thoughts have made baby faces; how pride has cut disdain into the features and made the face a chronic sneer; how selfishness has shriveled, and wrinkled, and withered up the personality; how hatred has deformed and demonized those who yielded to its power; how every bad passion has turned tell-tale and published its disgraceful story in the lines of the face and the look of the eye; how the old man who has given himself up to every sort of wickedness is branded all over with deformity and repulsiveness, and he will get a new idea of what retribution is. This may not be all, but it is terrible—this transforming of a face once full of hope and loveliness into deformity and repulsiveness; then the rose blushing on its stalk, now ashes and a brand.—Journal of Phrenology and Physiognomy.

CHILDREN'S ETIQUETTE.—Always say "Yes, sir," "No, sir;" "Yes, papa," "No papa;" "Thank you," "No, thank you;" "Good night," "Good morning." Use no slang terms.

Rap before entering a room, and never leave it with your back to the company.

Never put your feet on cushions, chairs or tables.

Never overlook any one when reading or writing, nor talk or read aloud while others are reading.

Never leave your clothes about the room. Have a place for everything, and everything in its place.—The Mother's Magazine.

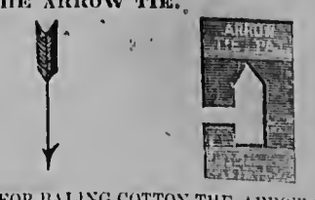
MISCELLANEOUS.

THE ARROW TIE.



FOR BALING COTTON THE ARROW TIE is the most popular, being the best Cotton Tie in use.

Planters and Cotton Press men everywhere prefer it to all others.

THE ARROW TIE

was used to cover MORE THAN HALF THE CROP OF 1869, giving entire satisfaction.

The patentee and manufacturer of the celebrated ARROW TIE, J. J. McComb, formerly of New Orleans, now residing in Liverpool, having control of the best and most extensive Rolling Mills in Europe, is constantly importing large stocks of this popular Tie, manufactured of the very best quality of English iron, to meet the increasing demand for it throughout all the Cotton States.

Planters can buy or order the ARROW TIE of all dealers in Iron Ties, and of cotton merchants generally, at the lowest market price; and we respectfully solicit the patronage of Planters and Factors everywhere.

BRACES AND TRUSSES.—DR. JOHN C. BANGELL informs the medical profession and others that he has constantly on hand and for sale a complete assortment of BANNING'S TRUSSES, Spinal and Shoulder Braces, and other appliances for the prevention, relief and cure of general debility, local weakness and derangements of public speakers and singers, palpitation of the heart, bronchitis and weakness of the lungs, spinal weakness and deformity, dyspepsia and nervous affections, constipation and chronic diarrhea, female derangements and extreme displacements of the womb, RUPTURE, PILES, prolapsus-ani, and weakness of the male and female system.

These light, cool and springy auxiliaries are the special favorites of the profession, are intensely common-sense and rational in their action; supply a missing link in treatment; place the above affections in a hopeful and more hopeful light, and often effect cures where medicine can only mitigate, more than it can cure a hernia or a dislocated joint.

He specially desires an examination of these appliances by the profession and others. Where necessary the professional application of the above braces will be under supervision or that of the family physician.

These valuable appliances are sanctioned by a large number of the medical profession in the United States and Europe as the best adapted to fulfill the purpose for which they are intended, and the Trusses and Braces adopted by the United States government for the use of the army and navy. Terms—Consultations free. Send for them personally if it is better to call.

SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 4, 1871.

FLOGGING.—A good story is told of Richard Mulcaster, who several centuries ago was in the habit of endorsing the precepts of the wise king upon the ingenuous youth of England. One day as he was about to inflict punishment upon a pupil, he paused awhile, and there, according to the chronicler, "a merry conceit taking him," he said: "I ask the bans of matrimony between this boy on the one side and Lady Birch on the other side; and if any of you know lawful cause of impediment why they should not be joined together, let him speak, for this is the last time of asking." Thereupon a good sturdy boy, and of quick wit, stood up and said: "Master, I forbid the bans!" "Yea, sirrah, and why so?" exclaimed the master. "Because both parties are not agreed," was the answer. The old pedagogue, who enjoyed the joke, admitted the validity of the objection, and pardoned the fault of the one pupil and the presumption of the other. Perhaps in no country in the civilized world is the rod so freely and so vigorously used for the purposes of scholastic and domestic discipline as in England. Even a man so refined and progressive as Dr. Arnold wrote a "Dissertation on Flogging," in which he eloquently and enthusiastically favored the practice. The French commissioners expressed their surprise to find prevalent in English schools a kind of punishment which in France is confined to children in the nursery, and came to the conclusion that "the rod is one of those ancient English traditions which survive because they have survived. A foreigner can hardly conceive the perseverance with which English teachers cling to this old and degrading custom."

THE DYING SOLDIER.—"Put me down," said a wounded Prussian at a halt to his comrades who were carrying him; "put me down; do not take the trouble to carry me further; I am dying."

They put him down and returned to the field. A few minutes after an officer saw the man weltering in his blood, and said to him: "Can I do anything for you?"

"Nothing, thank you."

"Shall I get you a little water?" the kind-hearted officer.

"No, thank you, I am dying."

"Is there nothing I can do for you? Shall I write to your friends?"

"I have no friends that you can write to. But there is one thing for which I would be much obliged. In my knapsack you will find a Testament; will you open it at the fourteenth chapter of John, and near the end of the chapter you will find a verse that begins with 'Peace.' Will you read it?"

The officer did so, and read the words: "Peace I leave with you. My peace I give unto you. Let not your heart be troubled, neither let it be afraid."

"Thank you, sir," said the dying man; "I have that peace; I am going to that Saviour; God is with me; I want no more." These were his last words, and his spirit ascended to be with him he loved.

HANDY HORSES.—Not many years since a gentleman of South Adams, Massachusetts, owned a pet span of horses and a numerous family, who were also pets, as was every living thing under his protection. The district school house was a mile off, over a bleak road in a very snowy country. These horses, when colts, were accustomed to carry and fetch the children, and after a while were intrusted with the whole business. After being hitched up to the old lumber-box sleigh they would, "of their own free will," trot up to the farm house door, receive some half-dozen or more children, who in great glee would "pile in" among the buffalo skins and blankets. Then these horses, without driver or guidance of any kind, would start off briskly, go to the school house, turn up to the door, wait for the children to tumble out, then make their turn carefully and return home. At night they were sent alone for their load again, and would turn up to the school house door and wait patiently for the children. This business was done by these horses for twenty years, and their kind master kept them until old age carried them off. Our Dumb Animals.

HIGHWAY AND HEDGE.—"I can't give lots of money, and I can't sew cloaks and gowns for poor children, because I'm not rich enough, mamma. But I'll tell you what I can do: I can highway and hedge 'em!" said a bright little girl on her return from a child's sermon. "What is that, my dear?" asked her mother. "Why it's coaxing poor children and naughty children into Sunday school. I can't 'xplain it to you, but I know how, for the superintendent told us. And I'm going to do it!"

HE ALONE is truly wise who is wise unto salvation.

Scientific.

PROF. NEWTON, of Yale, suggests as an excellent position for a national observatory a locality a few miles east of St. Louis, on the ninetieth meridian from Greenwich. If American longitudes were reckoned from that meridian, instead of from Washington, they would differ from Greenwich longitudes by just ninety degrees. The time also of that position would differ from Greenwich time by exactly six hours.

BARON VON RICHTHOFEN has been making some geological explorations on an inland tour from Canton to Peking. He reports that the province of Shansi, which lies west and south of Peking, has an immense extension of coal and iron deposits. The southern half of the province, and probably the northern, is an almost continuous coal field, containing anthracite of the best quality, in layers from twelve to thirty feet in thickness. He avers that this anthracite district is much more extensive than that of Pennsylvania, and offers incomparably more favorable conditions for working.

THE completion of the Mont Cenis Tunnel, eight miles in length, within a time of fourteen years, is a great triumph for human skill. The work was greatly hastened by improved machinery for drilling with the use of compressed air. Water power on the outside was used to compress the air, which was carried in flexible tubes to the drills. A large number of these were set in motion at the same time, each striking the rock with a blow of two hundred pounds two hundred times in a minute. Nitro-glycerine was used for blasting, while the air brought in as power served also admirably for ventilation—the more necessary as shafts could not be sunk from above. Geologically, this tunnel will always be an object of great interest, as it penetrates mountain summits which rise eleven thousand feet above the sea level.—New York Independent.

A THIRTY-FIVE TON GUN.—The final operation in the construction of England's greatest gun—the new thirty-five ton muzzle-loader—was successfully performed at the Woolwich Arsenal on Tuesday, December 13, and in the course of a fortnight it will be proved at the government butts, and be ready for service. The tube of the gun, which is about sixteen feet long, was brought out of the factory in which it had been rifled, and fixed muzzle downward in a pit, under the most powerful crane which the Royal Arsenal possesses. At the same time the heavy breech piece, a mass of iron weighing fifteen tons, was heated nearly to redness, on an adjacent "gridiron," in order to expand the metal, and was then carefully lifted and dropped like a cap over the breech of the perpendicular tube. When cold the caliber of the breech piece was slightly less than the diameter of the tube; but the heat expanded it so as to allow nearly half an inch free play between the two, the cooling process being afterward assisted by jets of water, so as to fix the cap piece firmly down on the shoulders, and thereby increase the tension on every part of the surface.

The gun, now it is complete, weighs thirty-five tons seven hundred weight, the diameter at the breech being four feet eight inches, and at the muzzle one foot nine inches. The interior of the bore is a shade less than twelve inches, and is rifled on the Woolwich system. It consists of an inner tube of steel, tempered in oil, and encased in massive folds of wrought iron, in accordance with Frazer's double coil system, in addition to the easable screw and trunnion ring. With the gun so strongly built, it is calculated that it will throw a shot or bolt seven hundred pounds in weight, and pierce armor plates fifteen inches thick, the ordinary charge of powder being one hundred and twenty pounds, and the proof charge one hundred and fifty pounds.

The Krupp steel gun, the next most powerful ordnance in existence, weighs about forty tons, but its projectile is only six hundred pounds, and it is doubtful whether it has ever been proved with that, as it certainly had not been so proved when the Prussians sent it to the Paris exhibition. The moderate caliber of the new gun is designed for penetration, and the shot will probably be three times the length of its diameter. The estimated cost is £2,500, which is £1,000 less than Sir William Armstrong's, and £3,500 less than Sir Joseph Whitworth's. If the gun should be approved, fifteen more will be immediately constructed, at a still less cost. It is stated the new thirty-five ton guns will be used on the Hercules class of iron-clads, which are plated with iron nine inches in thickness.

CHEERFULNESS of temper arises half from personal goodness, and half from a belief in the personal goodness of others.

Guyot's Geographical Text-Books.

"Incomparably superior to anything published."—Agassiz.

Introduction to the Study of Geography.
Elementary Geography.
Intermediate Geography.
Common School Geography.

Guyot's System is approved and indorsed by the most distinguished literary and scientific men of our nation; such as Profs. Agassiz, Dana, Tenney, Henry and others, celebrated in science throughout Europe as well as at home.

The fact that ONE MILLION (1,000,000) copies of the work are in use in the schools of our country, at the present time, is proof of the unparalleled success attending the New System, for no other series of books ever published in America have ever secured so rapid and extensive introduction. They are the text-books in nearly all the colleges, seminaries, normal schools, etc., in the United States; in the public schools of the cities of New York, Brooklyn, Rochester, and most of the cities and towns of the Eastern States; Cincinnati, Cleveland, Columbus, Springfield, Toledo, Marietta, and most of the other important towns and cities, numbering nine thousand schools in Ohio, and hundreds of towns and cities in the other Western States, while in the Southern States and California they are being extensively adopted.

Believing that the publication of Professor Guyot's series has marked a new and better era in the presentation of geographical science, that by it the pupils of this generation will obtain a clearer, more definite and exalted knowledge of the world on which they live, and that it is so systematized as to render that knowledge more valuable and permanent, we commend it to the attention of all interested in educational improvements and progress.

HIWASSEE COLLEGE,

MONROE COUNTY, EAST TENNESSEE.

Having taken charge of this school, I desire to invite the attention of friends in the Cotton States to the excellent location, delightful climate and cheap board. We are in the best part of East Tennessee, seven miles east of Sweetwater, on the great line of railroad, and two miles from Madisonville, which is our post office.

The college has been in operation for twenty years, and has boarding arrangements for about fifty students. The steward supplies his table from his own farm, and gives the best that the country affords, well prepared, and furnished rooms, at

Two Dollars and a Half Per Week.

Tuition is $40 per annum. Students will be received at any time, and charged to the end of the term. For circular address

W. H. ANDERSON, D. D., PRESIDENT.

This Institution of learning, so widely known through the South, will begin its next session on WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 14, 1870.

The Faculty is composed of men of experience and ability. The course of study is comprised in the Literary Department, Law Department, Department of Biblical Literature and Commercial Department. The advantages of this University are seen in its healthful and attractive location, thorough course of study, excellent discipline, the character and success of its instructors, and the reasonable rates at which board and tuition are furnished.

Licentiates in the ministry and sons of ministers in the regular work are admitted to recitation on paying the incidental fees.

TUSKEGEE FEMALE COLLEGE,

TUSKEGEE, ALABAMA.

The Fifteenth Annual Session begins SEPTEMBER 15, 1870, and continues forty weeks; divided into two equal terms.

REV. GEO. W. F[illegible]RUE, M. A., President.
REV. B. B. ROSS, M. A., Professor of Latin and Mathematics.
DR. S. M. BARTLETT, Director of Music, with Nine Assistants in the various departments of instruction and discipline.

The president calls particular attention to the fact that Rev. B. B. Ross, of the Alabama Conference, has accepted the professorship of Latin and Mathematics in the institution. Brother Ross is a graduate of Lagrange College, Alabama. He was professor of Mixed Mathematics in that institution for two years. Subsequently he was president of Talladega Female Institute. His classical education, his experience in the practical business of teaching, his acceptable career of itinerant service, his many excellent personal traits, all entitle him to the unlimited confidence of our people.

The College has just closed a most successful year. Its prospects were never more flattering. The present organization of the institution combines all the best features for securing the thorough instruction and efficient discipline of its pupils. The Faculty contains none but tried and trained teachers, whose success has been tested by years of service. The boarding arrangements are under the immediate control of the president, who resides in the building, and supervises the social recreations and the professional duties of the pupils. The health of the girls is in charge of an experienced matron. The table, kitchen and laundry are in care of a thoroughly trained housekeeper. Miss Shelley, of Talladega, is the governess, and brings to the office high social position, experience as a teacher, liberal education, and matured Christian character. The pupils are trained in gymnastic and calisthenic exercises, thereby developing their physical powers, strengthening their constitutions, and imparting grace and dignity to their movements. Religion is the basis of the system of education, and girls are taught that "the truth as it is in Jesus" is the highest attainable wisdom.

REV. WILLIAM A. HARRIS, President.

With Thirteen Professors, Teachers, etc., etc.

This thirty-two College for Young Ladies ranks higher. System of teaching like that pursued in the University of Virginia. French is taught by a native master of the language. Professor in Department of Music has no superior in any school; among others, is assisted by the distinguished vocalist, Madam Bertha Reid. This is one of the healthiest climates in America, and young ladies who come here from the South with feeble constitutions are entirely restored to health. The grounds are large and beautiful; buildings stately and elegant, fanned by the purest breezes, overlooking the entire city, and commanding the most magnificent rural and mountain scenery for thirty miles along the beautiful Valley of Virginia, making it one of the most delightful college homes in the Union.

(From Judge John N. Hendren, M. A., University of Virginia.)

I regard the Wesleyan Female Institute in this place, under the management of Rev. William A. Harris, as one of the very best and most attractive schools in the State. * *

(From Hon. John B. Baldwin.

The Wesleyan Female Institute is surrounded by influences which make it in all respects a most desirable place for the care and education of the daughters of Christian parents.

(From Prof. William E. Peters, LL. D., University of Virginia.)

Young ladies committed to the care of Prof. Harris will enjoy advantages of an intellectual and moral training rarely found.

(From Rev. William E. Munsey, D. D.)

* * * From personal knowledge I believe that as the president of a female college Rev. William A. Harris has no superior; indeed within the purview of my acquaintance he has no equal.

(From Bishop E. M. Marvin, D. D.)

The Wesleyan Female Institute is an honor to the church. Instruction is thorough. All classes stand high. In music advantages are offered of a very high order. The most talented professors are employed, and neither pains nor expense are spared to make this department eminent. The school is very prosperous, and deserves to be so.

TERMS FOR THE ENTIRE SCHOLASTIC YEAR. Board and tuition in the Collegiate Course, $225. Music and other extra studies moderate.

SCHOOLS AND COLLEGES.

LOUISIANA STATE UNIVERSITY,

(Name changed from Louisiana State Seminary,)

BATON ROUGE, LOUISIANA.*

Founded and supported by the State of Louisiana,

The ninth session, now in progress, will close last Wednesday in June, 1870. The next session will begin first Monday in September next, and will continue ten months.

The Academic Board consists of a full corps of able instructors in all branches of literature and science usually taught in the best Colleges and Universities.

The Course of Study embraces a Preparatory and an Academic Department, including a Literary, Scientific and Optional Course, a Special School of Civil Engineering and a Commercial School.

Library, Apparatus and Cabinets are well selected and valuable. The Geological and Mineralogical Cabinets, etc., the largest and most complete in the South, embracing the extensive collections of the late Col. Walles, of Mississippi, and the Cabinets of the Topographical, Geological and Botanical Survey of Louisiana.

Admission granted to cadets not under fifteen years of age, who know arithmetic, English grammar and geography.

Expenses of every kind, except clothing, for ten months, $350; $200 payable in advance, balance February 15; or by accepted draft, at eight per cent., 6 months. Payments may be made through the Canal or Citizens' Bank.

Cadets received at any time during the session and charged from date of entrance.

Discipline, military, with drill, etc. A battery of four guns will afford facilities for instruction in artillery. Uniform of cadet: Gray cloth, to be had at the institution at a cost of $25 per suit.

For further information address
D. F. BOYD, Superintendent,
Baton Rouge, La.

Office of the University in New Orleans, at Swarbrick & Co.'s, 59 Camp street.

*Until the rebuilding of the College edifice, lately destroyed by fire, near Alexandria, the institution is temporarily located at Baton Rouge, in the Deaf and Dumb Asylum. Location very healthy, and accommodations ample for a large number of cadets. Number this session, 176. fe11 4m

VIRGINIA FEMALE INSTITUTE,

STAUNTON, VIRGINIA.

REV. R. H. PHILLIPS, M. A., Principal.

With Nineteen Assistants.

The Twenty-sixth annual session will open SEPTEMBER 14, 1870.

From over 5 thousand testimonials from Southern patrons we select the following, from General Robert E. Lee, president of Washington College; General Francis H. Smith, president of the Virginia Military Institute, and General W. N. Pendleton, Lexington, Virginia:

"We, the undersigned, have had daughters educated at the Virginia Female Institute, in Staunton, under the care of Rev. R. H. Phillips. They therefore know it to be an admirably conducted and superior institution for young ladies, and they cordially recommend it to favor, even beyond its past extensive patronage. R. E. LEE.
FRANCIS H. SMITH.
WM. N. PENDLETON.
LEXINGTON, VA., March 14, 1870."

For circulars, with full information, address Rev. R. H. PHILLIPS, Principal, or Rev. J. C. WHEAT, Vice Principal, Staunton, Virginia. je11 3m

STONEWALL INSTITUTE,

Thirteen Miles North of Selma, Ala.

This School for Boys opens its sixth annual session OCTOBER 3, 1870.

D. C. B. CONNERLY, Principal and Teacher of Languages.

JOHN P. SEABROOK, Teacher of Mathematics.

But few schools accomplish as much for its pupils as this does.

It is in the quiet country. Its teachers give instruction nine hours per day, including two at night.

The Institute belongs entirely to the Principal.

Two Hundred and Sixty Dollars will cover nine months' board, tuition and washing.

Transportation from Selma to the Institute on every Wednesday and Saturday in October to the twenty-second, free of charge.

Refer to Bishop J. C. Keener and John M. Bonner, Esq., New Orleans, Louisiana.

ROANOKE COLLEGE, SALEM, VA.

Next Session Begins September 5.

This Institution has a full corps of instructors, a thorough course of studies, and aims at a high grade of scholarship. Its superior educational advantages, moderate expenses, healthy location, and excellent mail, traveling and telegraphic facilities, render it well worthy the attention and patronage of the South.

Expenses for session of ten months, about $210 00

This estimate includes board and tuition, embracing modern languages. A slight advance on the above for students boarding in private families.

For further particulars, catalogues, etc., address REV. D. F. BITTLE, D. D.,
Jy16 3m President of the College.

TENNESSEE FEMALE COLLEGE,

FRANKLIN, TENNESSEE.

Fall Session for 1870 Begins Monday September 5.

The claims of this institution rest on the style, extent and thoroughness of the culture it bestows. The climate is favorable for study, the only magic that makes scholars.

It refers to its patrons, including distinguished educators and gentlemen eminent in the pulpit and in the professions.

Catalogues sent on application.

NEW ORLEANS MARKETS.

From the N. O. Price Current.

We have again to notice very little animation in the general market. Sugar and molasses, however, have been in good request at steady prices, especially for the better qualities. Flour has been in demand both for export and for the home trade, and, with a light stock, prices have ruled in favor of sellers. Corn has been in better supply, and, although the demand has been better, has declined 6 to 8c. per bushel. Provisions have been firm but quiet.

COTTON.—The following are the arrivals since the twenty-seventh ultimo:

Louisiana and Mississippi..... bales	25,052
Lake	74
Arkansas	1,823
Florida	12
Mobile	590
Texas	320
Total	28,471

On Saturday, under a decline of ⅛c. at New York, and easier prices at Liverpool, the demand was slack throughout the day, and although factors made fair concessions, they failed to impart any spirit to the movement, and the sales were confined to 3,450 bales, good ordinary closing at 12¹⁄₁₆ to 12¾c., and low middling at 14⅛ to 14¹⁄₁₆c., showing a decline of ⅛ to ¼c. in the former, and ⅛c. in the latter, while the higher grades were unchanged. On Monday, under the capitulation of Paris and prospects of peace, factors anticipated a decided advance at Liverpool, and raised their pretensions accordingly, but on the accounts not only showing no improvement, but an actual falling off, while at New York the advance of ⅛c. at the opening was subsequently lost, they were compelled to meet the demand at previous rates for the medium grades, and at ⅛ to ¼c. on all others. These concessions, however, stimulated the demand, which continued quite active to the close, and the business summed up 10,600 bales. On Tuesday the market opened under the influence of rather discouraging telegrams, but, as factors met the demand freely, the movement continued animated, and 10,500 bales changed hands at previous rates for even running lists and the higher grades, but at easier rates for average low middling and good ordinary, especially when dusty.

This makes an aggregate for the past three days of 21,550 bales.

The receipts at this port since the first of September (exclusive of the arrivals from Mobile, Florida and Texas) are 700,815 bales, against 631,829 bales to the same date last year, and the increase in the receipts at all the ports, up to the latest dates, as compared with last year, is 453,591 bales. In the exports from the United States to foreign countries, as compared with the same dates last year, there is an increase of 197,917 bales to Great Britain, 45,136 to other foreign ports, and a decrease of 153,822 to France.

Referring to our remarks above, we quote as follows:

Ordinary	12 to 12¼
Good ordinary	13¼ to 13⅞
Low middling	14 to 14¼
Middling	14¼ to 15
Strict middling	15¼ to 15⅝

SUGAR.—A good demand has continued to prevail since our last review, especially for the better descriptions, and prices have ruled firmer. The supplies on Saturday and Monday were mostly disposed of at 5 to 6c. per pound for inferior, 6¼ to 6¾c. for common, 8 to 8¾c. for fair to good fair, 9 to 9¾c. for fully fair, 9½ to 9⅝c. for prime, 10 to 10¼c. for strictly prime, 10⅛ to 10⅜c. for choice, 8 to 10½c. for seconds, 11 to 11¾c. for yellow clarified, and 12 to 13c. for white.

MONETARY.—Gold, 110¾ to 111.

American silver half dollars, 108½, and Mexican dollars at 1½ per cent. premium in gold.

In bonds we notice sales of $12,000 new City Seven per cents on Saturday at 70¼, and a similar amount, a resale, at 70½, $2,000 do. on Monday at 70½, and $1,200 on Tuesday at 70¼ to 70½.

The sales of warrants include a small amount of new State on Monday at the advanced rate of 77; and a few on Tuesday at 77 to 77⅛, and $7,000 Levee warrants at 65. Dealers have bought new State at 75 to 76, new Metropolitan Police at 97½ to 98, and asked 77 to 78 for the former, and 98 to 98½ for the latter.

City Treasury notes are quoted at 24½ to 25 per cent. discount.

VOL. XVII. NEW ORLEANS, SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 11, 1871. NO. 4.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 2.—The following nominations were confirmed: V. King, collector of customs, district of Pamlico, North Carolina, and Mr. Blackburn, collector of internal revenue, sixth Tennessee district.

There were no nominations announced to-day.

The Southern Outrage Committee is in session, examining more North Carolina witnesses; about fifty have been examined so far. The committee do not expect to complete their investigations this session, but will make a partial report before its close.

In the Senate to-day a bill to allow the Savannah and Memphis Railroad Company of Alabama to enter public lands was referred.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 2.—House.—In the House to-day the bill dividing Louisiana into two judicial districts passed. The provisions of the bill are similar to those of the act of 1849, except that court is to be held at Monroe, and nowhere else. The eastern district of Louisiana is restored, and the judge and all other officers are retained. The new district is styled the northern district of Louisiana, and embraces all that part of the State above Red river and the parishes of Rapides, Grant, Natchitoches, DeSoto, Sabine and Caddo, and provides for the appointment of a judge with a salary of $2,500, and a marshal and district attorney with salary and fees as in other courts. The bill will doubtless pass the Senate.

The sub-committee of the House have agreed to report in favor of appropriating $125,000 additional for the month of the Mississippi river.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 6.—The Chronicle of this morning contained an article showing the importance of the Gulf coast trade. It is believed that the New Orleans steamship bill will pass the Senate.

BOSTON, Feb. 6.—Weather intensely cold, both north and west.

MOBILE, Feb. 6.—Colonel Duncan K. McRae, formerly a Congressman, has been appointed clerk of the United States District and Circuit Court here, vice A. S. Mitchell, removed.

Mrs. Edwin Spottswood, while singing in the choir of one of the churches yesterday, fell dead of heart disease.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 6.—House.—The fillibusters succeeded in occupying the morning hour, and the New York air line went over to Monday.

A bill repealing all taxes on spirits from fruits was referred to the Ways and Means Committee.

Many bills were introduced under the regular call of States.

A motion to suspend the rules to have a committee inquire into the abuse of cadets at West Point, on account of their race and color, received only twenty-five affirmative votes.

A conference committee was appointed on the consular and diplomatic bill.

Mr. Maynard moved to suspend the rules to take from the speaker's chair the bill in relation to the Southern Pacific railroad and refer it to the Committee on Pacific Railroads, with leave to report at any time after the tenth instant. The rules were suspended and the bill referred—yeas 129, nays 61. This action is regarded as equivalent to an ultimate passage of the bill.

All the Southern members voted aye.

The House fillibustered on the appropriation bill for the Southern outrage committee. The opponents of the bill left the hall, and the call of the House is now progressing.

Senate.—A numerously signed petition was presented, asking for a territorial government for this district.

A bill for the protection of buoys and other aids to navigation passed. It provides punishment for the mooring to or colliding with buoys.

An attempt was made to bring up the air line railroad bill, but failed.

Mr. Goldthwaite's credentials as Alabama's Senator from March 4, 1871, were presented to-day.

CINCINNATI, Feb. 6.—On Saturday morning Martha Kriengenhoefper, seventeen years old, employed in a paper mill at Hamilton, Ohio, fell through a trap door, on the third floor, into a hopper used for grinding rags, and before the mill could be stopped was literally torn in pieces.

Considerable interest has been produced in religious circles from the opening of the Young Men's Mercantile Library on Sunday. To-day the Ministerial Association of the city adopted a paper deploring the prevalence of the Sabbath desecration here; declaring that public travel, pleasure excursions, traffic in intoxicating liquors and the sale of Sunday newspapers are demoralizing in a high degree; express their anxiety concerning the disposition to promote facilities for secular reading by opening public reading rooms on Sunday, and entreat members not to embrace privileges thus extended; also favor establishing religious reading rooms.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 7.—Senate.—The Legislature of Texas ask for increased mail facilities.

A resolution passed withdrawing authority from the Postmaster General to settle with Chorpenning.

The New York air line railroad bill was taken up by a vote of 27 to 25. The discussion proceeded some time, when it gave way to the special order, being business from the Committee on Claims.

The bill paying loyal citizens of Loudon county, Virginia, for live stock taken by the United States troops during the war, under an order by General Sheridan, was discussed and passed—yeas 38, nays 10. It involves the payment of property taken by the government within the confines of the late Confederacy.

A similar bill to pay Mrs. Shelby, of Mississippi, for cotton taken from her by the Confederates and captured by United States soldiers, was favorably received, but there was no quorum voting. Senate adjourned.

POUGHKEEPSIE, N. Y., Feb. 7.—An oil train bound south, with broken axle, dragged along the ground until it reached the draw bridge at New Hamburg, where a collision with the pier threw the car off.

An ineffectual attempt was made to stop the express train, which struck the car, scattering the oil, which immediately ignited, enveloping the entire express train in flames.

The express train consisted of a locomotive, baggage express and five sleeping cars. The engine and baggage express car were hurled into the river.

All the passengers who were in the Chicago sleeping car perished in the flames. The two following sleeping cars were wrapped in flames, but the inmates escaped.

The bridge caught on fire, and fell in ten minutes after the accident, carrying with it the burning Chicago car, with its inmates, into the river upon the wrecks of the locomotive, baggage and express cars, which fell at the time of the accident. Sleeping car tickets indicate that thirteen persons perished; but passengers say that the Chicago sleeping car contained twenty-five or thirty persons, not one of whom escaped.

Another and probably more reliable account of the accident, furnished by the Western Union Telegraph Company, says that eighteen persons were killed outright, and many more fatally injured. Three sleeping cars were among those destroyed.

NEW YORK, Feb. 7.—The details of the accident are horrible. There were several instances of children burned in their mothers' arms. The body of the conductor of the sleeping car has been found. A list of his passengers, found on the body, only gives the surnames, which are as follows: Lowell, Fowler, Pearce, Cary, Sorbish, Gomaund, Norcreade, Rosenthal and Forbush—11.

This tallies with the sleeping car tickets—sixty-five in all—of which fifty-four have been called for.

An engineer named Bartlett is missing.

As soon as the bodies came to the surface they were placed in a heated baggage car to thaw, when their clothing was searched for means of identification.

At the latest accounts nineteen bodies have been recovered, fourteen of which were those of passengers. It is thought all have been recovered.

NEW YORK, Feb. 7.—London dispatches of yesterday's date state that neutral powers are still hopeful of inducing Bismarck to demand more moderate terms. England works hard to prevent the transfer of the twenty war ships to Prussia. She also is anxious that the demand for Pondicherry be cancelled.

Belgian papers complain of the effluvia arising from the graves at Sedan. A general pestilence is feared.

The excitement here, owing to the dreadful accident on the Hudson river road, is intense. Twenty bodies have been recovered. Many more are believed to be submerged. The total loss is near forty. Rev. Dr. Deems is among the dead.

The scene after the collision—the burning mass of cars, oil and the bridge—was most awful.—Times.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 8.—The ecclesiastical court in session at Chicago has rendered a verdict against Rev. Charles E. Chaney, finding him guilty of the charges and specifications contained in the presentment.

He was sentenced to suspension until his contrition for the past and promises of conformity for the future are satisfactory to his bishop.

Mr. Chaney's offense was the omission of the word reginate in infant baptism, as required in the common prayer of the Episcopal service.

The Massachusetts House of Representatives defeated the bill providing for the opening of libraries on Sunday by one hundred and twenty-five to ninety-five.

Henry Steinway, the noted piano manufacturer, is dead.

FOREIGN.

CITY OF MEXICO, Jan. 30.—The election excitement is dying out. The prospects of Juarez are the brightest. The friends of Diaz at the proper time will use their utmost efforts to elect him president of the Supreme Court. The adherents of Juarez are making efforts to oust Romero and Mejia from the cabinet. Romero is to replenish the treasury by the sale of church property. It is generally conceded that Romero as minister of finance is a failure.

Another section of the City of Mexico and Vera Cruz railroad has been finished.

Diaz, in an official card, denies that the cabinet has held meetings on the Zona Libre question.

There was an earthquake at Oaxaca on the fifteenth of January. No lives lost.

Free importation of corn into Yucatan is permitted for five months from the first of April.

General Baez has been appointed governor in place of Governor Veloz, who resigned.

The widow of the murdered General Batoni has arrived in the capital and is trying to obtain justice against Carto.

BORDEAUX, Feb. 1.—It is reported General Manteuffel has refused to recognize the armistice, and is disregarding the protests of the French commander. Manteuffel's continued hostilities are forcing the army of the east to surrender or retreat into Switzerland.

General Clenchart, who now commands the army of the east, made a treaty with the Swiss government, and crossed the line with his whole army. General Bellot covers the retreat.

LONDON, Feb. 1.—The Times in an editorial says the Bordeaux decree, ordering elections, will greatly jeopardize the government, inasmuch as it will afford irresistible opportunities for intrigue and conspiracy.

The refusal of the ex-Empress of the French to sign the capitulation is regarded by all classes and journals with approval.

BERLIN, Feb. 1.—Only open letters for Paris can be posted.

FLORENCE, Feb. 1.—The Chamber of Deputies, by a vote of 232 to 291, resolved to transfer the capital to Rome.

ZURICH, Feb. 1.—The twenty-fourth French corps escaped the grasp of the Germans and moved toward Lyons.

LONDON, Feb. 1.—A letter from Colonel Duncan Kenrty, assisting in the War Department at Bordeaux, represents an immense reaction in official circles and among the populace against the provisional government. Ten millions of people would vote for the restoration of the empire to-morrow. France will refuse to continue the war. Mobiles arriving at Bordeaux shout "Vive L'Empereur."

Before Bourbaki's army reached Switzerland many thousands died from starvation in the Jura. Fifteen thousand were taken prisoners, including one hundred officers. Two generals were also captured, besides ten cannon, seven mitailleuses and two eagles. Only eight thousand escaped in the direction of Lyons. Manteuffel is in pursuit.

LONDON, Feb. 2.—The Times comments on General Butler's resolution welcoming the Irish exiles as unprecedented. If serious, it can only be treated as an act of avowed hostility. It cannot, however, regard it as more than a part of a discreditable game pursued by unscrupulous politicians, who are doing their best to reduce the character of the American government, and are anxious to secure the Irish vote.

LONDON, Feb. 2, noon.—The entrance of Bourbaki's army into Switzerland was effected in accordance with a convention between General Clenchart and Hergog.

A bureau for receiving and forwarding provisions to Paris has been established at Dieppe. Supplies from all quarters are invited.

A special dispatch to the Times, dated Versailles, says Bismarck is indisposed and was visited yesterday by the Emperor.

LILLE, Feb. 2.—L'Echo du Nord is in favor of peace. It calls the appeals for resistance, made by the municipality of Bordeaux, encroachments upon the powers of the Constituent Assembly.

Meetings are being called in the northern departments to nominate candidates for the Assembly.

VERSAILLES, Feb. 3.—A correspondent has arrived from Paris. He reports that the city is now quiet and the people are really satisfied with the armistice. Some attempts to pillage were made on Sunday, but the disorder was soon checked by the National Guard, many of whom, however, filled their own pockets. The streets are constantly filled with disarmed mobiles and sailors. The latter retired from the forts with great reluctance. The commandant of Fort Montrouge has committed suicide. Crowds of French peasantry attend daily on the bridge of Neuilly, in the hope of being able to pass the Prussian outposts, but without success.

The price of provisions has not yet been lowered.

Of the one hundred thousand horses originally in Paris, sixty thousand have been killed for food.

The delivery of arms has commenced and is proceeding rapidly.

The exchange of wounded prisoners commenced to-day at the gates of Versailles.

MADRID, Feb. 3.—General Sickles presented his credentials. The reply of King Amadeus is complimentary to the United States.

LONDON, Feb. 3.—The foreign office have made an announcement that an offer has been made to place English resources to supply Paris at the disposal of Bismarck and Favre, under the superintendence of German and French agents.

PARIS, Feb. 3.—Trochu's letter declining the candidacy says: "I only consented to retain the presidency of the government because it was my duty to share with my colleagues the common responsibility. I am about to be discharged from it, and my part must finish with events which gave it rise." At the meeting at which his letter was read it was shouted: "The members of the government are cowards."

The following are among the candidates of the republican alliance: Louis Blanc, Victor Hugo, M. Rollin, Felix Payal, Henri Rochefort and M. Brissenee, editor of the Le Combat.

BRUSSELS, Feb. 3.—It is reported here that an attempt made to assassinate General Trochu resulted in the death of Trochu's orderly. The general was unhurt.

It is now said the Orleans princes will not accept the candidature for the National Assembly.

BERLIN, Feb. 3.—The president of the lower house of the Prussian Diet read to that body the reply of the Emperor to the loyal and congratulatory address upon the occasion of his assumption of the imperial crown. The Emperor expressed his thanks to the Diet for the sentiments in their address, with a fervent hope for peace and the prosperity of the new empire. Though there is now, he says, some prospect that the severe struggle into which Germany was forced will soon be finished, it can as yet only be considered that there is ground for hope of the re-establishment of peace. It is not impossible that the war will continue, and great sacrifices still be necessary from the German people.

BRUSSELS, Feb. 3.—The Gaulois has a dispatch that Bourbaki died of the wounds inflicted upon himself during a fit of temporary insanity.

LONDON, Feb. 4.—The conference had a long session to-day, but no result was reached. It meets again on Tuesday.

Thomas William Robertson, a distinguished dramatist, is dead.

There is no confirmation of Bourbaki's death.

BRUSSELS, Feb. 4.—Travelers who left Paris on Wednesday and arrived here to-day, report the city quiet, with some slight disorder upon the receipt of the news of the armistice. The rioters were easily appeased.

There was great difficulty in procuring food, and twenty-three thousand persons have already asked permission to leave the city.

PARIS, Feb. 4.—Intense suffering prevails here; hundreds are dying of starvation, as the food received is wholly inadequate.

BERLIN, Feb. 5.—Uneasiness is succeeding the exultation caused by the fall of Paris. Funds are depressed, and no confidence is felt that the terms of peace will be accepted by the Bordeaux Assembly. Incessant exertions are making for a resumption of the war, the plan being to re-equip the armies so as to overrun the whole of France, and reduce it to submission by a savage and relentless campaign.

LONDON, Feb. 6.—Gold is rising rapidly in Paris. The Parisians expect a heavy money exaction.

The election is proceeding with feverish energy and determination. The hatred and opposition to Gambetta is indescribable.

BORDEAUX, Feb. 6.—The demonstration to-day, in favor of the Bordeaux government and disqualifying the Paris decrees, was quite imposing. The prefect read the following declaration from Gambetta:

Faithful to the programme of the nation and of the freedom to arms, as well as to the ballot box, we are now occupied in a council of war, deliberating upon the means of profiting by the armistice.

Cremieux left last night for Paris.

LONDON, Feb. 6.—A complete rupture has taken place between the Paris government and Gambetta.

A restoration of the empire is most probable. It is reported that the Pope has undertaken to assist in the restoration.

HAVANA, Feb. 6.—It is officially announced that in the engagement at Najaza seventy-nine insurgents were killed and fifteen taken prisoners. The Spaniards had two killed and eleven wounded.

Five hundred persons who were identified with the republic have surrendered recently.

HAVANA, Feb. 6.—The schooner Ralph Souder, with machinery, from Philadelphia to Trinidad, went ashore at Cayo Blanco.

KINGSTON, JAMAICA, Feb. 6.—Advices from San Domingo state that Cabral has been driven to the Haytien frontier, and his troops are in bad plight. A fresh attempt has been made at revolution in Hayti, this time by Reklines and the adherents of Salnave, who are reported to be marching on Port au Prince.

LONDON, Feb. 7.—A long conference took place to-day, at the Prussian embassy, between Empress Eugenie and Bernshorff, on the resignation of Gambetta, which, it is believed, indicates the abandonment of all hopes of a republic and makes the restoration of the empire certain.

LONDON, Feb. 8.—Carnot, the commissioner of defense of Normandy, has resigned.

Von Der Tann's army occupies most of Burgundy.

FLORENCE, Feb. 7.—The government insists upon satisfaction, with just demands, from Tunis, and guarantees for the future.

LONDON, Jan. 8.—Odo Russell has been instructed to sustain the French demand for an extension of the armistice. An extension is expected.

The Times, in an editorial on the situation, says the information from Paris indicates a longing for peace.

The News says the Parisians will vote to-day in an entire dependence upon the good faith of the Germans.

ORPHAN HOUSE IN CHINA.

From the Record of the Mississippi Conference.

Whereas, Our missionary in China, the Rev. James W. Lambuth, has erected a building into which he is gathering orphans, so as to have their entire training under his control; and whereas, Those orphans have to be fed and clothed as well as instructed; and whereas, Bro. Lambuth informs us that it will cost $10 a year to feed, clothe and pay the tuition of each orphan; and whereas, Bro. Lambuth desires the Sunday schools to furnish the means to enable him to carry on this enterprise; therefore,

Resolved, That we request the superintendents of our Sunday schools and the pastors to take up a collection in each Sunday school for this purpose during the first quarter, and forward the same to H. H. Montgomery, to be forwarded by him to Bro. Lambuth, and to be by him reported to the secretary of the Parent Board.

LET THE folly of yesterday make thee wise to-day.

REV. W. V. TUDOR.

WASHINGTON CITY, D. C., Jan. 27, 1871.

At a meeting of the official members of Mount Vernon Place Methodist Episcopal Church South, held to-day, Bro. J. W. Barker was called to the chair, and Bro. H. F. Zimmerman appointed secretary, when the following preamble and resolutions were unanimously adopted:

Whereas, The Rev. William V. Tudor, who has served this church with such signal ability and success for the past five years, has notified us of his transfer from the Baltimore to the Louisiana Conference; therefore,

Resolved, 1. That, coming among us at the most critical period of Southern Methodism in this city, when it was deemed disloyal to be a member of that church or in sympathy with it, Bro. Tudor entered upon his ministerial duties, and so prudently and faithfully discharged the same that he very soon secured the respect and esteem of the people; and mainly through his influence and labors, under the blessing of God, our church has been kept and prospered, so that the humble chapel has been succeeded by the commodious and comfortable edifice we now occupy, and the handful of members and friends has increased to a large membership and congregation, who have listened with pleasure and profit to his earnest and godly instructions each Sabbath.

2. That in leaving us Bro. Tudor carries with him our highest respect and esteem as a faithful and eloquent expounder of the word of God, and as a warm and devoted pastor and friend, and our earnest prayers that his life and health may be preserved to the church for many years, and that abundant success may attend him in his new and enlarged field of duty.

3. That while we keenly feel our loss, we congratulate the congregation he is appointed to serve in securing his very valuable services, and unite in commending him to their hearty sympathies and affections.

REV. LEWIS B. WHIPPLE.

Rev. W. G. Veal, writing to the Texas Christian Advocate, announces the death of this well known minister.

With a heart overflowing with sorrow I announce the departure of another preacher from my district. Rev. L. B. Whipple, of Waxahachie station, laid down his armor and passed to the better world, to receive his crown, at ten minutes past twelve last night.

He reached this place with his family on Thursday, the fifth instant, and had all preparation made to preach his first sermon in the station on Sabbath morning, but during the night he was attacked with pneumonia; when morning came he was not able to leave his bed. He had every attention that medical skill and kind friends could bestow, but the cold, contracted while on his trip to Chicago, had taken such deep hold upon his lungs that nothing could arrest the disease.

He bore his great suffering with unusual patience, always thanking God for everything.

A few days before his death he said to me: "I feel that my work is done; I feel that I shall soon pass away, but I am perfectly resigned to the will of my heavenly Father." He died as he had lived, trusting in God. A suitable obituary will be sent to you in due time.

"God's ways are truly past finding out."

Our Conference closed its session at this place on the twenty-first of November. Rev. J. B. Annis was appointed to Reager chapel, and Rev. L. B. Whipple to Waxahachie station, but before either had met his first appointment the Great Shepherd called them from labor on earth to eternal refreshment in heaven. Their families need the prayers of the church.

God grant that these sad bereavements may cause the church to live more godly. W. G. VEAL.

TO-DAY AND TO-MORROW.

BY GERALD MASSEY.

High hopes that burn like stars sublime,
Go down the heavens of freedom;
And true hearts perish in the time
We bitterliest need 'em.
But never sit we down and say,
"There's nothing left but sorrow:"
We walk the Wilderness to-day
The Promised Land to-morrow.

Our Birds of song are silent now;
There are no flowers blooming;
But life burns in the frozen bough,
And freedom's spring is coming;
And freedom's tide comes up alway,
Though we may stand in sorrow;
And on our good bark, outward to-day,
Shall sail again to-morrow!

Through all the long, dread night of years
The people's cry ascendeth,
And earth is wet with blood and tears,
But our meek suffering endeth!
The low shall not forever sway,
The many toil in sorrow;
The powers of hell are strong to-day,
But Christ shall rise to-morrow!

Though hearts break o'er the past, our eyes
With smiling futures glisten;
For lo! a day-burst up the skies
To all our souls and listen!
The world rolls freedom's-ward alway,
And ripens with her sorrow
Keep heart! who bears the cross to-day
Shall wear the crown to-morrow!

Coward, come earnest, still aspire
With energies immortal!
To manful heaven of desire
Our yearning opes a portal!
And though age wearies by the way,
And hearts break in the furrow,
We'll sow the golden grain to-day—
The harvest comes to-morrow!

Lord, by the heroic lives, arising
Like the shearben's steel,
Ready to clash at God's
Of rivalry of labor!
Trample and tolerate it has said aye
Joy suits the cloud of sorrow;
And on the martyr-reign to-day
Breaks victory to-morrow!

LETTER FROM CHINA.

The following interesting letter was received from Bro. Lambuth by the Felicity street Sunday school of New Orleans. It is addressed to the superintendent, W. H. Foster.—EDITOR.

SOOCHOW, CHINA, 85 miles from Shanghai, December 5, 1870.

MY DEAR BRO. FOSTER: Your kind and welcome letter came to hand on the sixth instant, bearing us good news from the dear children in the Sunday schools at New Orleans. Thank those dear children a thousand times for their untiring efforts to help send the gospel of our Lord and Saviour to these heathen children. And also, I beg you to give to dear Sister T. my warmest thanks and heart's best wishes for her noble gift for the support of an orphan girl.

Your letters reached us first, but we expect the funds by the mail of the fourth of January. Sister T.'s letter reached us by the mail of the sixth instant—to which Mrs. Lambuth and myself both intend to reply.

I am glad to say the school of the orphanage is progressing finely.—The boys are learning fast, and I trust are growing better day by day. I feel convinced I can see a change for the better in some of them. The teacher who has never professed Christianity, and indeed did not know what Christianity was until he came to teach this school, is now an applicant for baptism. He studies the sacred Scriptures day and night, says he never heard such remarkable doctrine before, and wonders why the scholars and teachers of China do not accept of it. He says: "I am determined to carry it among all my friends and acquaintances." Being a Chinese physician, as well as a scholar, he has considerable influence, and I trust will do much good. As Philip findeth Nathaniel and brings him to Jesus, so I trust this man will do.

My dear young friends, while I was in the country, three weeks since, trying to preach Christ and him crucified to these people, I met many who heard gladly, and some of them invited me to go to their houses, for they said they were anxious to believe this doctrine, and they wanted their whole family to believe. Some of them never saw a foreigner before, and were very much afraid. My heart was much drawn out in prayer for their conversion, many of whom came to my boat to talk more about the religion of Jesus and to get some books. I met some priests—old men—who are the preachers of a false religion, and deceive all these poor people. They are "blind leaders of the blind." Their hearts were hard and their ears deaf to all that was spoken to them. In one temple the idols are all covered with dust. Some have no eyes, others have no hands and feet, and one I noticed had no head; and yet these priests bow down to them, and induce the people to come and burn incense to such gods. I cannot express to you my feelings when I witnessed such scenes in so beautiful a land as China. Let us pray that the Lord may speedily come and put an end to their blind enthusiasm, which causes thousands to bow down to gods made of wood and stone.

I am now going to tell you of a small Buddhist priest turned out of the temple in rags, to beg and die in the streets, as the old priests thought. Early one morning, just after daylight, our native brother Kyungsau was out walking, when he came to a bridge and found a small Buddhist priest, only twelve years old, clothed in rags and with straw shoes on, sitting on the bridge crying. He was asked why he was there crying, and not in the temple. He said: "The old priest turned me out of the temple, for he said he had not enough to support himself. I went then to an uncle of mine, an old man, and he refused to take me in, for he said he had to work for his daily rice. No one will take me in, because I am a priest, and I must beg." He was then on his way to where there were many beggars living in rags and filth. Bro. Kyungsau then asked him if he would be his boy, and he would try to teach him to be a Christian. He said he would, and so he brought him to the boat. I gave him his breakfast, for he said he had not had any supper. His priest's clothes were taken off, and we had him put on others. But he has no hair on his head, for it was all shaved off when he became a priest. No one will take in a person to live in their house who has become a priest; and so this little boy was turned out to become a beggar, and, it may be, to become worse than a beggar. He said his mother and father were taken off by the rebels when he was a small boy, and he has never heard of them since that time. I have taken him into the orphanage, and will try to teach him to be a Christian. He is a smart and intelligent boy, but full of mischief.

I am happy to say the funds you send are used to help such poor orphan boys in this "land of darkness" and "valley of dry bones," and I hope, under the blessing of God, you may one day see some of these children following the Lord Jesus, who will teach them to become fishers of men and preachers of his blessed gospel to the dying heathen of China. Then cease not to pray to God to bless your efforts and the efforts of the missionaries to the glory of his holy name.

I am writing this while traveling in the country, preaching to these people, and will send it back to Shanghai by the Chinese post, to be mailed, by the United States mail steamer, to you in my own native land. I therefore entrust it into the hands of the heathen, to bear it safely to Shanghai, while I continue to labor among these people.

But before I close I will give you an account of the marriage of our brother Charles K. Marshall, (Sier Whoa,) who is now engaged in the work of saving souls. He was married on the twenty-ninth of November, in the Episcopal church, Shanghai. His bride is a member of that church. They were married on the evening of the twenty-ninth, about candle-light. The church was crowded to overflowing, waiting and all anxious for the arrival of the bride and bridegroom. The ladies were dressed in the richest attire, beautifully embroidered, and trimmed with gold and silver lace. Their heads were covered with jewels, gold and silver ornaments, and small tinkling bells hung around their head-dresses in great profusion, which kept up a continual ringing. The bridegroom came first, and took his seat near the altar, to await the arrival of the bride. She was soon ushered in, confined in a beautiful sedan chair covered with red cloth, and attended by two bridesmaids. The bride was vailed with red silk, so that no one could see her face, and she was led blindfold to the altar, to be given in marriage to a man she never saw. They were married according to the Christian style, and were afterward conducted back in their chairs to the house of a native Christian, who is a preacher in the Episcopal Church. On their arrival they were ushered into the house by the firing off of a good supply of fire-crackers. Quite a number of missionaries and Christian Chinese were present to witness the lifting of the vail; but to our friend and brother, the bridegroom, it was like an electric shock. It was the first time he had ever beheld her face. For a few moments all was silence, and then one and another went forward to congratulate the happy pair and wish them much joy; after which we all partook of the bride's cake. Then leaving our Chinese friends to enjoy themselves, we returned to our homes—not, however, before we all paid a visit to the bride's chamber to see all the presents and the elegant manner in which everything was arranged. The bride is a Christian girl, and is said by all who know her to be worthy of being the wife of a Methodist preacher. It is the custom among the Chinese that the bride is not allowed to do anything for herself for three days. Whatever she eats during that time is put into her mouth by the two bridesmaids. She is not even allowed to speak a single word during the three days. And that is not all—she is not allowed to sleep for three days and nights, except what she can get by leaning her head upon a table or bedstead. From the first day of their marriage, day and night, there is not a moment's peace in the bride's chamber for these three days and nights. All invited guests are allowed to go in at any time, night or day, and make as much noise as they like to prevent either party from sleeping. The feasting is going on all the time in the inner hall, while there is music in the outer hall. They are both at the mercy of those bidden to the feast. It is all over now, and the bride and bridegroom are with me on their way to Soochow, to commence together the work of the Lord. I will send you a photograph of the bridegroom and his bride, which was taken one week after their marriage.

Excuse me for troubling you with so long a letter. I am always glad to hear from you, and I trust you will continue to work and labor for the cause of our blessed Saviour in this heathen land, and that your hearts may be made glad at the conversion of many of these heathen children.

I beg you to pray for my family and myself, and the work in which we are engaged. May the Lord abundantly bless you all!

COUPLE HEAVEN WITH IT.—An aged Christian had passed to rest himself as he trudged along under a heavy load on a warm summer day. An acquaintance accosted him, when a splendid carriage rolled past in which a haughty man rode, whose whole appearance bespoke a life of luxurious ease. "What do you think of the Providence of which you sometimes speak?" said the acquaintance. "You know that is a wicked man, yet he spreads himself like a green bay tree. His eyes stand out with fatness; he is not plagued as other men; while you, believing that all the gold and silver is the Lord's, serving him, and trusting in his providence, are toiling and sweating in your old age, getting little more than bread and water. How can you reconcile this with a just Providence?"

The aged saint looked at the questioner with amazement, and with the greatest earnestness replied: "Couple heaven with it! couple heaven with it, and then?" Yes, that addition sweetens many a bitter cup, and enriches many a poor lot. "For our light affliction, which is but for a moment, worketh for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory; while we look not at the things which are not seen; for the things which are seen are temporal; but the things which are not seen are eternal."—Times of Refreshing.

THE SOUTHERN UNIVERSITY.

MR. EDITOR: Upon a visit to this place I find the University in successful and harmonious operation, and, though in consequence of the depressed financial condition of this section of the country, the number of students is not as great as we had reason to expect at the last commencement, yet the faculty agree in saying that they have never had a more quiet, orderly and studious set of young men in the institution at any time during its history than at this session, or so few failures in lessons or poor recitations. This is a pleasing fact, and augurs the approach of a better era, when our young men shall appreciate education more highly, and determine to fit themselves for any position within their reach, and no longer content themselves with merely knowing how to sell dry goods and groceries, or to plant and cultivate corn and cotton, thus placing themselves where they naturally become "hewers of wood and drawers of water" for those who fill the places of honor and profit in the country.

The general good order that has marked the history of the University, and the success with which students have generally prosecuted their studies while at it, furnish a striking commentary upon the wisdom and advantage of denominational schools. A purer moral atmosphere, a healthier tone of sentiment and stronger inducements to good behavior surround such institutions; the number of pious young men fitting for the work of the ministry, who are in attendance every session, and the number of students from the families of prominent members and friends of the church, who feel a deep interest in the welfare and success of its enterprises, and who impart a portion of their spirit and feeling to their children, help greatly to maintain good order, and strengthen the moral tone that prevails. The University still maintains its high standard of scholarship, for which it has been highly complimented of late in various quarters. Bishop McTyeire lately expressed both his admiration and his wonder at the stand it had maintained amid the general defection of Southern colleges from their former position, under the pressure of superficial and unreasonable views on the part of parents who wish to hurry forward their sons to graduation without insisting upon proper scholarship. Others have expressed the same feeling.

I attended the meeting of the faculty this week, when making up their weekly reports, and was truly gratified at the few delinquencies in any form, and at the unanimous testimony of the members to the good deportment of the students.

Parents seldom make a greater mistake for the welfare of their children, or for their own interests, than when they pass by a good school of their own church, and, attracted by a florid puff of one abroad, send their sons to distant States. It is true that "distance lends enchantment," but while it does this it takes money from the parent, and often defeats the education of the child. Few, indeed, do as well abroad as they would do under better moral surroundings at a church institution nearer home.

It is often the case that the less parents know of a school the more likely they are to patronize it. Of this remark I have seen some striking illustrations. I have known a parent patronize a school for some years without ever seeing the school or teacher. They always receive good circulars, and with these they are content. Of course they will not be as well pleased when they do not get as good ones from other teachers.

It will be a state of things greatly in advance of the present when parents come to see their duty to God and their children in regard to their education. At present the practice seems to be, if retrenchment is thought necessary, to begin with a reduction of contributions to religion, and then pass to the education of their children.

I am glad to find at the University seven young men preparing for the work of the ministry, and also to find that they stand high in the estimation of the students generally for their consistent deportment and piety. Nor are they idle or useless; they have appointments in the adjacent country, besides preaching in the town. At present there is a work of grace in progress, some two miles from the University, under their labors, and souls are coming to Christ. Brethren who attend these meetings speak in the highest terms of the zeal and labors of the young men.

Students are coming in weekly—young men of the right class—bent on getting an education. Steps are being taken to provide for a "mess hall," where young men, who wish to do so, can board themselves much below the price generally paid for board. It is confidently believed that, upon this plan, good substantial board can be had for $10, or less, per month. Let no young man despair of being able to get an education because he is not able to pay his board. We only need the means to make the means to render the University self-supporting, and to make it all its founders desired. And this, in the providence of God, I trust we shall secure from some source.

J. HAMILTON.

DYING WELL.

The Irish correspondent of the Nashville Christian Advocate, Amicus, gives some interesting incidents in connection with this subject:

The statement is often made, "He died well;" and exultation and abounding joy seem to be characteristic of Methodist death beds. It is well to have the conscious presence of Christ with us when we come to die—well to be able to say as we enter the dark valley: "I will fear no evil." I have never yet read of any one in the ranks of so-called "Liberal Christianity" who was in death "more than conqueror." They generally die without any strongly-worded hope. Not so the Christians of all orthodox communions. In death they feel the love of Christ so precious that they often "rejoice with joy unspeakable and full of glory"—often pass away ascribing "victory to the Lamb." While looking over the Minutes of the English Wesleyan Conference, for this year, I thought it might interest and benefit your readers to quote the dying expressions of the ministers who passed away during last year. The list is large—no less than thirty-one died. Isaac Keeling is the first. He was once president of the Conference. He was a sound theologian and a thoughtful preacher. He was strikingly original. Before he died he carefully prepared a volume of sermons for publication. He died in the "quietness and confidence" of faith in Jesus. Charles Locking was a young man of fine culture and much promise. He was taken away suddenly, but not unprepared. Benjamin Field died in Australia, whither he had gone in search of health. One of his last letters says: "All my sympathies, affections and desires are with things spiritual and divine; and I trust, through him who liveth and was dead, and is alive forevermore, I shall find an entrance through the gates into the city." John Lloyd said, a few minutes before he breathed his last:

Happy the souls to Jesus joined,
And saved by grace alone;
Walking in all his ways, they find
Their heaven on earth begun.

Joseph Raynor, after a long and useful career, passed away in the hope of the gospel. William Bird exclaimed before his departure: "Jesus! Jesus! Gracious Saviour! My Saviour! My Jesus!" and again: "Come, Lord Jesus!" Adam Fletcher, during his last illness, testified that Christ was "present and precious as his Saviour;" and John Relph said: "I have nothing to do but to wait! I am ready for my Master;" and shortly after he was taken home. William Smith spoke much of the preciousness of Christ during his last hours; and William Davies, although suddenly called, passed safely away where the righteous forever dwell. Edward Vigis entered into the joy of his Lord in the seventy-fourth year of his age, and forty-third of his ministry; and William Sherman "was not, for God took him," after he had been a faithful preacher of righteousness for thirty-two years. Henry Daniels had peace and trusted in the Lord as the tabernacle was being taken down; and C. B. Ritchie gathered his friends around him before his departure, and said to them: "I am happy! All is well!" Henry Davies said: "God is doing all things well; blessed be his name!" and John Hannah departed in triumph after preaching Christ for forty years. John C. Harrison passed away, saying: "I see Jesus;" and Thomas Moffat Fitzgerald assured his attendants, on the morning before his death, that he was on "the Rock, Christ Jesus;" that "he felt the Saviour precious," and that "the gospel which he had so many years preached to others then sustained him." Some of the last expressions of William S. F. Moss, a returned missionary: "Salvation, happiness, eternal joy! port gained!" and John Collier's spirit passed upward as the words: "I am going to heaven—all is well—my trust is in Christ!" were uttered by his dying lips. Peter McOwan, a mighty man, said as speech had almost failed: "Precious Saviour—my rest!" and William John Hancock assured his friends, just before his eyes opened on the beatific splendors of the New Jerusalem, that "All is well!" and added, "My feet are upon the Rock; I have preached Christ to be the All of man, and such do I find him for me now; everything else is vanity." John Newton exclaimed: "I am as happy as the glorious gospel and the power of God can make me;" and Aquila Barber assured a brother minister, as his end approached, that he found comfort in the words, "peace, trust and full mission." William Exley, throughout a long and painful affliction expressed unfailing confidence in Christ; and John Parkes Haswell ceased to be here without any premonition. John Crawshaw also died suddenly; and Charles Cook Rorke, a most zealous and worthy young man, died too very suddenly, and the people mourned for him "with a great and very sore lamentation." Henri De Jersey was found with his loins girded; and the testimony of Samuel Rowe was a consistent life devoted to the service of God and the interests of the Christian church. James Tidyman desired to depart and to be with Christ, and his desire was granted. These all have obtained the promises, and entered the rest of heaven.

OUR SUBSTITUTE.—Address by the late Sir James Simpson: A friend who lately came from Paris told me of an English groom there, a very careless old man, who had during a severe illness been made to feel that he was a sinner. He dared not die as he was. The clergyman whom he sent for got tired of visiting him, having told him all he himself then knew of the way of salvation. But one Sunday afternoon the groom's daughter waited in the vestry after church, saying:

"You must come once more, sir; I cannot see my father again without you."

"I can tell him nothing new," said the preacher; "but I may take the sermon I have been preaching, and read it to him."

The dying man lay, as before, in anguish, thinking of his sins, and whither they must carry him. "My friend, I have come to read you the sermon I have just preached. First, I shall tell you the text: He was wounded for our transgressions. Now I shall read."

"Hold!" said the dying man; "I have it! read no more; he was wounded for my transgressions." Soon after he died, rejoicing in Christ's righteousness.

When I heard the story I remembered Archimedes running through the streets of Syracuse straight from the bath where he had found out, in bathing, the secret of testing whether the king's crown had or had not been alloyed by the goldsmith in making it. And as he ran he cried: "I have found it! I have found it!"

Poor philosopher! you had only found out a new principle in science. Happy groom, you have found in Jesus Christ a crown for your immortal soul!

The clergyman who visited the dying groom was thus led to seek and find salvation.—British Messenger.

A LOVING HEART and a pleasant countenance are commodities which a man should never fail to take home with him. They will best season his food and soften his pillow. It were a great thing for a man that his wife and children could truly say of him: "He never brought a frown or unhappiness across the threshold."

EDWARD C. DELEVAN, ESQ., long known as a leader among temperance reformers, died at his residence in Schenectady, New York, January 8, aged seventy-eight years.

A FIRM FAITH is the best theology; a good life the best philosophy; a clear conscience the best law; honesty the best policy; and temperance the best physic.

LISTENING.—Were we as eloquent as angels, yet should we please some men, some women and some children much more by listening than by talking.—Colton.

THE following sentence of only thirty-four letters contains all the letters in the alphabet: "John quickly extemporized five tow bags."

BEAUTIFUL BANDS.

BY AGNES NESMIT.

It is not fear nor coming wrath
That drives my thoughts above,
But gentle breathings on my soul—
Beautiful bands of love.

In pity's eye the dewy tear
Doth sweet affection prove;
And moves me by its tenderness—
Beautiful band of love.

His matchless loving kindness
Lights up life's dreary way;
And through the dark and stormy night
I view the coming day.

That sweet, sweet word, long-suffering,
Is what I rest upon,
When bowed by guilt and misery,
And Hope has scarce a dawn.

With solemn rapture I adore
The voiceless powers which move
My heart to seek the promised rest—
Beautiful bands of love.

CITY MISSIONS.

The proceedings at St. Louis on the evening devoted to city missions were of such interest that we give them in full, as published in the St. Louis Christian Advocate of the twenty-eighth ultimo.

The topic for consideration on Tuesday night was city missions—the practical result proposed being the inauguration of city missionary work.

The meeting was opened with singing and prayer, conducted by Rev. Horace Brown, of the Missouri Conference, one of the pioneer preachers of the West, and since 1844 or 1845 connected with the work of the itinerant ministry in this State.

The chairman called Bishop H. N. McTyeire to preside over the meeting for the evening.

Rev. Robert A. Young, D. D., referred to in another column in his relations to our Methodism as one of its former pastors, was present also as a commissioner from the Parent Board of Missions to bear its salutations to the church in St Louis. He was accordingly introduced to the audience in this capacity.

He said that it was his pleasing duty to bear and to present to the church in St. Louis on this occasion the salutations of the Parent Board of Missions of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, which had been invited to attend as guests of the church at this semi-centenary celebration. Just as the invitations arrived in Nashville from the committee here the president of the Mission Board called them together, and as it was not possible for the board to come as a body, it was their pleasure to depute one of their members to bear those salutations to the church here. It pleased them to send him, and he could assure them that they could have sent him on no business that would please him better, and to no place that he would like to visit more than to this scene of his labors more than fifteen years ago. We represent a mission church, he said. When John Wesley and George Whitefield commenced to preach out of doors, in the city of London, it was nothing more nor less than the commencement of a great missionary movement. Isaac Taylor, a Christian philosopher and a member of the English Established Church, said that the Protestant Church was indebted to Methodism for the inauguration and progress of modern missions, both domestic and foreign, the latter under the labors of Dr. Coke, who was ordained first Bishop and commenced to organize the Methodist Episcopal Church in America. As early as 1789 a board of missions was established by the Wesleyan Methodists. At the very last Conference John Wesley attended and presided over a committee of nine was appointed, of whom Dr. Coke was the chairman. The modern movement on the subject of missions must be dated no further back than the origin of Methodism, and no further back than 1790. The Methodist Episcopal Church was a great missionary body from the beginning. They arrived here from the old countries and they labored on for many years. It was not till the year 1819 that the Board of Missions of the Methodist Episcopal Church was organized. Dr. Bangs, of the city of New York, agitated the subject until the by-laws and constitution were written for the society. A large meeting was held and a missionary society formed. No sooner had the church been divided, in 1844, than the Parent Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church South was formed, and has been striving to send the gospel to the destitute portions of this country, the Germans, and the Indians of the far West, and the Mongolians of China. He had come from its Board of Missions to bear salutations, and as the topic of the evening was that of city missions, it afforded him very great pleasure to yield the platform to Bishop Keener, who would give an address on "Christian Giving in connection with Christian Missions."

Bishop J. C. Keener did not propose to discuss the particular subject of city missions, but to elucidate some thoughts he had pondered and matured in reference to what might be termed the system of ways and means under the New Testament dispensation in providing the material resources for the propagation of the gospel. He introduced the subject pleasantly and pertinently, saying that he proposed to begin where the meeting left off last evening. That was with the name of that very illustrious and important personage, Jesse Walker. He had supposed that his name was merely connected with the occasion as the instrument under God of the introduction of Methodism into St. Louis, and not until he had listened to the speech of his Brother Hogan did he understand that Father Walker's history here had a much higher significance. He was in himself the very embodiment of the spirit of the New Testament method and system of Christianity. He took Jesse Walker and his cart load of meal, with which he came to this locality, to be the type and symbol of the whole Christian Church.

The address of the Bishop contained new views, which were discussed with great originality and force of method. They arrested the attention of the entire audience, and have made a profound impression. The central thought was that Christian giving is a special, and, if we may so speak, a superadded grace in religion—the grace of liberality. Material resources, as well as spiritual forces, are necessary to accomplish the destiny of the gospel. In behalf of this grand and paramount interest of the world's history, religion subsidizes the wealth of the world. To this end of an universal and all-comprehending appropriation of property for such an use the Holy Spirit must have had a specific plan in its methods of operation, which the speaker declared to be as stated—the production in its mighty workings upon the soul of the believer of a distinct and superior grace. Let it be known in the modern church as the Macedonian grace, as the Bishop's view is founded chiefly on the words of Paul concerning the liberality of the Macedonian Christians. Here, therefore, is a method of both the assessment and collection of the revenues of Christ's kingdom. These views were variously and most strikingly illustrated and enforced. We cannot in this connection undertake to sketch the argument. This may be attempted hereafter. We avail ourselves of hints of some leading thoughts contained in the following brief newspaper report of the address:

For a man to do all he can is sometimes to perform far more than he expects to accomplish, and as long as Christianity works by means it must use both material and spiritual forces.

There was a time when the genius of the world was laid at the feet of religion. It is so in the pagan countries to-day. The religious sentiment naturally subsidizes all the wealth and power in the world, and the wealth of the world properly belongs to the church.

When Christ came into the world he gave men an opportunity to increase their ingot of gold into ten thousand times its value. But at the present time the church heaps up its wealth for nothing but the folly of saying it has it.

The New Testament system teaches that it is necessary to give all. It gave new uses for money. Christ in the sermon on the mount has an extended passage on the subject. John the Baptist told a man if he had two coats to give one to the poor, and in the New Testament there is a demand for all the wealth the Christian world possesses. But with all the demand there were but few words in the New Testament about it, as if the Holy Spirit refrained from expressing such an idea in the letter.

Paul said to the Macedonians: Your zeal has provoked many; you abound in many things; see to it that you abound in this also, the "riches of liberality."

There was a great reason for this. It was of the highest importance for men to understand that by faith alone the pardon came, but after that they must be justified by works. The two were designedly separated, so that men might not confuse them. Now, when a man is struggling on, and wanting to be made perfect, then the Holy Spirit shows him a grace that he does not have—the spirit of liberality.

God had made us an eternal tax upon himself in giving us light, and has spread out before us the beauties of the universe, and it is impossible to fully grasp the magnitude of his gifts. It is utterly impossible to convey to men any conception of the greatness of the gift of the Son of God.

In regard to motives for giving, some gave from motives of justice; others from fear and from the principle of obedience to God's law. The greatest liberality, like love, finds its reward in its own expression. The spirit that animated the New Testament church in the first century of its history is lost. There was money enough for every object but the church, and covetousness, Judas-like, had almost betrayed the church into the hands of the adversary.

The command of the apostle was to give bountifully; not largely, but proportionately to our means. The gospel was intended to be preached to the poor, and small amounts were all they could afford to give, and in this particular the Catholic Church is peculiarly successful, appropriating the small gifts of the many.

Remember, he said, you can get as much from the Holy Spirit, if you give in proportion to your means, as a rich man with his gifts of thousands. We are to recognize the truth that liberality is a special grace. There is great philosophy about the erection of the pyramids. They were, in his opinion, religious offerings of the natives who built them. They were made of red granite, and when polished, with the sun shining on them, stood a column of fire. What a tremendous act of worship this was. If men now were animated by the same spirit, what would not be accomplished?

At the close of the address the Bishop called upon the church in this city to contribute in large amounts, accordingly as God had given them abundant means, to the various memorial objects proposed. An interchange of views occurred in regard to specific measures to be taken in furtherance of the objects contemplated, which, as will be observed from the report of the proceedings of the following evening, led to decisive action and remarkable results. It will not be invidious to say that the Bishop's masterly argument decided the fact and measure of the giving which has made up the memorial offerings.

No Time.—A man of business was so engrossed with his cares that he would not rest even on the Sabbath. Half of that day he spent with his clerk over his accounts; the other half in a ride into the country. Monday morning found him unrefreshed, but still driving on after the world as fast as ever.

"Have you heard of the death of Mr. D———?" asked one of him at breakfast. "Ah, no; is he dead? Well it is very different with me; I am so engaged in business that I could not find time to die." Soon after, having passed into another room, he fell dead on the floor. He must take time at last. There was no returning to his farm or his merchandise. His business he left behind him in the twinkling of an eye. But the great work of life was undone.

"I have not time" is the common excuse of men in busy life, when urged to think of eternity. But they must take time when sickness comes, when death knocks, then when it is too late.—American Messenger.

Two in Heaven.—"You have two children," said I.

"I have four," was the reply; "two on earth, two in heaven."

There spoke the mother. Still hers! Only "gone before!" Still remembered, loved and cherished by the hearth and at the board; their successors draw life from the same faithful breast where their dying heads were pillowed.

"Two in heaven!" Safely housed from storm and tempest; no sickness there, nor weary feet. By the green pastures, tended by the Good Shepherd, linger the little lambs of the heavenly fold.

"Two in heaven!" Earth less attractive! Eternity nearer! Invisible cords, drawing the natural soul upward. "Still, small voices," ever whispering "Come!" to the world-weary spirit.

"Two in heaven!" Mother of angels, walk softly! Keep thy spirit free from earth-taint; so shalt thou "go to them," though "they may not return to thee."

Efficacy of Ordinances.—Commenting on Mr. Beecher's remark about the repetition of baptism, the German Reformed Messenger tells of an old lady who followed up an Episcopal bishop, as he traveled on errands of confirmation through his diocese, and who was confirmed several times before she was detected. She wished the ordinance repeated, because she had understood it was "good for the rheumatism."

The business men at Davenport are poetical geniuses. One of them has out the following literary gem as a sign:

"Here lives a man who never refuses
To mend all sorts of boots and shooses."

What the sun is to nature, what God is to the stricken heart which knows how to lean upon him, are cheerful persons in the house and by the wayside.

The credit that is got by a lie only lasts till the truth comes out.

STANDING TREAT.

No American custom causes more genuine surprise and amusement among the traveling foreigners than that which is known in our saloons as "treating"—consisting in the entertainment of two or more with refreshments, for which one volunteers to pay. It is a pure Americanism; all over the republic it is as common as in Europe it is unknown. There is probably no minute of any day in the year when two or three hundred citizens of Chicago are not guzzling something stronger than water at somebody else's expense.

The casual meeting of two men who have never exchanged a word together is a signal for both instantly to exclaim: "Come, let's have something!" and for both to dive down into the nearest subterranean cavity below the sidewalk. The one who spoke first usually insists upon "paying the shot"—the word "shot" being a metaphorical reference to the deadly character of the contents usually taken into the stomach. If two old friends meet, the regular thing to say first is: "Let's drink to old times;" and the resident must invariably "treat" the stranger. If a man be well acquainted it is considered the princely thing to seize upon all his acquaintances as often as possible, take them to the saloon, and give them a complicated stand-up drink at the bar.

If there is anything absurder than this habit, we are unable to put our finger on it. Men do not always "treat" one another to car tickets because they happen to meet on the same seat. We never saw a man take out his pocket-book on encountering an acquaintance, and say: "Ah, George! Delighted to see you! Do take a few postage stamps! It's my treat!" Do men have a mania for paying each other's board bills? And is drinking together more "social" than eating together or sleeping together?

A traveler may go all over the continent of Europe, of Asia and of Africa, without seeing any man except a Yankee offer to "treat;" and the Frenchmen are quite social enough, but when they turn into a café to sip their wine or brandied coffee together, each man pays for his own. When two Germans, long separated, meet, they will be very likely to embrace, and then to turn into an adjacent beer cellar, sit down and drink lager and eat pretzels and chat, but when they part again each man settles his own score independently. So in Italy. The Italians are proverbially merry and generous, but each man pays for his own wine, maccaróni and cigars. They never go into each other's pocket-book in the sacred name of friendship. They would as soon think of transferring to each other their washerwoman's bills.

The preposterous fashion of "treating" is responsible for the terrible drunkenness in America. There would be as little need of temperance societies and little work for the Good Templars as there is in Germany, France and Italy, if this pernicious and insidious habit was abolished. It is, take it all in all, the most ridiculous, the most unreasonable and the most pestilent custom that ever laid its tyrannical hand on civilized human beings.—Chicago Post.

The Gospel in Russia.—During the visit of the allied sovereigns to England, in 1814, the Czar Alexander and the Rev. Leigh Richmond met in a singular way. Mr. Richmond was in the dockyard at Portsmouth, and had ascended a lofty tower, where he was viewing surrounding objects, telescope in hand. The Emperor and his attendants unexpectedly came to the spot. Mr. Richmond knew at once who it was, and was on the point of withdrawing, but the Emperor courteously prevented him, saying: "Perhaps, sir, you are acquainted with the points of view before us?" Mr. Richmond assured him he well knew every spot in the neighborhood; and drawing out his telescope, directed the eye of the Emperor to the different objects worthy of notice. After a long and interesting conversation with his majesty, before they separated, Mr. Richmond said: "I avail myself of this opportunity to thank your imperial majesty, in my own name, and in that of all the friends of the Bible Society in England, for the distinguished patronage and support that your majesty has shown to the same cause in Russia." The Emperor obligingly replied: "Sir, my thanks are rather due to your country, and to the friends of the cause; for had it not been for your example we should have had no Bible Society in Russia."

Earth may be grateful that her widest empire save our own, and the mightiest power in Europe, as we believe, is not Catholic, nor are its subjects excluded from reading the blessed Bible.

A rabid mind continually struggles, a feeble one limps, but a great mind selects the surest points, and upon these it stands.

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

About thirty persons have recently joined the First Baptist church in Richmond.

One-third of the Episcopal clergy in the United States changed their charges during the past year.

The Unita Cattolica now appears with a black border, and promises not to go out of mourning till the Pope shall have his own again.

The Sultan of Turkey has given Pope Pius notice that his Armenian subjects can no longer recognize him as the head of the church.

It is estimated that at least half a million copies of the Bible have been circulated in France and Germany since the beginning of the war.

Some one says the principal errors of popery are "the church instead of the word of God, the Virgin instead of the Son of God, the sacraments instead of the Spirit of God."

A Swedish preacher out West, who studied thirteen years at different colleges, is serving a congregation at $350 a year. He says his wife can earn twice as much by sewing as he can by preaching.

The German Methodists have two large weekly papers. The Evangelists publish their Botschafter in Cleveland, and the Episcopals their Apologete in Cincinnati, and each of them numbers over fifteen thousand subscribers.

Revival.—The church column of the Religious Telescope, of January 11 and 18, records over twelve hundred accessions to the United Brethren Church in various parts of Ohio, Pennsylvania, Indiana, Illinois, Virginia and Iowa.

Bishop Doane, of Albany, has prepared a special form of prayer for rain, to be used by the Episcopal churches of his diocese. The prayer book has a form to be used on the occasion of a summer drought, but none for a drought occurring in winter.

Active measures are being taken for establishing a university college in Wales. The Queen's Hotel at Abrystwith has been purchased for the purpose, and as soon as $150,000 have been raised it is proposed to apply to the government for assistance.

Dr. Pusey, it is said, is founding a new community of Anglican nuns, whose dress is to be entirely of white. Protestant sisterhoods, such as the Kaiserwerth Deaconesses, are very flourishing in Germany, and are gaining in public favor both in England and America.

St. Alphonsus Roman Catholic church, Windsor, Ontario, has just distributed the prizes in a grand lottery of seven thousand shares, in which each purchaser had a lithograph of Pope Pius, and prizes varying in value from $500 in gold to jewelry of a few dollars' value were distributed.

Out of one hundred and eighty-seven confirmations since 1855, in the Protestant Episcopal church of St Paul's, Cincinnati, eighty-five, or more than the entire number of confirmations during the preceding six years, were converts from the Roman Catholics, Presbyterians, Congregationalists, Methodists and Baptists.

According to the statistics of the Roman Catholic communion in Great Britain, there are fifteen Roman Catholic bishops in England and Wales, and four in Scotland. The priests serving missions and acting as chaplains to religious communities are one thousand five hundred and fifty-one in England, and two hundred and seven in Scotland.

Paper Church.—There is a papier maché church actually existing near Bergen, Germany, which can contain nearly one thousand persons. It is circular within, octagonal without. The relieves outside and statues within, the roof, the ceiling, the Corinthian capitals, are all papier maché, rendered water-proof by a saturation in vitriol, lime water, whey or the white of eggs.

While American Christians are pledging the gospel to Japan, the government there is making fresh efforts to exclude and extinguish its light. Buddhist priests have been sent from the capital everywhere to oppose it. And this act has been followed up by another, requiring every man to present himself for registration and worship at the heathen temples. Yet "Christians there are not few."

The New York State Baptist Convention has defined a "regular Baptist church" as "one which is Congregational in polity; Calvinistic in substance of doctrine; which maintains the immersion of believers as the initiatory right of a visible church; and restricts the Lord's Supper as an ordinance of the church to those who have been thus initiated into a body of baptized believers, and become subject to their discipline."

The Wesleyans of Canada last year sustained worship in one hundred and eighty-one missionary districts, six being among the settlers of British Columbia and Red river, twenty-seven among the Indians of Saskatchewan and Hudson's Bay, one hundred and forty among the English-speaking towns of Canada, and four each among the French of Quebec and the Germans of Ontario. Their missionary receipts of last year were $74,930.

The Romish Bishop of Montreal has received a communication from one hundred and eighteen French Canadians, in which, after informing him that God has opened their eyes to the errors of their church, and given them grace to enable them to abandon them, they say: "Be good enough, therefore, to consider us no longer belonging to the Church of Rome, for we have decided to leave the religion of the Pope, in order to follow Jesus Christ, and to serve him alone."

The Right Starting Point for a Revival.—An English paper says that when the daily noon prayer meeting was started in London everybody began praying for the whole world. About the second week the prayers began to be limited, in the main, to Europe; the third week to England; the fourth to London; and about the fifth week the burden of prayer began to be: "O Lord! have mercy on me; break up the fallow ground of my soul; give me a broken heart." And then, and not till then, God's Spirit came down upon the meetings in power.

Annual Meeting of the Sunday School Union.—The annual meeting of the Sunday-School Union of the Methodist Episcopal Church was held in the Mission Board room, 805 Broadway, on Wednesday afternoon, eleventh ultimo. Mr. John Truslow, first vice president elect, occupied the chair. Prayer was offered by Rev. Dr. M. DeC. Crawford. In the absence of Dr. Vincent, not yet returned from his Southern trip, no abstract from the annual report was presented. The following interesting figures, however, were announced: Number of Sunday schools in connection with the Union, 16,912, an increase over the preceding year of 518; teachers and officers, 189,112, an increase of 4,816; scholars, 1,221,393, an increase of 11,409. The report of the treasurer, Mr. S. J. Goodenough, showed a total of receipts during the year of over $23,000, an increase of nearly $1,000. These figures include only the contributions made to the Department of Benevolence; the receipts from the sale of books, periodicals and other publications go into the hands of the book agents, and are included in their annual report. The receipts for benevolence were the largest ever contributed in a single year.—New York Christian Advocate.

The Hindoos.—The need of the gospel's civilizing and humanizing influences to reform the Hindoos, and drive away the practice of the most shocking barbarities in the treatment as well of the dead as the living, is set forth by Bishop Kingsley, in a recent letter, as follows:

The Hindoos burn their dead. At first it seems very shocking to go along the shores of the Ganges, and see a human body on a pile of wood being consumed. And what is still more shocking is to see the nearest male relative break the skull of his father, or other relation, as the case may be, in order to let the spirit out. As fuel is very expensive in most parts of India the poor are not able to consume the bodies of their relations, and so, after the body is charred a little, they throw it into the Ganges. Great numbers of bodies are thus found floating down the stream. Others, yet poorer, throw the bodies of their relatives into the river, without any attempt at burning. These sights, at length, by their commonness, cease to make any deep impression. The Parsees, or fire worshipers, have another method of disposing of their dead. At Bombay there is a hill in the suburbs of the town, called Malabar Hill. On this hill is the "Tower of Silence," which is a huge well, with high surrounding walls. By the looks of the affair at two hundred yards distance—for strangers are not allowed within the inclosure devoted to this purpose—I should think the well may be fifty feet or more in diameter. Over this well is placed an iron grate, and the bodies of the dead are laid on this grate, and exposed for food for vultures. I visited the ground early in the morning, in company with Dr. Vaugh and his wife. Great numbers of vultures stay round the place, and depend for their daily food upon the dead bodies thus placed upon the iron grate. I should think we saw as many as fifty of these unclean birds, some of them of enormous size. They appeared to have gorged themselves with human flesh, and were lazily waiting for an appetite for another meal. This method of disposing of the dead seems much more shocking than that of consuming the body with fire.

God hath two dwelling places—the highest heavens and the lowest hearts; that is the habitation of his glory; this of his grace.

To SUBSCRIBERS.—Any person wishing to subscribe for this paper can do so by paying the Methodist preacher in the circuit, and forwarding to us his receipt for $3, with the address of the subscriber specified, stating Post Office, State, Circuit and Conference. The receipt ought to be taken in duplicate.

N. B.—Agents are requested, where practicable, to invest and remit funds in a POST OFFICE ORDER, DRAFT, or by EXPRESS. If this cannot be done, REGISTER the letter at our expense.

When money is forwarded in either of the above methods we will be responsible for it, but not otherwise.

POST OFFICES.

As changes are being made in the post offices of the preachers, they will greatly oblige us by furnishing their addresses as early as possible. Don't forget to give the post office from which your paper is to be changed, as well as that to which it is to be sent.

OUR PUBLISHING AGENT.

We are glad to announce that the Publishing Committee, at its recent meeting, have arranged with Rev. Robert J. Harp to take charge of the business department of the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE. Bro. Harp assumes the onerous duties of this position at the earnest desire and solicitation of the editor and the Publishing Committee, who regard him as the man for the place, and bespeak for him the hearty co-operation of all the agents and friends of the paper. Hereafter all communications of a BUSINESS NATURE should be addressed to Rev. R. J. Harp, 112 Camp street, New Orleans. All communications for the columns of the paper should be addressed, as heretofore, to Rev. Linus Parker.

Push the Canvass for Subscribers.

Now is the time to urge the claims of the ADVOCATE. The earlier the better; and let the aim of every preacher be to place a copy in every Methodist family in his charge, besides extending the circulation among those who are not members of the church. In addition to the religious matter, which we mean shall always be in the ascendant, we give the current news, price current, and considerable space to science and agriculture. Our Sunday morning congregations should be addressed on this interest. It is a time and opportunity to call for subscribers, and the pastor who urges the matter earnestly will not fail to gain some. We are well convinced that the field is but partially explored, and that a little enthusiasm, a trifle of ADVOCATE on the brain and on the heart too, will swell our lists astonishingly. Thanks to the brethren for what they have done. May they be abundantly blessed and prospered in all their work as pastors and ministers of Christ. It shall be our aim to second and aid them in their arduous and glorious toil.

OUR ACKNOWLEDGMENTS are due to Thomas W. Conway, State superintendent of public education in Louisiana, for a copy of his annual report to the General Assembly. It is a bulky pamphlet of over two hundred pages, and contains a large amount of information concerning our public schools.

THE DENIAL OF SELF.

This is the first element of discipleship, and one of the profoundest of religious principles. Self has been, to the unconverted, the center of all. A powerful centripetal force draws everything in this direction. An all-engulfing selfishness governs the natural man. The first, the last, the only thought is self. If somewhat modified and thrown out from his own person by natural affection, it is selfishness still moving in an orbit which knows no other center. There is no higher law than his own will, he turns "to his own way," and self is his only law. It is self in its rebellion against God that must be denied. Where it exalts and opposes itself against the divine authority, where it seeks to follow the bent and purposes of the carnal mind, where it presumes to dictate to infinite wisdom, it must be denied. A man must disown himself in order that he may come under the Saviour's yoke; he must break off all connections with every other master that Christ may be received and confessed as his Lord. In putting off the old man with his deeds, he puts on the Lord Jesus Christ. Instead of obeying self, living to himself and being full of himself, he is now full of Christ; imaginations and every high thing are cast down, "bringing into captivity every thought to the obedience of Christ."

The soul divested of self-will, and the spirit of revolt against the divine authority revolves in a new sphere, and is drawn to Christ as the supreme and all-controlling good. This act and state of self-denial leads, of course, to the renunciation of sin, and the disregard of all personal considerations in the path of duty. Ease, honor, liberty and life itself will be counted but loss for the excellency of the knowledge of Christ. The fountain of all, however, is in the comprehensible principle, by virtue of which a man denies himself, disowns himself, and realizes that he is the absolute property of God. Here is the beginning of humility, which forbids him "to think of himself more highly than he ought to think," and which divests him of the intolerable egotism and conceit which sprout so rankly in the soil of the unregenerate heart. A life of unexceptionable temperance and morality may be wholly selfish. The anchorite and the extremest ascetic in religion may live to self as completely as the veriest voluptuary in the world. Saint Simmeon Stylites, on his pillar, with his fastings and exposure to the rigors of the seasons, was as full of himself as any of the pleasure-loving throng who wondered at his almost supernatural endurance.

To realize the self-denial of the gospel it is not needful to seek the occasion nor to make it. It is himself that the believer denies, and in this renunciation every possible thing is embraced. It is not a fragment of appetite or of ambition that is sacrificed here and there, nor is it the mere fringes and periphery of the life's garment which are trimmed and shorn now and then. Christ strikes more profoundly and more comprehensively. He does not begin by lopping off the branches, but the ax is laid at the root of the tree. "If any man will come after me let him deny himself." The poor body may be starved and lacerated, and the soul remain supremely selfish. Men may stand on pillars, live in caves, wear sackcloth, shut themselves up in cells, fare abstemiously, and yet know nothing of self-renunciation. A true Christian life will touch the point of sacrifice in every direction, simply because the denial of self underlies all. It is not so much in isolated instances and in partial phases of duty, but in the whole of life's purposes and achievements. It will appear in the government of appetites, in the abandonment of ease and pleasure, in giving, in working for God. The stream will rise to the altitude of its source, and the disowning of self and the renunciation of self will enter into every performance. While a man may submit to flagellation till the flesh drops from his bones, and even give his body to be burned, and yet know nothing of true self-denial, it is not possible for him to possess it, and fail to exhibit it in every breath and pulsation of his being.

The trouble should not be to find wherein we deny ourselves, but rather wherein we do not. And yet there are probably multitudes of professed Christians to whom this matter of self-denial is but little more than a gospel fiction. They are following their ease and pleasure. Their giving is measured by their convenience; their work in the church never goes beyond what is perfectly agreeable. They lay up treasure on earth; they indulge in the fashionable pleasures of the world. To give something, to do little, and to keep within the ordinary bounds of continence and sobriety is the measure of their devotion. There are those whose highest conception of this principle is exhibited in refraining from sinful appetites, and in observing the outward duties of the religious profession. To be crucified with Christ, to endure hardness as a good soldiers, and to bring their entire practice up to the measure of this denial of self is beyond their thought.

Thousands are selfish, sensuous, even voluptuous in their religion. A comfortable place in the church, where the little work that is done is done by others, and where entertaining sermons, inspiring music and good society contribute to the agreeableness of worship, is the chief and crowning object. Self-indulgence comes not only in worldly but also in religious forms, and spreads its enervating spell over the church. The softness, shameful effeminacy and cowardice of thus living to self is rebuked by the Master's call to self-denial. If Christians are to save themselves they must have this salt of the religious life in themselves; and if the church is to save the world, her members must gird themselves for the great work by denying themselves, and by becoming imbued with the constraining love of Christ, "that they which live should not henceforth live unto themselves, but unto him which died for them and rose again."

THE DEPOSITORY.

We have met with several visitors to the Depository this winter, who were not before aware that our church possessed so large and elegant a book store in New Orleans. We call the special attention of our readers, both in the city and country, to the fact that THE SOUTHERN METHODIST DEPOSITORY, No. 112 CAMP STREET, NEW ORLEANS, IS ONE OF THE LARGEST AND BEST APPOINTED BOOK STORES IN THE SOUTHWEST! The publications of our church are kept, and are sold at Nashville prices. Besides these, there is a good stock of standard, religious and literary works, commentaries, English classics and the newest and best books of the day. In addition, there is a full supply of school books, stationery, and everything usually sold by booksellers and stationers. Pens, gold and steel, writing paper, ink, portable desks, blank books, letter presses and other articles, too numerous to mention, are to be found on the shelves and in the show cases of the establishment. The business of the Depository is conducted for no private gain to any one. The profits inure to the publishing interests of the church, and those who patronize the house are contributing to the spread of a sound religious literature. Why should not our merchants and business men give their own enterprise the preference in their demands for stationery, school books and other things in this line of business? Do our people call first at our Depository when seeking for books or stationery? We need not say that they ought to do it. Their wants can be supplied here as well as anywhere else, and they will at the same time aid a most important enterprise of the church. The business of the Depository may be vastly increased if our friends will take a little pains to influence trade in its behalf. They are not asked to favor this church interest by paying more for their goods than they will cost at other establishments. Purchases can be made on as good terms as at any other house in the city, and often at lower rates. We would earnestly exhort our people to visit the Depository, look over the attractive display of goods, get catalogues, and make it a matter of conscience to make their purchases here. Persons at a distance ordering books and stationery, or catalogues, should address the agent, Rev. R. J. Harp, 112 Camp street, New Orleans.

Death of Rev. Wm. G. McGaughey.

A member of the Louisiana Conference has fallen thus early in the year. Bro. McGaughey was present at our Conference, in this city, the first week in January, and appeared to be in good health and spirits. A few days after his return home he was called to his reward on high. Bro. McGaughey, we believe, came to Louisiana from Holly Springs, Mississippi. He was a local preacher in elder's orders when admitted on trial by the Louisiana Conference, at its session in Bastrop, December, 1855. His appointment for that year was Swan Lake; for the following year Swan Lake and Pecan Grove. In 1858 he was appointed to Lake Providence; in 1859 and 1860 to Carroll; in 1861 and 1862 to Tensas and Elizabeth chapel; in 1863 to Tensas mission; in 1864 to Wesley, Tensas and Jordan chapel; in 1865 and 1866 to the Tensas district; in 1867, 1868 and 1869 to the Lake Providence district; in 1870 to Carroll circuit. His last appointment, received but sixteen days before his death, was to Lake Providence. Brother McGaughey had been among us a traveling preacher for nearly sixteen years. He was a very efficient and faithful laborer in the vineyard, and a good preacher. Rev. James E. Bradley, writing from Floyd, Louisiana, gives us the only particulars we have received of his sickness and death. Brother Bradley's communication is as follows:

Rev. William G. McGaughey, who went with us to the Conference, is no more!

He died of pneumonia on Thursday, January 26, at six P. M.

He started home from Conference full of hope, having enjoyed the Conference session unusually well. He reached there on the fifteenth ultimo, apparently in the enjoyment of fine health and spirits; was attacked on Tuesday, the seventeenth ultimo, and although he had the best medical attention that the parish affords, and the best nursing by the loved ones at home, and friends, yet he sank gradually, and breathed his last at the above mentioned time.

His death is universally regretted in this part of the State. His friends are numerous, and they all utter the same thing.

He died as a Christian minister should die—without a fear.

DEATH OF SISTER KINNEAR.

Bro. Godfrey, in the following communication, announces the death of this good woman. She was the relict of Rev. David Kinnear, and was a worthy companion and helpmeet to that most sainted man of God. We join Bro. Godfrey in expressing the hope that Bishop Keener will furnish a suitable memoir for our columns.

JACKSON, Jan. 28, 1871.

MR. EDITOR: We have just returned from the newly-filled grave of our beloved and revered sister, ELIZABETH KINNEAR, of this place. This true woman of God, and faithful servant of Christ and of his church, died yesterday, January 27, at four o'clock P. M. Her demise was triumphant, and in sweet peace and brightness. Her last words to her pastor were: "All is bright; I see no clouds."

I give this simple notice in the hope that Bishop Keener will write a more extended memorial of Sister Kinnear. He knows her history.

Yours truly,

JAS. A. GODFREY.

NEW ORLEANS NATIONAL BANK.—The advertisement of this new banking institution appears in this week's paper. The officers and directors are among our best known citizens, and their names are a sufficient guarantee of the merits and success of this new enterprise. We notice with special satisfaction that Mr. Alexander Wheless is president, J. N. Boadles is vice president, and that Richard Jones is cashier. We have no doubt that the gentlemen connected with the bank will command the confidence of the entire community, and that eminent success waits upon the undertaking.

GOSPEL EXPEDIENTS.

The range of them is a question upon which the church is divided. St. Paul says: "I am made all things to all men, that I might by all means gain some."

Some have contended that a rigid and exclusive intolerance of all expedients and policies fashioned after the world, for the furtherance of the gospel, are to be rejected. These are after the "straightest sect" sticklers for the law, and Pharisees of the strictest mold; while the opposite class contend that the margin of Christian morals is broad, and that all expedients should be used to accomplish a good end. "The end sanctifies the means" is a trite adage, and has been the conscience-stultifier of many an unwary soul who has invested in a lottery ticket, or drove a bargain at a gift enterprise establishment. Perhaps in this, as in all things else, "truth lies between the two extremes." The religion of Jesus is adjusted to our condition, socially, morally and spiritually. While it defines clearly and maintains strictly the delicate line of sin in every direction, it provides methods to preserve the integrity of its peculiar and holy spirit. Its spirit and letter harmonize, the one being the counterpart of the other.

"Whatsoever ye do, do all to the glory of God," is the sufficient and universal mandate. Here is the motive. This is enough to regulate the conscience of the truly awakened in reference to those things of doubtful propriety. Paul could say: "I am made all things to all men, that I might by all means gain some," in no weak, vascillating spirit, as if he would render an excuse for his conduct, or make a plea in favor of this or that expedient that was doubtful in its character. We are exhorted: "Every one to please his neighbor for his good to edification." An unyielding, parsimonious spirit is a mark of littleness. Christian firmness for principle's sake, especially where the glory of God is directly involved, is a sure indication of a "right heart in the sight of God." And yet there is the spirit of gentleness and meekness that should characterize our firmness that will "commend us to every man's conscience in the sight of God."

That the everlasting gospel is the proclamation of the method of heaven to disenthrall and deliver man, and that it goes out under the divine indorsement, and is at once and of itself the "power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth," and that "faith cometh by hearing," is as evident as its associated truth, that it is the appointment of its divine author, that human instrumentality and agency is to be used in its propagation. "We are co-workers together with God." It is a blessed truth, and inspires a comfortable feeling, that I can do something to sustain and carry forward this heaven-consecrated system. The gospel is certainly not in fetters, and bound down to a certain channel for its efficient and successful operation. Its self-recuperative power enables it to operate with or without visible human aid, according to the sovereign purpose of its Author.

These reflections have been made in view of a fair, which is projected and being vigorously prosecuted by the ladies, for the benefit of old Moreau Street Church, which has long stood as a "light in a dark place." It is to embrace the seventh, eighth, ninth and tenth days and evenings of March. "A word to the wise," etc. †

UNDER WAY.—The new pastors, the Rev. John Mathews, appointed to the Felicity Street Church, and Rev. William V. Tudor, appointed to the Carondelet Street Church, of this city, are at their posts and fully engaged in their work. They received a most cordial welcome from their respective charges, and are preaching to large and interested congregations.

WE WERE glad to meet Rev. Dr. Jefferson Hamilton on Thursday, looking in good health and younger than ten years ago.

BISHOP MARVIN reached the city on Wednesday, the eighth, and left the next morning for Galveston.

THE ST. LOUIS SEMI-CENTENARY.

We give some additional items of this important and interesting occasion, which we find in the St. Louis Christian Advocate of the first instant. Bishop Keener's sermon to the children, delivered at the Sunday school gathering, we reserve for our Child's Corner next week.

On Monday, the tenth instant, at three o'clock P. M., the Conference of official members of all the city charges assembled at the First church for the formal reception of the Bishops and other invited guests.

The president, Governor Polk, being absent, Thomas M. Finney was called to the chair. After religious exercises the Conference, as a body and severally, were introduced as our welcome guests, and had with them a very pleasant social interview. The session was resumed, and the chairman addressed the invited guests, making them acquainted with the history and the plans of the semi-centenary, and in the name of the church expressing its appreciation of their presence, and extending its most cordial welcome and hospitality. Bishops Marvin, McTyeire and Keener, and Rev. Robert A. Young severally responded. Their addresses, each from a distinct standpoint, were replete with significant suggestions and wise counsels.

The appointment of the occasion creates a crisis in the fortunes of St. Louis Methodism, said Bishop Marvin. A severe inquisition into the status of the church in this great city was instituted by Bishop McTyeire, illustrating and enforcing his argument for church extension by the logic of statistics. He noted the occasion as unique in Methodist history, and interpreted it as a providential interposition, giving token of an epochal period to date an onward movement. Bishop Keener surveyed the present and the inevitable future of St. Louis, and measured the responsibilities of the church in this day and in this place by both the urgent demands of the hour and the wise foresight of the tremendous material and moral forces which are destined to accumulation here and radiation from this predetermined great central city of the American continent.

HOUSES OF WORSHIP.

The meeting on Wednesday night, the eighteenth instant, was opened with religious exercises conducted by Rev. F. A. Morris, D. D., who has been during the twenty years past associated with the pastoral work in this city, and has had charge, severally, of nearly all the societies. Bishop Keener was called to preside, and introduced Bishop H. N. McTyeire for the address of the evening, on "Building Houses of Worship." His remarks upon that topic and upon the true policy of church extension in large cities were full of sound wisdom, and should have circulation throughout the entire church. They explain many a costly failure, and if adopted would result in immense saving of money and contribute to the greater comfort and effectiveness of a Methodist sanctuary. The following is a newspaper report of the address, and, though incomplete, will give some hints of the course of his remarks:

After a few introductory remarks he said:

It was not till 202, A. D., that buildings were erected for purposes of worship exclusively, and the primitive Christians worshiped in private dwellings, caves or dens.

To build a gothic church in a Protestant country is to commit an anachronism. It was not a church for the Methodist or the Protestant. It was a style that had sprung up when the spiritual part of the church was in a rather low state—when worship was intended to be seen, not heard.

As to the style, the house should be adapted to its uses, and a Methodist church should be built especially for Methodist purposes. Again, the Methodist Church, as the church of the people, must express this idea in its outward and inward architecture. Even for a small edifice the services of a competent architect should be obtained; for although every steward thought he could build a church, it was a work of considerable difficulty.

Beecher's church, with its congregation of five thousand, was not the Methodistic idea; because our economy does not call for a church that will seat over one thousand people; because Methodism aims to give spiritual life to every member in congregations that are designedly limited. Their policy was distributive—to scatter and diffuse moral life. In large churches how many men and women are perfectly inactive. The Methodist Church, on the contrary, sought to give work to members of it.

These facts should have their modifying and shaping influence on the character of the architecture. While he urged the church extension, he must also warn against an evil, namely: in excessive colonization. The true policy was to gather and concentrate your forces upon a given point, and not extended over too much ground.

He had seen flatboat churches, but he had never seen a successful church made in that way. He had seen churches come to a certain point in spiritual progress who could go no further until they brought up the material side of the question. He made the assertion because his observation had convinced him of its truth. The house of God, he said, ought to be the best in the community, and if man loves God he is a church-building man. Unite your friends and build God a house, that whoever passes by may know that they are jealous of God's honor—that shall be a monument to your gratitude and his praise.

The concluding sentence of the address had a fitting response—a speech from John Hogan in the form of an allegory, but not all fancy, concluding with a pledge by himself, and others whom he represented, that Centenary church would, within the years 1871 and 1872, build for the Wesley Chapel society, in the southern part of the city, a house of worship to cost, exclusively of the ground, $25,000. The proceeds of sale of the present property of that society will be sufficient to purchase a suitable lot in a more eligible locality. Here was a noble offering, admirable in its spirit as it will be inestimable in its benefactions. Wesley Chapel society will date a new era in its history from the night of the eighteenth of January, 1871. Bro. Hogan's allegory marked as the offering of one of the daughters in St. Louis Methodism, and the meeting adjourned to give "the old Mother Church" opportunity for reflection.

THE COMMEMORATIVE ADDRESS.

The audience on Thursday night to hear the commemorative address by Bishop E. M. Marvin filled the house.

The opening religious services were conducted by Rev. W. M. Wash, and Rev. Robert A. Young, D. D., presided.

The Bishop's address discussed Methodism itself and localized Methodism at St. Louis. Adopting the idea of Methodism as a revival, he applied it to the various aspects of the Methodistic development in doctrine, experience, discipline and Christian activity. In this course of reflection we were treated to the Bishop's matured views and analysis of the genius and elements of the Methodist movement. Some of the views were to the writer of this, and perhaps others, quite novel and original. His review of the history of St. Louis Methodism was most happily rendered, and evolved with a pleasing surprise to his auditor the discovery of elements of power and success in the character of its founder and the history of his mission to this city. In the whole course of the address there were passages of remarkable originality and force of thought, and eloquent utterance.

At the conclusion of the address Bro. Levin H. Baker made a speech, as spokesman of First church. Its conclusion was hailed as a most eloquent peroration. The "Mother of us All," if old, it is evident is not superannuated in the spirit and activity of Christian zeal—it undertakes to supplement the work of Centenary church, and build a $25,000 church in north St. Louis for the St. Paul's society. Immediately upon this announcement followed the pledge of that society to furnish the eligible lot, which will be at a cost of from $7,000 to $10,000. This was a full, round, complete result—a worthy ending of one evening's counsels and deeds in the work of the Master.

DENOMINATIONAL SCHOOLS.

Rev. Wesley Browning opened the meeting on Friday night with religious exercises. Rev. Dr. D. R. Annally was called to the chair, and with a kind and appropriate preface introduced to the audience his old acquaintance, Rev. R. A. Young, D., who, on the occasion, filled the place of a Bishop in the principal address on "Denominational Schools." It was to be regretted that Bishop Wightman's condition of health did not allow him to render the service expected of him; but there could have been no disappointment on the part of any who desired that this great interest of our own Methodism should be broadly and fully represented in its claims of attention and liberal patronage among the monumental objects of the occasion. Dr. Young's address was a compact and complete historical argument, vindicating Methodism as the patron of learning, and attesting the fact of its settled policy to unite letters and religion as mutually tributary. The educational history of Methodism was thoroughly explored from its cradle in the university throughout its progress in England and its expansion to other lands, exhibiting the statistical record of five hundred schools, with sixty thousand pupils in England, and in America two hundred chartered institutions and forty thousand pupils. Such an address ought to be published and scattered broadcast throughout the connection as a campaign document in the interests of educational enterprise.

Bishop Keener followed, compressing into a brief compass of time a masterly argument for the association of religious with literary culture. The postulate was most learnedly and conclusively elaborated, that man cannot arrive at the apprehension of his own emotional nature, nor much less the nature of God, by the processes of the intellect. These are of necessity the discoveries of a God-giving revelation, which alone furnishes the solution of those great questions concerning God and man which constitute the great problem of humanity. Passing from this to another view, the address vindicated the position that in the education of youth there should be on the one hand and the other neither religion without science, nor science without religion—they are consonant, and not antagonistic—not discordant interpreters, but consenting witnesses, and upon this basis of truth the education of our children should be reared. The foregoing is a very inadequate sketch of the Bishop's line of thought. We hope at some future time to present it more justly and fully.

The practical result contemplated in respect to the discussion of this topic was not more at the present time than the inauguration of an educational enterprise. This was done with hearty and almost universal consent among the members and friends of the church in attendance on that evening, giving in their names to constitute an association to undertake and conduct the proposed effort to found in this city a Methodist school for young ladies. It was one of the most important results of the semi-centenary occasion, if this movement, as the prospect promises, shall be sustained by judicious plans of effort and prompt action. Let it be that a college for young ladies, with complete appointments and equipment, shall look back through intervening time, longer or shorter, to the records of that night as the memorable date of its foundation.

NEW ADVERTISEMENTS.

D. H. HOLMES.—It has been our privilege to have business transactions with this house for nearly twenty years, and we can, without hesitation, recommend it to our readers. Mr. Hoffman, the business manager, is known here as a polished gentleman, and we have always found his clerks obliging and truthful. The goods are selected with taste and judgment. If you wish to deal with a house that you can rely upon, we recommend you to call at No. 155 Canal street. See advertisement, headed Direct Importation, elsewhere.

CLARK & MEADER, GROCERS.—We call special attention to the advertisement of the above firm. We have tried them, and found them satisfactory and reliable as grocers, and, after an acquaintance of many years, we can affirm that we know no house which has given more satisfaction. See advertisement elsewhere, and call at the corner of Carondelet and Common to examine their splendid assortment.

LIFE ASSOCIATION OF AMERICA.—The above association have an advertisement commencing with this issue. It is a Southern institution, the parent department being in St. Louis, Missouri. The Louisiana and Texas department is presided over by our esteemed fellow-citizen, General J. B. Hood. The officers, directors and trustees of the local department are largely made up of our most responsible business men. Its funds are invested here, and remain among us. The system is mutual and non-forfeiting. If you think of insuring your life, call and investigate the matter for yourself. The company have secured the services of Rev. C. R. Godfrey, of the parish of Caldwell, to represent them in the northern part of the State. He is a most energetic and reliable gentleman. Address him at Copenhagen, Louisiana.

CLOTHING.—The card of Pierson & Hews will be found in our advertising columns this week. These gentlemen are deserving of the largest patronage, and can suit the most fastidious customers. We know whereof we affirm when we say that their goods are not excelled in this market. Their place of business is at the well known stand, Nos. 13 and 15 Camp street.

CHOICE SEEDS.—See advertisement of Maupay in to-day's issue.

CHOICE GARDEN AND FLOWER SEEDS. See Watson's advertisement, headed Old Colony Nurseries.

PAINFUL REPORT.—The special dispatches to the Times, of this city, contain the sad statement that Rev. Dr. Deems was among the killed in the fearful railroad catastrophe which occurred near Poughkeepsie, New York, on the seventh instant. As we have seen nothing in the latest telegrams to confirm it, we are led to believe that there is a mistake in the announcement.

DR. DEEMS' SERMONS,

AS PREACHED FROM THE PULPIT OF

THE CHURCH OF THE STRANGERS,

are published and mailed, postage paid, to subscribers regularly during the week succeeding their delivery. No sermons are so elegantly printed either in Europe or in this country.

The Church of the Strangers is a Christian communion, composed in part of persons who have been members of the Baptist, Congregational, Episcopal, Lutheran, Methodist, Presbyterian and other denominations, and in part of those who have made a confession of faith under the ministry of the Pastor. We believe ourselves to be the first unsectarian church established in America. Our symbol of faith is the Apostles' Creed, our ritual is simple, our communion is open, and our seats are all free. We are at war with no existing denomination of the Christian Church, but are endeavoring to supplement the labors of them all, and are at perfect peace with all who "love our Lord Jesus Christ in sincerity." Our aim is to demonstrate the practicability of Christian Unity, to keep up a Free Christian Church in this city, and to furnish a Sunday Home for Strangers whom pleasure or business may bring to the metropolis.

"As brilliant as those from Plymouth pulpit, they are sounder in theology and purer in style."—Banner of the Church, Atlanta, Ga.

BURKE'S MAGAZINE FOR BOYS AND GIRLS, FOR 1871.

The conductors of Burke's Weekly For Boys and Girls, in response to a very generally expressed wish, have determined, with the new year, to change the character of that publication into a

for the Boys and Girls of the South. Gratefully appreciating the remarkable favor bestowed on their Weekly, and the many expressions of entire satisfaction which have reached them from all quarters, they are satisfied that their paper has supplied a want long felt at the South, and that a well conducted Magazine, of high moral tone, filled with contributions from the best writers, and embracing a large amount of valuable information, can be made highly attractive to youthful minds, without the adventurous and pernicious aid of sensational literature.

The same writers who have aided in making the Weekly so wonderfully popular will contribute to the Magazine. The first number will contain the opening chapters of a new story by the author of "Big-Foot Wallace," "Jack Dobel," etc., entitled "The Indians at Dirt-Dauber's Nest: A Tale of the Seminoles" told in Mr. Duval's best style.

Mrs. Maria Pendleton Kennedy, of Virginia, will contribute a charming story of Virginia life. The Hermitage Children.

Mary Faith Floyd will contribute a beautiful Fairy Tale.

Dr. F. O. Ticknor, Paul H. Hayne, Mrs. McKinnie, Mrs. Mary Ware, Mrs. S. E. Peck, Mrs. E. E. Ford and other well known writers will furnish contributions of great value and interest.

All of the old and popular features of the Weekly will be retained in the new Magazine. The editor will hold his monthly chats with little readers and correspondents through the Letter Bag, and the Obligney Corner will continue to be crowded with Rebuses, Charades, Enigmas, Puzzles, etc.

TERMS.

Burke's Magazine for Boys and Girls will be issued monthly, in numbers of forty-eight pages each, and printed on the best calendered paper, and elegantly illustrated. The price of subscription will be $3 a year, three copies for $5. Burke's Magazine and the Southern Farm and Home, $3 per year.

CHILD-WISDOM.

THE LITTLE WORSHIPER.

"What are you thinking of, Willie,
Sitting so quietly there,
With your Noah's ark animals round you,
And your eyes gazing up in the air?"

"I have set out my animals, mother,
The great and the small in a row,
With Noah, his wives and his sons' wives
They make such a beautiful show!

"I've set them all out in the sunshine,
That God, who is up there above,
May see them, because they're so pretty,
And I want to show Him my love.

"I am sure He must see where I'm sitting,
And hear every word that I say,
Because you know, mother, He listens
Both morning and night when I pray.

"You know that He loves little children,
And says there to have Him He some;
So I've set out my Noah's-ark creatures,
The great savage beasts and the tame.

"I've set them all out in the sunshine,
Where I think they are plainest to see,
'Cause I would give Him a pleasure
When yes so much pleasure to me."

KATE.

BY MARY BELL.

"Oh, isn't it splendid?" said Kate, swinging her satchel high in the air, "and isn't Miss Wilson kind to let us all meet at her house?"

"I love to work for the missionaries," said Maud; "you feel so good, so like a Christian, you know."

"Yes, indeed, it makes us so much happier to work for others than to follow our own selfish pleasure, mother says."

"And what a beautiful fair we will have! Bring all of your pieces of silk and ribbon, for we are going to make lots of pretty things."

"Mother has any quantity of lovely silks in an old trunk in the garret. I am going to hunt them up as soon as I get home."

"You must come early to the society. We want to commence precisely at four."

"Good-by," said Kate, as she reached the corner; "be sure to come."

"Never fear, I will be there at half past three."

Kate rushed into the house, nearly knocking over poor grandma, who was slowly crossing the floor.

"Why, where is mother?"

"I'm so glad you've come, deary; I've been waiting for your bright eyes. I want you to thread my needles full of needles, so that I can sew on my patchwork."

Kate was generally very obliging about the needles, but it did seem too hard to be interrupted at this important moment, when she wanted to tell her mother all about the society, and get those lovely silks. She sat down, without a word, but she never did see such ugly thread, that would nutwist and knot, and wouldn't go through those hateful little eyes. Finally they were all threaded, a brilliant array bristling on the cushion. Grandma was much obliged, and Kate ran off to find her mother.

"Where's mother, oh, where's mother? Cousin Anna, do you know where mother is?"

"Keep quiet, can't you?" said Cousin Anna, who disliked children, and considered Kate as one of the noisiest and naughtiest girls she ever knew. "Your mother has got a headache, and you must stop tramping and romping about the house."

"But I must see mother. I want to ask her if I can go to the new society, and to find out in which trunk those silks are in the garret. I must see mother."

"Well, you can't see mother, I tell you. She's just going to sleep, and you'd better not go rummaging over any of the trunks, but take care of your little sister Daisy. She's been driving your mother almost distracted by her noise."

On hearing this charge Kate rushed up to her room; she was in a mood for taking care of Daisy. She locked the door fast, threw her hoops and things on to the bed, and herself into a great rocking chair, where she began to cry as though her heart would break.

"It's always just so! Mother always has the headache when I've something important to tell her. I never can go anywhere or do anything. Oh dear, oh dear, I'm well to get at those silks! And I can't even go to the society, for I can't ask mother. Oh dear, oh dear, I never was so wretched in my life!"

"Katie, is you in your room?" peeped a sweet little voice outside the door; "I want to saw you."

"Go away, Daisy, you can't come in."

"Just a little minute," pleaded Daisy.

"No, you naughty, bad girl, go right away, I'm busy."

Daisy began to cry so loud that Kate feared Cousin Anna might appear, so she opened the door. Daisy bounced in and perched herself on the bed among Kate's things.

"Oh, what you got left in your basket?" said Daisy.

"No, you shan't touch my lunch basket; there's nothing in it but a dry cracker and an old apple," and Kate snatched it away.

"I want to see the old apple," cried Daisy, throwing herself down on the bed, and kicking with all her might against Kate's hat.

"Oh, Daisy, you awful wicked girl, you've broken the feathers and spoiled my hat," cried Kate, who seized the child very roughly, and put her out of the room.

Daisy screamed and pounded the door with her little fists. Kate paid no attention, but went on bewailing her misfortunes.

"Now just look at that hat! It was a fright to begin with, for I never can have anything decent; but now it is ruined, and what shall I wear to school beside Maud's beautiful blue one? Oh, how I hate to be poor! Maud has three lovely silk dresses, and I an old one made out of mother's, and I have only one pair of kid gloves to my name. Cousin Anna would say that is ridiculous. She never had a pair of kid gloves when she was a little girl.'

"And there's that child crying outside the door, but I won't let her in. I can't bear to take care of children, and its 'hold baby,' and 'mind Daisy,' from morning till night. Now the clock is striking four. Oh dear! oh dear! the girls are all there, and having such a nice time—my heart is almost broken."

A loud scream from Daisy sent Kate to the foot of the stairs; but Bridget, Cousin Anna and poor, pale mamma were there before her. Bridget held the child in her arms, declaring she was "kilt intirely, for her head was splitted." Mamma sat on the stairs, faint and trembling, while Kate, almost paralyzed with fright, felt like a murderess, as she saw the blood on Daisy's face. But Cousin Anna was equal to the occasion. She declared the child could not be seriously injured, as she herself saw her fall, only three or four steps. She found Daisy had cut a little gash in her forehead. She soon washed the wound, and dressed it with court-plaster. Kate began to breathe again, and sat down by Daisy in the most contrite and humble state of mind. Daisy put out her little hand: "I won't tell mamma how cross you was if you will tell me a story."

"Certainly, darling," and Kate sat by Daisy till tea time, telling story after story, and amusing her in the merriest way, thinking how much trouble she might have saved if she had been kind to her little sister—all the time feeling so guilty, and conscious that her zeal that afternoon had not really been to help the missionaries, but to have a good time, and be connected with a grand affair. She hoped the missionaries would never know how selfish she had been; above all, that Cousin Anna was not acquainted with any, for Kate was sure if she was she would tell!—Christian Union.

LAYING UP RICHES.—"Grandpa," said a little boy, "our minister said this morning that 'riches take to themselves wings and fly away.' Now, is there no place in this whole world where wealth can be stored in safety?"

"None," replied the old man.

"Not in England?" still inquired the boy. "Surely the banks of such a great and wealthy country are on a sure footing."

"No," again replied the grandfather; "civil strife or foreign war may at any time arise, beggaring the people and ruining the banks."

"Is not money safe in Prussia, in the hands of those rich German bankers?"

"No, not safe," once more replied the old man, "even in their hands, for prosperity may fail them."

"But surely," said the boy, "even boundless wealth may be deposited in the banks of this great republic with perfect safety."

"Alas! no," replied the aged man; "war may arise even in this great country; and villains abound in the land, who rob banks of their treasures and plunder vaults of their wealth."

"Then there is no place where riches may be stored in safety!" sighed the boy.

"Yes; not in this world, as I said at first, but in heaven. My boy, always remember the text: 'Lay not up for yourselves treasures upon earth, where moth and rust doth corrupt, and where thieves break through and steal; but lay up for yourselves treasures in heaven, where neither moth nor rust doth corrupt, and where thieves do not break through nor steal.'"

"Do you ever take such a text?" inquired a minister of a sensible local preacher. "No, sir." "Why not? Do you not see your way into it?" "Oh, yes, but I do not see my way out of it."

The Farm and Garden.

GOOD NIGHT.

"Good night!" said the Plough to the weary old horse,
And Dobbin responded, "Good night."
Then with Tom on his back to the farmhouse he turned,
With a feeling of quiet delight.

"Good night!" said the Ox with a comical bow,
As he turned from the heavy old cart;
Which laughed till it shook a round wheel from its side,
Then creaked out, "Good night, from my heart!"

"Good night!" said the Hen, when her supper was done,
To Fanny, who stood in the door.
"Good night," answered Fanny; "come back in the morn,
And you and your chicks shall have more."

"Quack, quack!" said the Duck; "I wish you all well, Though I cannot tell what is polite."
"The will for the deed," answered Benny the brave;
"Good night, Madame Ducky, good night!"

The geese were parading the beautiful green,
But the goslings were wearied out quite;
So, shutting their peepers, from under the wing
They murmured a sleepy "Good night."

Now the shadows of evening were gathering apace,
And hiding the last gleam of light,
So to father and mother both Fanny and Ben
Gave a kiss and a hearty "Good night."

MORE PROFITABLE THAN COTTON.

NEW ZEALAND FLAX.—ALL ABOUT IT.

SACRAMENTO, Jan. 9, 1871.

DEAR SIR: In May of the past year, while on the passage from New Zealand to Newcastle, New South Wales, I saw in the European Mail an extract from your paper on the encalyptus or gum tree of Australia, and the desirability of their introduction into America. At that time I had a few ounces of the seed, and I now send you some, and indorse the remarks you then made.

I also send a sample of New Zealand flax fiber, some canvas from the same, seed pots and seeds. On the passage from Newcastle to San Francisco I wrote an account of the plant, and arranged with Colonel Warren, of the California Farmer, to try to bring public attention to it. There is no plant growing that serves so many purposes. The leaves, cut green and split, serve for all sorts of strings and small ropes, and to make baskets, mats and nets; the liber will make all kinds of rope and canvas; the gum in the leaves makes mucilage for envelopes that no steaming or soaking will open; the flowers produce plenty of honey, and the stalks are so light and buoyant they could be cut fine and used in stuffing the furniture of steamers and other vessels, when, in case of accident, each one would be a life buoy. A few pieces of the leaves steeped in hot water will raise yeast equal to hops. Until a few years past no machinery had been made to cleanse it, but now this is being extensively done, and the cultivation of the plant commenced. The operation is very simple. The green leaves are fed into the dresser, which consists of two rollers, one smooth and one grooved, which feed them to the beater, which consists of an iron cylinder a foot in diameter and six inches across, with steel bars a half inch square, set diagonally across the surface. This drum revolves very rapidly, and knocks the fleshy substance from the leaf, and leaves the fiber hanging below. This is washed in clear water, bleached and scutched, when it sells at from £40 to £50 in the English market. Had I the opportunity I would visit the Southern States with the seed, and endeavor to bring it into notice. As I cannot come, will do what I can, seeking assistance from any who will spread information concerning it. Once growing in America, as it does in New Zealand, and it effects a revolution in the price of paper, as it would furnish an abundance of material. A friend of mine who has had a large experience as clerk on steamers on the Southern rivers used to say that the low-lying lands on the banks and at the mouths of these rivers would grow thousands of tons. There is no particular season in which to gather it, but the mills run in New Zealand the year round—a great advantage in your vicinity, as it could be let alone to grow during the sickly season. I was in your city in 1858, and again in 1859, and I believe the surrounding country would yield an immense crop of this fiber. In New Zealand they reckon an acre of good flax will yield from twelve to fifteen tons of green leaves, which will give two tons of scutched fiber. I send you a copy of the California Farmer. Should any in your vicinity desire to give the seed a trial, any order to my address, Sacramento, or to the Farmer, 320 Clay street, San Francisco, will receive prompt attention. We are selling it at $1 per ounce of about four thousand seeds, enough to stock two acres. Please extend this information as much as possible, and anything we can do for you in California we shall be most happy to favor you. A very liberal discount will be allowed in seed to an order for a quantity.—A. M. Southworth, in the Picayune.

VIOLETS AS WINDOW PLANTS.—A correspondent of the Gardener's Monthly has grown the violet for some time as one of his favorite window flowers. In former years, when brought into the house from the cold pits to flower, they were placed at once in the sitting room window, where we had a regular temperature of about sixty degrees; but the stalks were always slender, and the flowers rather small. Thinking it was too hot, I kept them other years in a cooler room, where the heat might, perhaps, not range over between forty-five and fifty-five; and the result has been much healthier-looking plants and finer foliage. Besides this, they were not much behind what I have had in warmer places in other years. I am sure they want very little heat to do well.

Another fact: I have learned that a manure water made of rotten wood is a capital fertilizer for them. Once I thought, as shady places were the natural places where violets grow, rotten wood would be a good thing in the soil; but they sometimes get sick in it. But the liquid of steeped wood does not seem to have this effect. On the other hand, a lively green is the result. We never water them except when they show signs of drying. In our room this is about twice a week.

ONE HUNDRED AND TWENTY-SEVEN SHELLED BUSHELS PER ACRE.—Mr. David H. Branson, who received the premium offered by the Brandywine Farmers' Club for the best four acres of corn, gave a supper to the club last week, at which he detailed his mode of culture as follows: "I applied last fall and spring about one hundred wagon loads unbleached livery and barn yard manure, broadcast, on twenty-five acres clover and timothy sward, fifty of which were hauled a distance of three miles—all furrowed down during the month of April and first week in May last. In addition to the stable manure, I applied on the sod three ox-cart loads to the acre of manure from the hog pen. After having plowed and thoroughly pulverized the soil, marked out rows one way three and a half feet distant; dropped the corn by hand, two grains from fifteen to eighteen inches apart; applied to each hill one handful of hen manure, ashes and plaster, equal parts; covered with hoe May 10; five hundred bushels of lime were applied and cultivated in on twelve acres, the remaining thirteen having previously been limed on the sod."—Country Gentleman.

BEET-ROOT SUGAR IN FRANCE.—The production and manufacture of beet sugar in France is greater than has generally been supposed. Two-thirds of the consumption of the entire country is manufactured within its borders, while only one-third is imported. According to the latest reliable statistics the annual value of raw sugar made from the beet now amounts in France to $20,000,000. Upward of six hundred thousand tons of beet-root sugar are now produced by more than one thousand eight hundred factories on the continent. Fifty-five thousand tons of beet-root sugar, costing $9,000,000, were imported into the United Kingdom in the year 1867. In addition to the sugar itself, spirit to the value of $6,700,000 was distilled from the root, and from molasses extracted from the root, in the harvest of 1855-6 in France. Potash to the value of $2,300,000, and pulp-cake worth $5,000,000 as food for cattle, were produced from the same culture.

KEEP PLOWING UNDER.—A Georgia farmer, having a field of ten acres, (land worn out,) had plowed it in June, and sowed it in wheat in September, and at harvest time got four bushels to the acre. The next season there was a fair crop of weeds. These were plowed under, and wheat tried again. The yield per acre was nine bushels. The same process the succeeding year produced seventeen bushels per acre, and the last year twenty-seven bushels. As no mention is made about use of clover, those successive croppings and constantly increasing yields are somewhat remarkable. It is assured that had the ground been subsoiled twenty inches deep the last yield would have been doubled.

PRAYING FOR HER ENEMIES.—A little girl in an Italian Sunday school complained that some of the children had hissed at her.

"Why did you not do your best to defend yourself, or complain to the master?" inquired her mother.

The child hung down her head and was silent.

"What did you do," added the mother, "when they were seeking their pleasure in tormenting you?"

"I remembered what Jesus did for his enemies," replied the child; "I prayed for them."

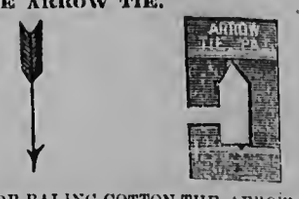
MISCELLANEOUS.

THE ARROW TIE.



FOR BALING COTTON THE ARROW TIE is the most popular, being the best Cotton Tie in use.

Planters and Cotton Press men everywhere prefer it to all others.

THE ARROW TIE

was used to cover MORE THAN HALF THE CROP OF 1869, giving entire satisfaction.

The patentee and manufacturer of the celebrated ARROW TIE, J. J. McComb, formerly of New Orleans, now residing in Liverpool, having control of the best and most extensive Rolling Mills in Europe, is constantly importing large stocks of this popular Tie, manufactured of the very best quality of English iron, to meet the increasing demand for it throughout all the Cotton States.

Planters can buy or order the ARROW TIE of all dealers in Iron Ties, and of country merchants generally, at the lowest market price; and we respectfully solicit the patronage of Planters and Factors everywhere.

BRACES AND TRUSSES.—DR. JOHN C. BANGELL informs the medical profession and others that he has constantly on hand and for sale a complete assortment of BANNING'S TRUSSES, Spinal and Shoulder Braces, and other appliances for the prevention, relief and cure of general debility, moral weakness and derangements of the speakers and singers, palpitation of the heart, bronchitis and weakness of the lungs, spinal weakness and deformity, dyspepsia and nervous affections, constipation and chronic diarrhea, female derangements and extreme displacements of the womb, RUPTURE, Piles, prolapsus-ani, and weakness of the male and female system.

These light, cool and springy auxiliaries are the special favorites of the profession, are intensely common-sense and rational in their action; supply a missing link in treatment; place the above affections in a new and more hopeful light, and often effect cures where medicine can only mitigate, more than it can cure a hernia or a dislocated joint.

He specially desires an examination of these appliances by the profession and others. Where necessary the proper application of the above braces will be under our supervision or that of the family physician.

These valuable appliances are sanctioned by a large number of the medical profession in the United States and Europe as well adapted to fulfill the purpose for which they are intended, and the Trusses and Braces adopted by the United States government for the use of the army and navy. Terms—Consultations free. Send for their pamphlet. It is better to call.

Guyot's Geographical Text-Books.

"Incomparably superior to anything published."—Agassiz.

Introduction to the Study of Geography.
Elementary Geography.
Intermediate Geography.
Common School Geography.

Guyot's System is approved and indorsed by the most distinguished literary and scientific men of our nation; such as Profs. Agassiz, Dana, Tenney, Henry and others, celebrated in science throughout Europe as well as at home.

The fact that ONE MILLION (1,000,000) copies of the work are in use in the schools of our country, at the present time, is proof of the unparalleled success attending the New System, for no other series of books ever published in America have ever secured so rapid and extensive introduction. They are the text-books in nearly all the colleges, seminaries, normal schools, etc., in the United States; in the public schools of the cities of New York, Brooklyn, Rochester, and most of the cities and towns of the Eastern States; Cincinnati, Cleveland, Columbus, Springfield, Toledo, Marietta, and most of the other important towns and cities, numbering nine thousand schools in Ohio, and hundreds of towns and cities in the other Western States, also in the Southern States and California are receiving extensively adopted.

Believing that the publication of Professor Guyot's series has marked a new and better era in the presentation of geographical science, and by th the pupils of this generation will attain a clearer, more definite and exact knowledge of the world on which they live, and that it is so systematized as to render that knowledge more valuable and permanent, we commend it to the attention of all interested in educational improvements and progress.

SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 11, 1871.

THE COUNT AND THE DOVE.—Cruelty to animals is always the sign of a mean and little mind; whereas we invariably find really great men distinguished by their humanity.

I remember having read, some time ago, a beautiful story of Count Zinzendorf when a boy. He was, as I dare say you know, a great German noble, and lived to do a great deal of good in the world. One day when he was playing with his hoop near the banks of a deep river, which flowed outside the walls of a castle where he lived, he espied a dove struggling in the water. By some means the poor little creature had fallen into the river, and was unable to escape. The little count immediately rolled a large washing tub, which had been left near, to the water's edge, jumped into it, and though generally very timid on the water, by the aid of a stick he managed to steer himself across the river to the place where the dove lay floating and struggling. With the bird in his arms, he guided the tub back, and got safely to land. After warming the little captive tenderly in his bosom, the boy ran with it into the wood, and set it free. His mother, who had watched the whole transaction in trembling anxiety from her bed-room window, now came out. "But were you not afraid?" she asked. "Yes, I was, rather," he answered, "but I could not bear that it should die so. You know, mother, its little ones might have been watching for it to come home!"

WITELY CRITICISM.—Theological students are fair marks for advice from all parts of the habitable globe, and from some parts not habitable. There is, however, one source of invaluable advice. While talking with an intimate friend, lately, he said: "What a pity our wives would not tell us our faults in the pulpit and our failures in the pastoral work. They know us through and through, and hear us all the time, and ought to criticise us." I said to him—for I thought he deserved it—"You ought to be ashamed of yourself. If you were half a man your wife would tell you your faults. It is because you want to be petted and pitied, and told that you are working too hard, and flattered, that she will not talk to you about the matter. For my own part the severest and sharpest criticism that I ever had came from the best woman that lives on this globe. If you only choke down your pride and self-conceit, and stand like a man and take it, the severest criticism of a loving wife will do you good. You will have plenty of people to tell you that you are a beautiful preacher, and that you give splendid sermons. While it is not wise to seek criticism from the pews in general, there will be one pew from which you may get keen, and living, and sharp-sighted hints, every one of which is sent from heaven.—Dr. Thomas Hastings.

SHUT THY DOOR.—I feel all that I know and all that I teach will do nothing for my soul if I spend my time, as some people do, in business or company. My soul starves to death in the best company, and God is often lost in prayers and ordinances. "Enter into thy closet," said he, and "shut thy door." Some words in Scripture are very emphatical. "Shut thy door" means much; it means, shut out not only nonsense, but business; not only the company abroad, but the company at home; it means, let thy poor soul have a little rest and refreshment, and God have opportunity to speak to thee in a still, small voice, or he will speak to thee in thunder.—Cecil.

BE YE servants of Jesus Christ, whether ye eat or drink, or whatsoever ye do. Serve him with both your hands and all your hearts. Get your manhood strung to the utmost tension, and throw its whole force into your Redeemer's service. Live while you live. Drive not away your existence upon baser ends, but count the glory of Christ to be the only object worthy of your manhood's strength, the spread of the truth the only pursuit worthy of your mental powers. Spend and be spent in your Master's service.—Spurgeon.

NO MATTER IN WHAT WAY.—Two confessors of Christ, during the reign of King Henry the Eighth, were threatened with martyrdom by the Lord Mayor of London. He told them unless they gave up what he considered their errors he would tie them in a bag and have them thrown into the Thames. They replied: "My Lord, we are going to heaven, and it matters very little whether we go there by land or water."

LOOKING to others for our standard of happiness is the sure way to be miserable. Our business is with our own hearts and our own motives.

Scientific.

THE recent deep-sea soundings have shown that, owing to the incompressibility of water, its density is not increased at great depths. The popular notion that metals will not sink to the bottom on this account is, therefore, unfounded. Neither are the debris and loose materials at the bottom consolidated by the pressure, although it increases by one ton to the inch for every four thousand eight hundred feet. Pressure, being equal on all sides, even though it be three tons to the inch, will not destroy the life of animals, which are composed of solids and liquids only, nor interfere with their motion.

THE "frost-work" on the summit of Mount Washington is described as wonderful in its peculiar beauty. It is formed when northerly winds prevail, and starts from points on the northerly exposure of various objects. Everything which the wind strikes becomes soon covered with beautiful, feathery forms, and horizontal icicles are thrown out, sometimes two feet in length. Condensation of vapor is referred to as the cause; but the air is supposed to be filled also with minute spicula of ice, which are caught while the vapor condenses, and thus build the horizontal masses. The greatest velocity of wind which has been observed at this station was one hundred miles per hour, a rate quite without precedent in meteorological record.

A REVIEW of modern surgical progress in a recent lecture by Dr. Frank W. Hamilton gives the following happy results: Amputations have been rendered less barbarous by the use of ligatures, instead of cauterizing irons. More recently some better devices are replacing ligatures. The former rule, not to amputate at the knee-joint, is now obsolete, and the patient is to have as much of a limb left as possible. Resections are now practiced to great advantage, by which means diseased portions of bone or joints are removed without resorting to amputation. Replacements of parts of the face, as of a nose or of an eyelid, are now quite common, and no longer looked upon as marvels of extraordinary surgical skill. Squinting eyes are now constantly and easily restored to the natural position. To reduce the dislocations of the hip-joint used to be a matter requiring mechanical tackle to overcome the powerful muscles which surround this point. An American surgeon introduced the method "by manipulation," so that by carrying the limb through various motions the joint is easily replaced without the need of powerful extension. For twenty-six years only has the medical profession been acquainted with the use of anæsthetics; but they are now among the necessities of surgical practice, and of incalculable value. It is recorded as a singular coincidence that anæsthetics, which may be said to control the nervous electrical currents, were introduced in the same year that saw the first application of electricity to telegraphy.

A PRACTICAL scheme for introducing a national railway time-table has been worked out with much care by Mr. Charles F. Dowd, of Saratoga. Not less than sixty degrees of longitude, with a time difference of four hours, span the distance between the extreme termini of our national railway system. For want of any systematic arrangement the differences of standard times assumed by the various companies cause no small confusion and perplexities among travelers. Mr. Dowd proposes that all the railways shall adopt standards founded on the national standard at Washington, according as they lie within either of four sections of fifteen degrees width, to be marked by the numbers 0, 1, 2, 3, and called first, second and third-hour sections, as the central meridian of each is so much later than Washington in time. He has calculated the longitude of the eight thousand railway stations in the country, and then indicates the hour section in which each falls by a figure on the left-hand side of the name, while the correction in minutes is put after the name, with the signs plus or minus, according as it is to be added or subtracted. Thus Mobile, written with a 1 before it and a minus 16 after it, shows that Washington time is one hour minus 16 minutes faster than Mobile time. If this notation is printed on the railway time-tables, and the railways adopt the standards, it will come to be a very easy thing for a passenger to calculate from his own watch, especially if he sets it by Washington time, just what the time of leaving any station must be. He has only to add the prefix number to the hour of departure, whatever that may be, and add or subtract the suffix number from the minutes. If he prefers New York time, he has only to subtract twelve minutes more, as he finds that marked in his table 0 New York—12. The adoption of some such systematic reduction of time is coming to be a great necessity, and it would be difficult to find anything simpler than this proposed by Mr. Dowd.—Independent.

HOUSEKEEPERS' DEPARTMENT.

OYSTER PIE.—Line a deep dish with good puff paste, not too rich. Roll out the upper crust, and lay on a plate just the size of the oyster dish; set it on the top of the dish and put into the oven, as the crust must be nearly cooked before the oysters are put in, for they require less time than the crust. While the crust is baking strain the liquor from the oysters; thicken it with the yelks of eggs, boiled hard and grated—three eggs for seventy-five oysters; add two tablespoonfuls even full of butter, and the same quantity of bread or cracker crumbs; season with pepper, salt and mace or nutmeg—a very little of either—and be sure and taste, to be sure that you do not season it too much; to add is very easy, but to take out seasoning in cooking is a difficult task. Let the liquor just boil; then slip in the oysters, and as soon as they come to a boil stir well and remove the plate and top crust, and pour them and their gravy into the bake dish: place the top crust over and return to the oven for five minutes, and send to the table hot.

OYSTER FRITTERS.—Drain off the liquor, and wipe the oysters dry; season with a little pepper and salt, if not salt enough. Make a batter with a pint of milk and flour enough to mix a batter not very stiff. Beat the yelks of three eggs very stiff, and put to the batter, beating all a good deal. Whisk the whites to a stiff, dry froth, and stir in gently the last. Take up a spoonful of batter on a spoon, lay an oyster on top, and cover with a little more batter, and with a broad knife slip this off gently into a pan of boiling lard. When brown on both sides drain on a perforated plate, and send to the table hot.

TO FRY OYSTERS.—Take from the shells carefully so as not to tear or break them; dry in a clean fish-cloth; beat the yelks of eggs with thick cream—one yelk to two tablespoonfuls of cream; rub together some bread or cracker crumbs, a little salt and cayenne pepper. Have half a pound of butter boiling hot in a skillet; dip each oyster in the beaten yelks and cream; then roll in the cracker crumbs, taking pains to have the crumbs adhere thickly to the oyster. Drop into the skillet, and fry to a light brown on each side. They should be crisp and light. Drain free from all grease, and serve hot.—Christian [illegible]

PATIENCE.—An aged woman, after a busy life of doing good, was at length laid upon her bed, pain-worn and helpless. A good minister went to see her, and asked if, after her active habits, she did not find her confinement hard to bear? "No, sir," said she, "not at all. When I was well I used to hear the Lord say day by day, 'Betty, go here; Betty, go there; Betty, do this and do that,' and I used to do it as well as I could. But now I hear him say: 'Betty, lie still and cough.'"

Pain's furnace-heat within me quivers:
God's breath upon the flames doth blow.
And all my heart in anguish shivers
And trembles at the fiery glow;
But yet I whisper, "It is God's will!"
And in his hottest fire sit still.

WHITE.—Dr. Spencer, some days before his death, gave orders that nothing—not even as much as a thread—of black should be seen on his coffin. "For," said he, "I have been a sorrowful man these many years—lamenting the deplorable state of Christ's church militant here on earth; but now, being on the point of retiring into the church triumphant in heaven, I will not have the least mark of sorrow upon me; but my body shall be wrapped up in white, for a testimony that I die in expectation of a better and more glorious state to come."

A THOUGHT FOR PARENTS.—Never for one day forget that the first book children read, nay, that which they continue to read, and by far the most influential, is that of their parent's example and daily deportment. If this should be disregarded by you, or even forgotten, then be not at all surprised when you find another day—to your sorrow and vexation, and the interruption of your business, if not the loss of all your domestic happiness and peace—that your children only "know the right path, but still follow the wrong."—Anderson.

BE NOT penny wise. Riches have wings, and sometimes they fly away of themselves; sometimes they must be set flying to bring in more.—Lord Bacon.

"I DESPISE MANKIND," said an arrogant millionaire to a noted clergyman. "I see you have studied your own nature," was the quiet reply.

GOOD is slow—it climbs. Evil is swift—it descends. Why should we marvel that it makes great progress in a short time?

NEW ORLEANS MARKETS.

From the N. O. Price Current.

We have no material change to notice in the general market since our last review. Our leading staple has been in fair request, but operations have been restricted by moderate supplies of the descriptions most in request, the stock on sale comprising an undue proportion of mixed and stained or dusty lots. The business, nevertheless, has been of fair extent, at prices showing some irregularity—the better qualities, including all clean, bright and even-running lists, ruling in favor of factors, while other descriptions have been dull and drooping.

COTTON.—The following are the arrivals since the third instant:

Louisiana and Mississippi .... bales..	31,909
Lake	857
Arkansas	3,071
Mobile	691
Texas	102
Total	36,630

On Saturday prices were strengthened by a decided advance in sterling exchange and encouraging telegrams from Liverpool and New York, but operations were restricted by scant supplies of clean, bright cottons and the higher grades, as well as by the stringent pretensions of factors, and the business was confined to 4,900 bales, good ordinary closing at 13½ to 13⅝c., and low middling at 13⅞ to 14⅛c. On Monday, with a more copious supply, the movement exhibited increased animation, and 10,000 bales changed hands; but notwithstanding a further advance in foreign exchange, the Liverpool market having given way 1-16d., and the receipts being heavy, the poorer qualities ruled more in favor of buyers while the better descriptions continued steady, neither showing any great decided variation. On Tuesday the market opened with a fair inquiry, and, although the movement was again checked by the moderate supply of clean bright cottons and even-running lots, as well as of the higher grades, yet the sales embraced 7,500 bales at rather easier prices, without any quotable change. The proportion of stained, spotted and dusty in the stock is unusually large, and buyers find difficulty in filling orders which exclude such descriptions.

This makes an aggregate for the past three days of 22,400 bales.

The receipts at this port since the first of September (exclusive of the arrivals from Mobile, Florida and Texas) are 702,834 bales, against 685,846 bales to the same date last year, and the increase in the receipts at all the ports, up to the latest dates, as compared with last year, is 599,876 bales. In the exports from the United States to foreign countries, as compared with the same dates last year, there is an increase of 531,458 bales to Great Britain, 59,143 to other foreign ports, and a decrease of 157,312 to France.

Referring to our remarks above, we quote as fellows:

Ordinary	11½ to 12¼
Good ordinary	13⅛ to 13⅞
Low middling	13⅞ to 14⅜
Middling	14 to 14⅞
Strict middling	15 to 15¼

SUGAR.—A fair demand has prevailed since our last review, especially for the better descriptions, and prices have been well sustained. The supplies on Saturday and Monday were mostly disposed of at 5½ to 6¼c. per pound for inferior, 6¾ to 7c. for common, 7¼ to 8c. for good common, 8¼ to 8¾c. for fair, 9 to 9¼c. for good fair, 9½ to 9¾c. for fully fair, 10 to 10¼c. for prime, 10¾ to 11c. for choice, 11¼c. for strictly choice, 9 to 10½c. for seconds, 11¾ to 12½c. for yellow clarified, and 13 to 13½c. for white.

MONETARY.—Gold, 111⅜ to 111⅝.

American silver half dollars, 109, and Mexican dollars at 1 per cent. premium in gold.

The only sales of bonds reported are $10,000 new City Sevens per cents on Saturday at 70, $3,000 City Tens at 98¼, and $5,000 do., resale, at 98½; and $7,000 new City Sevens per cents on Tuesday at 70 to 70½.

The sales of warrants include $1,300 new State on Saturday at 74; and a small amount on Tuesday at 73½. Dealers have bought new State at 73 to 74, new Metropolitan Police at 97½, and asked 74 to 74½ for the former, and 98 to 98½ for the latter.

City Treasury notes are quoted at 24 to 25 per cent. discount.

These are not the best the world ever saw, nor do I pretend to say that they will last ages and generations to come; neither will they bake bread or warm rooms without some little wood or coal, and just the least bit of fire, judiciously applied. But I do believe they are just as good as any now in use, and with the same care in using and skill in managing will perform as well, and prove as durable and economical as the most approved pattern. NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

New York, Feb. 10.—Nothing has been heard from New Hamburg or Poughkeepsie of the Italian consul at Montreal, Mr. Kinsella, or Dr. Lucia, an attache of that consulate, for whom inquiries were received by telegraph from their friends. It is only conjectured on suppositions that they were on the train, but as they have been widely announced as among the missing, it is at least strange that they do not report themselves.

The strangest mystery of this deplorable affair yet remains to be told. Mr. Mallory, of Poughkeepsie, says the coroner has in his possession a pair of shoes, evidently belonging to a girl about fifteen years of age. The shoes contain a pair of feet, which is all that remains of the body of which they were members, the rest having been consumed in the terrible conflagration that followed the collision. These shoes were picked up near the foot of a telegraph pole that stands on the embankment leading to the bridge from the north, and scarcely six feet from the end of the bridge. How they came there is a mystery equally impenetrable with that of their proper ownership.

The feet they contain are all that remains of the body, which has not yet been missed, and is the only certain thing connected with them.

New York, Feb. 11.—The marine reporter of the Associated Press at Aspinwall writes under date of February 2: You will no doubt see some glowing accounts by this steamer of Captain Selfridge having found a place for the ocean ship canal from the Atlantic to the Pacific.

Only one of his men got across to the Gulf of San Mignel by the old route of Lieutenant Strain's expedition some years ago, by the Astralos river. Captain Selfridge found the pass three hundred feet high at the lowest elevation. The distance across, as measured on the chart, is one hundred and thirty miles, most of which is a very low swamp land. The distance from the Atlantic to the Pacific, by the route of the Panama railroad, is thirty-seven miles, and the summit is two hundred and sixty-two feet above the sea.

New Hamburg, N. Y., Feb. 13.—The engine of the unfortunate train has been partially raised; the gearings show the engine was reversed to check the speed. No bodies were found.

New York, Feb. 13.—The steamship Worcester will carry provisions to France.

The ship Neptune brought in seven frosted of her crew, most of whom will lose their fingers and toes. A warrant has been issued for the arrest of the officers.

The steamer Riga, with provisions for the French, cleared for Bordeaux.

Washington, Feb. 14.—The Gulf steamship bill, as passed, directs the Postmaster General to advertise, and authorizes him to contract with responsible parties, who shall be American citizens, upon the most advantageous terms, for the conveyance of a semi-monthly mail service from New Orleans, via Galveston, to certain Mexican ports; the contractors within eighteen months to construct three first-class iron steamers of not less than fifteen hundred tons burden, to be subject to acceptance or rejection by the Postmaster General, and approval by a constructor detailed by the Secretary of the Navy; in time of war or in danger the government to take these vessels by purchase on the payment of a sum equivalent to the interest on their ascertained value. The mail contract not to exceed ten years, nor the annual compensation $100,000. A reasonable compensation to be paid for the first eighteen months for any pioneer vessels placed upon the route.

Washington, Feb. 14.—Senate.—The Gulf steamship subsidy bill passed. The names of the incorporators were stricken out, and an amendment fixing New Orleans as the initial and terminable point of the line.

The Finance Committee reported adversely to the bill remitting the duty on articles sold at fairs for the benefit of the French.

A bill was reported for the redemption and sale of lands acquired by the United States under direct taxes.

About the Tennessee.—The Washington Chronicle says: "We dislike to raise groundless fears, but there is no use in concealing the fact that some uneasiness is felt in regard to the safety of the United States steamer Tennessee, which left on the sixteenth ultimo, with United States commissioners bound for San Domingo. That some accident has occurred there can be no doubt, but we trust that whatever it may be its ill effects will be confined simply to delay in the voyage of the vessel, and that all the passengers have escaped the perils of the deep."

The Navy Department received the following dispatch from the operator at Havana: "I can't trace the report of the loss of the Tennessee to any reliable source, and believe it to be an idle hoax. Our papers have not alluded to the rumors. Key West advices say that no disastrous news has been received there of the Tennessee in naval or other circles."

The fact that the Tennessee, which sailed for New York with the San Domingo expedition on board, has not yet been heard from, continues to give rise to very painful feelings in this city and elsewhere; but there does not seem to be the least foundation for apprehension, as, if her engines, which are now, got out of order, it would take her twenty or twenty-five days to reach San Domingo under sail. It is now but twenty-three days since she left New York. In fact, those best capable of judging entertain no doubt that a few days more, possibly hours only, will dispel all the absurd rumors now afloat. In addition to the prominent journalists on board, the commission included the following gentlemen: Commissioners—Ex-Senator Wade, Dr. Howe and Prof. White; Cadet Wade, private secretary to his father; General Siegel, private secretary to Dr. Howe; Prof. Crane, private secretary to Prof. White; Prof. Blake, geologist to the commissioners; Allen B. Burton, secretary to the commissioners; H. H. Brummel and C. Wright, botanists; Fred. Douglass, Jr., private secretary to Mr. Burton; two official stenographers, John Faley and Hilt.

FOREIGN.

London, Feb. 9.—John Locke, a member of Parliament for Southwark, addressed his constituents in favor of a dower for the Princess Louise. The mention of the Queen's name provoked hisses. The workmen present resolved to hold public meetings to protest against allowing a dower.

London, Feb. 9.—Jules Favre, thanking the mayor of London for provisions, writes on the eighth that the distress in Paris is still very great, but the city continues quiet.

The steamship Crescent City, from New Orleans for Liverpool, is ashore off the coast of Ireland, and a total loss of the steamship is apprehended.

This steamer cleared from New Orleans January 12, with fifty bales of palm leaves, 4,101 bales cotton, 71 sacks cotton seed, 2,556 sacks corn, 2,400 staves and $101,402 in specie.

The passengers, crew and specie are safe, but there is little hope of saving the cargo.

Vienna, Feb. 9.—The Reichsrath will be convened February 20.

London, Feb. 10.—The Standard says the commission would be more interesting to the people if the basis upon which the commission is to act was known.

Henry Melville, Queen's chaplain, is dead, aged thirty-seven years.

The German telegraph offices in France have been ordered to transmit French messages regarding the elections and the provisioning of Paris.

The Prussians captured a letter from the King of Sweden, expressing the warmest sympathy for France.

Havre, Feb. 10.—Generals LeFlo and Trochu are among the candidates elected to the Assembly in the department of Finisterre.

Versailles, Feb. 10.—Returns from eleven departments indicate the election of Bonapartists, Orleanists and clerical candidates. But very few Republicans will be returned.

The duration of the armistice will probably be extended, so that the Assembly may have time to perfect the work of restoration.

London, Feb. 10.—A dispatch from Berlin says the war contributions of 200,000,000 francs, which were exacted from Paris, have been apportioned—150,000,000 francs to North Germany, and 50,000,000 to South Germany.

The report that the Turks were about to form a camp at Shumla, threatening Romania, is denied.

A dispatch from Versailles, tenth, states that the imperial German army are in process of the formation of a thirteenth army corps, which will consist of Wurtemburg and the Hessian troops.

A violent earthquake was felt at Darmstadt this morning.

Versailles, Feb. 10.—Strong belief prevails at Prussian headquarters that the French Assembly will form a provisional government under the Count de Paris as president, and provide a future plebiscite government.

London, Feb. 11.—A dispatch from Brussels says: "Alarming distress continues in Paris, as the Germans permit few provisions to enter that city. They suppress at Versailles all letters from Paris, and allow no telegrams and but few letters to enter the city."

Generals Changarnier and Faidherbe are elected from Sommé.

A decree issued by the Bordeaux government calls out the military class of 1871 immediately.

Bismarck declines to treat with Switzerland for the return of the French who entered that State.

The following English consular appointments were gazetted to-day: Archibald, at New York; Kotright, Philadelphia; Murray, Portland; Henderson, Boston; Booker, San Francisco; Donahue, New Orleans; Raiuols, Baltimore.

The brig J. L. Bowen arrived at Boulogne with food. This is the first vessel that has visited that port within ten years.

Liverpool, Feb. 11.—The Courier reports the loss of a French transport off Cape La Hague with one thousand two hundred and fifty persons. All lost.

Florence, Feb. 11.—In the Italian chambers, to-day, Signor Luza, in some remarks in reply to a question, said the rumors which had obtained currency of a movement of troops by the papal authorities were of at least a doubtful nature, as were also the reports of a gathering of suspicious individuals in the Vatican. The speaker added: "Any movement of the sort would be promptly repressed and punished by the government."

Havana, Feb. 11.—Late advices from Hayti report that another attempt at revolution has been made at Port au Prince. On the second instant an attack was made upon the arsenal, but the rebels were defeated and a number of arrests made. At Jacmel the feeling of disgust prevails among the respectable portion of the inhabitants at the unsettled state of the country.

They declare that the frequent revolutions since the independence of Hayti have operated to the detriment of property classes—their wealth and intellect—and they seriously contemplate annexation to the United States, and only wait until the cession of San Domingo is effected. This feeling is rapidly spreading. The president, however, is popular.

Berlin, Feb. 13.—The Prussian Cross Gazette judges from the result of the French elections that a resumption of the war is improbable, and there is scarcely a doubt but what the armistice will be prolonged.

London, Feb. 13.—A dispatch from Paris says there are two hundred candidates, and the counting is consequently slow. It is probable that a second election will be necessary.

Provisions in immense quantities continue to arrive.

A commission of four Germans and three Frenchmen is in session at Versailles, to arrange complications unprovided for by Bismarck and Favre.

It has been ascertained that ninety-eight lives were lost on the transport Le Cerf.

The programme for the Prussian march through Paris on the nineteenth is as follows: The troops will occupy houses along the route adopted for the passage of the Emperor, who will enter Paris at noon by the train from Versailles, taking horse at the station, and proceed to the Tuileries, where he will lunch and hold court. The general officers will then inspect the investing armies, which will march with bands playing and colors flying.

The Emperor will then return to Versailles, and on the two following days will visit the Tuileries and then return to Berlin.

The Prussian police report that there is no probability of untoward events to disturb the triumphal demonstrations.

The Emperor has the lumbago.

The armies before Paris have been fully reinforced and newly clad for the pageant.

A Berlin dispatch to the Evening Times says it is expected that peace will shortly be completed; nevertheless, military preparations continue.

The Prussian Parliament has been asked to advance $50,000,000 to the empire.

Versailles, Feb. 13.—Hostilities continue in the departments of Jura and Doubs, the French refusing to accept the armistice.

Tachard is elected from Haut Rhin.

The city of Paris has been authorized to contract for a loan of two hundred million francs for the war tax.

Lille, Feb. 13.—The Prussians have stopped the railroad hence to Paris. Incredible rumors prevail of uprisings in the occupied districts.

Vienna, Feb. 13.—The overflow of the Danube inundated the suburbs of Vienna, especially Leopold Stadt and Rozan.

Bordeaux, Feb. 13.—A quorum of the Assembly has not arrived yet. There was a caucus to-day of the Orleanists, who believe they possess a clear majority. Subsequently I was informed that at a meeting of all the deputies who have arrived it was resolved to adjourn over until such a day as a quorum is in the city. Many Bonapartist agents are here.

Paris, Feb. 13.—Everything has been arranged at Bordeaux. A committee to negotiate a treaty of peace has been selected, and a draft of the treaty has been approved by Bismarck and Von Moltke. The treaty is to be signed immediately, and the German troops will then march through Paris to the Strasburg station, and there take the train for home. Trains will follow each other as rapidly as possible. The Assembly will then adjourn to Paris, and proceed with the reorganization of France. The departments which are not occupied by the Germans are ravaged by bands of franctireurs, who are pillaging travelers and houses. Terror reigns in those departments. Discreditable revelations are making concerning the provisional government. It is said members hold immense sums made out of contracts; that they secretly disposed of stores and provisions, and in the Hotel de Ville forty-three thousand bottles of wine were drank.

Provisions are pouring into the city and prices are low.

Florence, Feb. 14.—The deputies, by a vote of 204 to 139, sustain the ministerial policy regarding the inviolability of the papal residence.

London, Feb. 14.—The Richard and Harriet, from Hull for Pensacola, has been wrecked off Deal.

Bordeaux, Feb. 15.—Affairs are more promising for the Republicans; four hundred and eighty-one delegates have arrived, the majority of whom seem inclined to confine the action of the Assembly to a ratification of the terms of peace, and postpone other matters until the adjournment to Paris.

Bordeaux, Feb. 15.—The Assembly was engaged to-day in verifying the election of members. To-morrow the Assembly will proceed to constitute a new government.

Victor Hugo received an ovation.

Paris, Feb. 15.—Jules Favre has returned from Bordeaux.

Complete tranquility prevails here.

General Vinoy succeeds General Thomas in command of the National Guards.

London, Feb. 15.—The press of Paris allude to the proposed entry of the German army into Paris in excited terms. The Reform opposes the entry of the German troops as such, and foresees bloody encounters between them and the citizens.

A majority of the journals counsel the citizens to remain in doors and display mourning emblems during the passage of the German troops.

Dissatisfaction prevails in Paris at the meagerness with which provisions are distributed, but the distress and mortality are decreasing.

Sealed letters are now transmitted by mail to Paris.

It is stated that the Paris government will publish the minutes of its sittings from the fourth of September to the conclusion of the armistice. The Siecle urges the Bordeaux government to do likewise.

Several deputations of citizens of Dieppe and the surrounding country waited upon the German commander at Rouen, and vainly appealed for an abatement of the exactions from them.

A planter writes: "I can say to those who wish to make large crops on old, worn land, buy Murfee's Subsoil and stick close behind it."

We are redeemed by blood that we may live unto God.

Mysterious Affair.—On Sunday evening some persons found a black dress coat under the sugar shed at the foot of Bienville street, which, from all appearance, had been there since Saturday night.

In the left side of the breast is a wide cut, as if made by some sharp instrument.

The citizens gave the coat to an officer of the Harbor Police, when Captain McCann had it sent to Captain Badger's office, with its contents. The latter consisted of two handkerchiefs, one of them covered with blood spots, and four letters of introduction, all of them opened.

They were addressed by Prof. Bartlette, of Columbia College, five miles from Rodney, Mississippi, to Mr. F. Morse, the proprietor of the City and St. James hotels, Mr. A. Griswold, the jeweler at the corner of Canal and Royal streets, the Rev. Dr. Smith, 36 Camp street, and the Rev. Mr. Markham, 179 Customhouse street, introducing the brother of Prof. Bartlette, Mr. George H. Bartlette, on his visit to this city. Special Officer Woody was intrusted with the affair, and at once visited the above gentlemen.

They, we hear, are all well acquainted with Prof. Bartlette, but have not received the letters of a visit of his brother.

Rev. Dr. Smith yesterday joined and assisted Mr. Woody in his investigations, and sent at once a letter to Prof. Bartlette.

It is supposed that some of the many cut-throats and vagabonds who infest our city have murdered Mr. Bartlette, robbed him and thrown the body into the river. The case is one of those whose mystery perhaps never will be unvailed. Times, February 15.

Terrible Whirlwind in Point Coupee.—Destruction of Life and Property.—We take the following from the Echo: On the night of the fifth instant a heavy rain, attended by hail, thunder and lightning, fell in this part of our parish. At the same time a tornado or whirlwind swept with great violence over the quarters of Captain Morrison, throwing down and destroying four buildings and killing three colored women. Passing on to Mr. Sneed's, close by, his quarters, stable, carriage house, kitchen, storeroom, etc., were utterly demolished. The ruin is complete. The trees were all twisted off. A cooking stove was carried some distance off and dashed into a thousand pieces. One colored woman and a valuable horse were killed. The tornado seemed to have spent its force before reaching Mr. Belzon's place, for a portion only of his dwelling house was carried off. And it seems that it had lost its violence by the time it reached the Hopkins plantation, as the only damage was to his cane shed.

In looking at the wreck, it has more the appearance of the havoc of a whirlwind than a tornado. It was a mysterious and fearful visitation In a moment—in the twinkling of an eye—thousands of dollars' worth of property was destroyed, and four human beings cut off in the midst of health. Well has it been said: "In the midst of life we are in death." Whence came this storm? Who guided it? Whither did it go? All is mystery.

A California paper says: "Last week a boy about eighteen years old, by the name of N. Pinckston, was out hunting about one mile from Spanishtown. He was attracted by a hog squealing in a ravine. He went down to the place and saw a California lion in the act of devouring a hog. He put his dog on him, which finally treed him. The hog the lion had killed was a wild one, and weighed one hundred and fifty pounds. Pinckston raised his rifle and shot the monster through the head, and he fell as dead as a salt mackerel. He measured eight feet and four inches from snout to the end of the tail, stood two and a half feet high, and weighed about two hundred pounds. He was very fat, the fat around the kidneys producing one gallon of pure oil."

A Beautiful Thought.—Among some of the South Sea Islanders the compound word for hope is beautifully expressive. It is manoalana, or the swimming thought—faith floating and keeping its head aloof above water, when all the waves and billows are going over—a strikingly beautiful definition of hope, worthy to be set down along with the answer which a deaf and dumb person wrote with his pencil, in reply to the question, "What was his idea of forgiveness?" "It is the odor which flowers yield when trampled on."

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

Mr. Editor: Allow me to say to the members of the Mississippi Conference that I finished to-day forwarding to them the minutes of the last session, except to three of the brethren; whose post offices I have not learned. It may be that I have sent some to the wrong office, as I had directions from very few; if brethren do not receive theirs in due time they can write to me, and I can inform them where to apply.

It has been suggested, and very properly, I think, that we sell as many copies as we can, say at ten cents each, so as to make the amount to be paid by the Joint Board and the Missionary Society as small as possible.

C. G. Andrews.

Jackson, Miss., Feb. 2, 1871.

The Protestant Episcopal Church Case in Chicago.—Our readers will remember that early last year Rev. Mr. Cheney, rector of one of the Protestant Episcopal churches in the city of Chicago, was arraigned by the Bishop of the diocese. Early during the ecclesiastical trial the proceedings were summarily arrested by an injunction from the Chicago Superior Court, granted on application of the defendant. The case was duly appealed, the ecclesiastical tribunal adjourning to await the decision of the Supreme Court. That decision was announced on Tuesday of last week.

The Supreme Court reverses the decree of the Superior Court, and dissolves the injunction. The court decides that the Ecclesiastical Court had jurisdiction of the subject-matter of the charge against the accused, and also of his person. The court reviews the decision of the Ecclesiastical Court on the material question presented, and approves such rulings. The decree of the Superior Court is held to be a violation of the fundamental principle recognized in this country by the constitution, that Church and State should be kept separate. A court of law will not interfere with the administration of the discipline of a church court unless property is involved. A clergyman has a pecuniary value, but by the constitution and laws of the Protestant Episcopal Church the enjoyment of it depends on his obedience to the regulation of the church and submission to its judgments. The majority of the court decides that the decision of the Ecclesiastical Court on its own jurisdiction is conclusive, and no inquiry will be made as to its correctness in a Court of Chancery. On this point Chief Justice Lawrence and Judge Sheldon disagree with the majority of the court, they holding that such a question may be examined, and if jurisdiction does not exist its judgment will be void. Upon all other points all the judges concur.—New York Christian Advocate.

Statistics of Immigration.—It appears by official data that the number of foreign immigrants who arrived in this country during the year ending with December last was 284,815, their destination being as follows: New York, 224,688; Massachusetts, 22,417; California, 12,748; Oregon, 1,806; Maryland, 9,272; Texas, 551; Florida, 470; Pennsylvania, 5,870; Connecticut, 15; Rhode Island, 10; Michigan, 295; Washington Territory, 186. These passengers included 145,497 from Great Britain, 83,598 from Germany, 14,133 from Sweden and Norway, 11,568 from China, 25 from Africa, 74 from Japan, 2 from Asia and 1 from India.

Heart Work.—The average weight of a human heart is nine ounces and a half. Its work in a day is equal to raising one hundred and twenty-four tons one foot high. The height to which it could raise its own weight in one hour equals nineteen thousand seven hundred and fifty-four feet. The best effort in mountain climbing is only equal to one-twentieth of the energy of the heart for similar periods of exertion. Is there any computing what a soul can do?

Conscience is like a mirror, catching and reflecting images all around it. Remember that an impious or profane thought uttered by a parent's lips may operate upon a young heart like a careless spray of water thrown upon a polished steel, staining it with rust, which no after-scouring can efface.

The Christian Advocate.

OLD TIMES.

BY WILLIAM WINTER.

Rosy hours of youth and fancy!
Happy hours of long ago!
All! the playful, pictured memories
Let us catch them as they flow.

Galaxies of blue-eyed Marys,
With a Julia or a Jane,
Or a troop of little Lauras,
Laugh and blush and romp again.

Moonlight meetings, evening rambles,
When the night was still around,
And a sweet voice, softly murmuring,
Or a kiss, the only sound—

These remember! and remember
How the kind stars shone above,
Keeping, in their softened splendor,
Watch and ward upon our love.

Youth is as a diamond dawning—
Bold it breaks to gorgeous day;
Heavenly lights of power and beauty
Sojourn and gleam along its way.

Far within the mighty future
There be solemn voices heard;
Shaped to many a stately anthem,
Floats the music of a word.

Let that music, in the present,
Softly droops with sad decay,
Till its echo in the spirit
Faints and falls and dies away.

Green be, then, the tender memory
Of the past, forever sped;
That 'tis youth may be immortal,
Though its days and dreams are dead!

BIOGRAPHICAL.

David Browning was born in Dinwiddy county, Virginia, November 11, 1818, and died in Montgomery, Alabama, January 6, 1871. When three years of age he was taken with his father's family to Logan county, Kentucky. Then and there was laid the foundation of one of the best Methodist settlements in the West—known to this day as the "Browder neighborhood."

David professed religion in his sixteenth year. At fifteen he had entered, as clerk, a mercantile house in Russellville, Kentucky. At eighteen he, with a friend, commenced business on his own account. At twenty-one he was married to Miss Mary E. Evans, a lovely Christian woman, who lived but a short time. On November 8, 1842, he was married again, by Rev. A. H. Redford, to Miss Lizzie E. Irvine. She says: "He began the practice of holding family prayer on the first evening we moved into our home. This he never omitted until a few days before his death, when he was too weak to kneel and could hardly whisper."

He was a man of remarkable energy—hopeful, enterprising. In Clarksville, Tennessee, in New Orleans, Louisiana, and in Montgomery, Alabama, where successively his active years were spent, he has hosts not only of acquaintances, but friends, who mourn his death. In Montgomery he was to me and my family a joy and a strength during my pastorate there in 1863 65; and not to me and mine only. He was prosecuting business successfully; and how he mitigated the want and the woe of those terrible years to many! Liberal and unselfish, diligent in business, and showing mercy with cheerfulness. He was given to hospitality; it was without grudging. A firm Methodist, and yet of the most catholic spirit. His pastor being absent, there was a beautiful propriety in the fact that Rev. Dr. Petrie, the Presbyterian minister, buried him from the Methodist church, pronouncing a fit funeral discourse from the words which had lingered on the lips of the dead—"But to depart and be with Christ is far better." He was a man of excellent understanding. Well did the editor of the New Orleans Christian Advocate say: "He was one of the best and most helpful hearers a preacher ever had." If there was any good thought or sentiment in the discourse his face responded to it. He was of that blessed company whom the pastor could unreservedly rely on for sympathy or for co-operation. Modest he was, but never ashamed to own his Master. He loved the sanctuary. In all his travels he sought it out; and, though a stranger, was refreshed in his Father's house. Of his temper, what shall I say? Nature had mixed the subtle elements kindly, and grace had refined them. I could not enter any man on my list of friends who was David Browder's enemy. On this subject let the best witness in the world testify: "He was blessed with a most lovely disposition—so gentle and amiable. He never, in twenty-eight years, spoke one impatient word to me. If wife or child was in an unhappy mood he would gently talk it all away in a few minutes. The dear presence that brought joy and gladness, trust and quiet confidence, is gone, and I am desolate!"

His sickness was long. Last June he had pneumonia, from the effects of which he never recovered fully. Patience had her perfect work. The companion of his midnight hours says: "He prayed much. In the night, when, as he thought, none but God heard, he prayed for hours, and then would fall asleep." He trusted as well as prayed—trusted, and felt no fear. Once he said: "I do not ask God to spare my life if he sees fit that I die; but I pray for relief from this terrible suffering in my throat." He was heard in that request, and afterward his throat gave him little trouble.

When he could no longer speak he whispered the twenty-third Psalm. To know such a man, to have felt his influence, to have enjoyed his friendship and Christian fellowship was to me a conscious benefit and blessing.

How have the churches of Montgomery been bereaved within a very short time—Hannon and Whiting and Browder and Chilton! Help, Lord, for the godly man ceaseth. The world and the church are poorer when such men die.

WHO IMMERSED JOHN CLARKE?

Mr. Editor: The undersigned published an article in the Advocate of the twelfth of November last, under the above caption, in the conclusion of which the following language occurs: "If any one can tell when, where and by whom John Clarke was immersed, we hope he will do it. In case, however, it is not done, we will take it for granted that our Baptist friends acknowledge themselves unable to perform the task, and those who proclaim to the world that John Clarke founded the first Baptist church on this continent are members of no church at all, themselves being judges. We ask again with emphasis: Where, when and by whom was John Clarke immersed? We would be pleased especially to hear from the editors of the Louisiana department of the Baptist. Speak out, gentlemen! We want none of Mr. Adlam's suppositions, but a simple statement of time, place and name of administrator, supported by well authenticated testimony."

More than two months have elapsed since the above was presented to the public, and especially to the supposed editors of the said Louisiana department of the Baptist, Elders F. Courtney, Mount Lebanon, and W. E. Paxton, Minden, Louisiana, (a copy of the Advocate containing said article having been forwarded to each of the above named gentlemen,) and yet not one line, so far as I am informed, has been written by either of them, or any one else, giving the desired information. What is the matter, gentlemen? Can't you prove the validity of the immersion of your American founder? If so, why do you hesitate? If not, your dogmatic assertions involve you in guilt of an enormous magnitude. Your silence, gentlemen, will be construed by an enlightened public into an acknowledgment, on your part, of inability to prove your baptismal succession; and the conclusion legitimately growing out of your premise is that you do not belong to the church, but to a humanly organized society set up by one John Clarke, in Newport, in 1644.

Your champion, Mr. Graves, might, however, be of some advantage to the cause, provided he could be induced to make another run to Newport. He might, by "scratching" deep enough, find another tombstone, upon which would be recorded all the facts connected with Clarke's immersion. I hope that Mr. Graves will not consider "scratching" for the record of his immersion less dignified than "scratching" for the record of his organization of the first Baptist church on this continent. The latter, he says, he did successfully; the former he ought to do.

If no response is made to this article in a reasonable time I will enter up judgment against the successors of John Clarke by default; but if an attempt is made to answer the interrogatory, I propose examining the effort in the light of Baptist history.

TUSKEGEE FEMALE COLLEGE.

Mr. Editor: Have you ever seen calisthenics? It is so formidable a word that, despite its meaning, I was afraid of the thing. Besides, I had heard it was very similar to dancing, and was still more strongly repelled from it. Well, hearing a great deal of vocal and other tumult in the chapel of the Tuskegee Female College, and having been invited by Miss Mollie Sinclair, the instructor in calisthenic exercises, to visit her class, composed of all the pupils in the collegiate and academic classes, I went. The chapel is a large, splendid audience room, well ventilated, and with a very large platform and spacious aisles, well suited to these very simple performances. The class is drilled daily in Watson's Calisthenics—"an extended course of exercises, performed without the aid of technical apparatus, designed to further the proportionate development of the body, render the joints more flexible in all directions, give the pleasing and graceful appearance of firmness, and dexterity in the position and use of the limbs, and secure physical beauty, muscular strength and robust health."

There are none of the appliances of the gymnasium. They are very simple evolutions for the exercise of the chest, lungs, shoulder, arm, hand, trunk, waist and foot. There is nothing that can offend the taste of the most modest, or shock the sensibilities of the most zealous Christian.

It is very vigorous exercise. The girls are very rosy. The health of the establishment is remarkably good. And there is no doubt that this attention to physical training has produced this desirable result. Only one-half hour each day is employed in these exercises; but every moment of that time is vigorously occupied.

The school is doing well. About one hundred and thirty have matriculated since the fourteenth of September. The board of instruction is full. The various departments are at work. The principal is a man of work, as the public know. Miss Sinclair, while teaching the art of inhaling health and renewing the bodily strength, also presides over the department of art and design; and this school of art is attracting much public notice and commendation. The young ladies are not only accomplished in drawing and crayon sketching and painting, but take capital likenesses, enlarged, from photographs and ambrotypes. Colonel William H. Chambers, last summer, seeing on the walls of the art gallery about one hundred and twenty-five specimens executed during the year, asked with some surprise: "Why, is there not some cheat in this? I have seen nothing like it, in number and variety, in our other institutions?" Young ladies desiring to excel in this department would do well to visit us. Address Rev. George W. F. Price, principal.

Yours, B. B. R.

The Chapel in the Heart.—In your retirement make frequent colloquies or short discoursings with God and thy own soul. Every return of the heart in these intercourses is a going to him, and appearing in his presence, and is representing him present to thy spirit and to thy necessity. This was long since called by a spiritual person "a building to God a chapel in our heart." It reconciles Martha's employment with Mary's devotion, charity and religion, the necessities of our calling and the employment of devotion; for thus, in the midst of the works of your trade, you may retire into your chapel—the heart—and converse with God by frequent addresses and returns.—Jeremy Taylor.

A VISITOR IN NEW ORLEANS.

St. James Hotel,
New Orleans, La., Feb. 6, 1871.

Mr. Editor: I reached your city on last Friday, taking it in my route to the West on business. Not having seen the great city of New Orleans, I was led by curiosity here. I am delighted with the city in many respects. I find it an active, live business place. I find a noble, generous and hospitable people. I attended Sabbath school on yesterday at Dr. Palmer's church. They have a fine, interesting school, and several mission schools connected with this church, which, I am happy to learn, are doing a good work. I had read and heard much of the doctor. He is truly a great man. At night I attended Felicity church, with the hope of hearing the editor of the New Orleans Christian Advocate, of whom I had heard much. I was, however, much pleased, and I hope profited, by an excellent discourse from Mr. Parker's successor, the Rev. Mr. Mathews, now in charge of the church, from the words: "Fight the good fight of faith." He is an earnest, zealous and faithful man of God, and I hope his labors will be crowned with abundant success. But, Mr. Editor, there is another side to this picture; sin and wickedness abound here in every conceivable form. The Sabbath is openly and grossly violated to a fearful extent. What a field is presented for the Sabbath school cause, where all of God's children can work in his vineyard, where they can be useful in taking up the little children from the highways, and leading them in the way they should go. Oh! if we could but get the children in the church while their hearts are young and tender, before they are reared and bearded! And why is it that they are not brought in? It is because there are too many cowards in the church that are not willing to fight. Oh! if every one who names the name of Christ would buckle on his armor, and fight valiantly as a good soldier of the cross, the church would be indeed terrible as an army with banners—it would be perfectly irresistible.

I will here relate an incident that occurred with me in your city, and I hope it may be a warning to others to go not in the way of evil men. I was passing up St. Charles street on Saturday, about eleven o'clock, and in front of the St. Charles hotel I was attracted by some beautiful glass birds and figures in a show-case. A man asked me to walk in—that there was a glass-blower in the museum who could make anything. I paid the entrance fee and went in, being at leisure. I was wonderfully pleased with the skill and facility with which he can make almost anything out of glass. After seeing this and other curiosities in this room, I walked into other parts of the museum. A stranger came into the room where I was looking around, and commenced talking about the birds. We walked on until we came to a show-case in which there were some albums. A man walked in and prepared to sell me one for a dollar, which I bought and paid him for. He said there was a prize connected with it, and handed it out, which was some small brass trinket, that I didn't even put in my pocket. Just then the stranger on my left asked the man if by buying one of those albums he stood a chance to draw some large prize in the case. He assured him he could, and then proceeded to explain to him, and made up a prize, he said, worth $750. The stranger drew out a ticket, which he proposed to take. The man objected; said he had seen him put it in. He then bought another for $50, and had but $25 to pay. He proposed to go out and get the other $25. The man would not permit him. He asked me to loan him $25, and he would return it; that he knew he had the prize—worth $750—and intimated that the fellow was trying to cheat him out of it. My sympathy for the stranger induced me to hand him $50, which he took; he didn't give me the $25 in his hand, but handed all over to the other man. I saw in an instant that they were accomplices—that I had fallen in the hands of robbers; and being fortunately unarmed, I walked out.

Now that this thing should be tolerated right in the heart of the city, by a public, licensed museum, where gentlemen and ladies are invited to go—is advertised and commended by your press—is a shame and disgrace to your city, and ought to be suppressed. If I had gone into some sink-hole of iniquity or some dark alley I might have expected to have been robbed. But here, where any gentleman or lady can go with propriety, I did not expect it. I have paid dear for a lesson. I care nothing for the amount—only wish it had been given to some charitable institution. I fortunately had more; and had it been all I had, I have kind friends here, stranger as I am, who would have supplied me. But suppose the case had been different—that it had been a young man, armed with a deadly weapon, instead of the word of God and shield of faith—he might have had these men to kill, or been killed, and brought trouble and anguish on perhaps a widowed mother, or a young and doting wife. It might have been his all, and he a stranger in a strange city, and it might have led him to ruin. But thank God for the lesson to me! I verily believe that all things work together for good to them that love God.

W. W. Wemm.

P. S.—Since writing the above I have been to see Colonel Badger, chief of police, and he gave me a peremptory order for the $50 on the museum, which was handed over to me and no questions asked.

TRUTH VINDICATED.

Mr. Editor: Elder W. E. Paxton has assumed the position of attorney for John R. Graves, and in a correspondence with me denies that Graves used the language: "John Clarke founded the first Baptist church on the continent of America." But in the same letter he admits that Graves did say the fact was recorded on Clarke's tombstone; and says a single word would make the difference between the language and the fact.

But Mr. Paxton has been very careful not to give us that word. With a view, however, to exculpate Graves from the charge which I have made against him, Mr. Paxton in great haste has sent off part of our correspondence, and had it published in the columns of the Baptist. I invited him to have the whole of said correspondence published; but as he has not done so, I feel it is due me and the cause of truth that a reading public should have the remaining portion of it. It is as follows:

"Minden, La., Dec. 3, 1870.

"Elder W. E. Paxton—Dear Sir and Brother: Yours of the fourteenth of November was received a short time since. You say in that communication: 'You know with regard to Mr. Graves' assertion—Dr. John Clarke founded the first Baptist church on the continent of America.' Now I demand of you to state to me in writing precisely what Mr. Graves did say. I want no ambiguity about it. I ask for no argument based upon this or that supposition; but a plain and candid 'quotation of Mr. Graves' language.'

"Please let me hear from you at your earliest convenience, and oblige

"Yours respectfully,

"N. M. Skipworth."

Mr. Paxton remained silent until I wrote again, as follows:

"Minden, La., Dec. 14, 1870.

"Elder W. E. Paxton—Dear Sir and Brother: In your letter to me of the fourteenth of November you say 'you know' that I, and not you, are mistaken with regard to the precise language used by Mr. Graves—John Clarke founded the first Baptist church on the continent of America. I responded almost immediately on receiving your letter. I demanded of you to state to me in writing precisely what Mr. Graves did say; but up to this time I have looked in vain for the desired information. Silence, sir, will not answer the demand in the present issue. Mr. Graves' simply referring to the epitaph of Dr. John Clarke developed no new fact. Historians are uniform and constant in giving the dates as found on said tombstone. Consequently there must have been something more than that. I was familiar with all that before I wrote my article—September 24. It devolves upon you, therefore, to say what that new fact was. I still insist upon an exact quotation or reiteration of Mr. Graves' language.

"In case it is not given, and that soon, I shall take it for granted that you either do not know or that you are disposed to evade the issue.

"Respectfully,

"N. M. Skipworth."

Mr. Paxton's reply.

"Minden, La., Dec. 23, 1870.

"Elder W. E. Paxton—Sir: Yours of December 19 is now before me, and its contents duly noted. I am glad to learn, even at this late date, that you 'have no taste for personal wrangle.' Pity that you had not felt and acted so sooner. If so you would have been saved from the unenviable position which you now occupy. But, sir, you are the man who forced this correspondence, and in much haste sent off a part of it to the columns of the Baptist. As you have commenced publishing, would it be asking too much to invite you to continue until all of the correspondence between us is published.

"So far as the demand I made of you is concerned, I certainly had a right to do so, since you say 'you know' I am 'mistaken,' and would even call in question my veracity if I do not consent to your diction in the case.

"I have no doubt you have felt much anxiety about exculpating J. R. Graves from the falsity of his assertion, since you have published an article, which has come under my notice, that Clarke's tombstone has been 'exhumed,' ('disinterred'—Webster,) and thereby the true records of the 'Baptist Church discovered.'

"I think I have perception enough to understand you when you say you 'do not choose to be bullied into anything.' It is very natural for a man to complain of others when he has no argument to justify his own cause.

"I have not magnified my own importance in this matter, but confess you have greatly lessened yours in my estimation. There are, I beg to inform you, numbers of high-toned gentlemen, in the church and out of it—ministers, laymen and citizens—as I am informed, who corroborate my statement about J. R. Graves. And more than that, it is not the first falsehood that the honored guest of your church has been publicly proven in. And now, so far as I am concerned, I want no more documents from you. I have exact copies of all my letters; and I deny the charge that there is any want of Christian courtesy. But with this the correspondence between us stops, etc.

"With due respect, yours,

"N. M. Skipworth."

N. B.—There are two typographical errors, in my article of the seventeenth of December, with respect to dates. Roger Williams was immorsed in 1638-9, and not 1838-9; and Mr. Calender's century sermon was preached in 1738, and not in 1638.

GOD KNOWS.

God knows—O sweet assurance this,
But doubt and fears remove;
Accept, my soul, the thought of bliss,
Eternal goodness prove.
He knows what snares thy pathway throng,
Thy conflicts daily new;
And His almighty arm is strong
To bear thee conqueror through.

God knows—Thy sins are not concealed
From Him who reads the heart;
But Jesus hath His love revealed,
And takes the sinner's part.
He knows that there is all my hope,
No other plea I make—
And justice hath withheld its stroke,
And spares me for His sake.

God knows—and here my soul shall rest,
Unburdened of its cares;
He knows what thoughts control my breast,
He hears unuttered prayers;
And while the storm-winds wildly rave,
From off the earth-shore driven,
My soul rides safe above the wave,
With anchor fixed in heaven.

To the Secretaries of the Annual Conference Boards of Missions.

Dear Brethren: You have been requested to furnish the general secretary with copies of the reports of Conference Boards, so that he may be prepared to make the annual report of the Parent Board, according to the provisions of the Discipline. As yet he has received reports only from the following Conferences, viz., Virginia, North Georgia, South Carolina, Little Rock, Arkansas, West Texas, Pacific and Indian Mission. Will brethren representing the other Conferences respond without delay? All the Conferences have met, transacted their business and adjourned, except the Baltimore. We want the number and names of all the missions in the bounds of each Annual Conference—the number of members of the church, and of the children catechised in each mission, and the number of Sunday schools, teachers and scholars; the number received into the church during the year; the number baptized—infants and adults—the number, as near as may be, of the population, and those attending upon the ministry of the word; the number and value of houses of worship, and the amount contributed to the support of the gospel and the various institutions of the church. Please to make your reports without delay.

An Earnest Appeal to the Ministers and Members of the M. E. Church South.

Dear Brethren: It becomes my duty as secretary to keep before you the condition and prospects of the missionary work connected with our church. We have two missionaries with their families now in China, who are doing nobly. Through their instrumentality Chinese are being awakened, converted, baptized and added to the church; besides, great good is being accomplished by the schools, in which the young are taught the doctrines of Christianity, and early inclined to the worship of the one and only true God. In addition, our brethren, Allen and Lambuth, are engaged in disseminating religious knowledge through the press. In this department they are wielding a powerful influence, sowing seed that will spring up and bring forth fruit after many days.

Our Indian work in the West is in a prosperous condition. The Indian Mission Conference embraces four nations, viz., the Cherokees, Greeks, Choctaws and Chickasaws. Among these, and on their borders, there are smaller tribes, some of whom are interested in the missionary movement. In this Indian work there is a large number of preachers—whites and natives—employed. The spirit of revival has been among them, and within a few years past hundreds and thousands of these sons of the forest have been brought to God. The interests are increasing all the time. Before the war we had several flourishing schools, supported by the government, the liberality of the Indians, and the Missionary Society. During the progress of the conflict these schools were broken up, and many of the buildings destroyed or greatly injured. Our brethren are now striving, in connection with the Indians, to revive some of the most important of these schools. The Indians are very liberal, and ask but little more than that the church should furnish the teachers—they propose themselves, mainly, to erect the buildings and feed and clothe the children. The Rev. John Harrell—once a member of the Tennessee Conference—superintendent of the missions, was in our city, a few days since, soliciting aid in support of the missionaries on the districts and circuits; and asking a little assistance in putting the schools into operation.

In addition to these interesting fields of missionary enterprise we have a wide scope on the Western frontiers, and home work in our cities, and in sparsely populated regions on both sides of the Mississippi river, and on this and the other side of the Rocky mountains, that must be cultivated, or the cause of Christ suffer loss.

The board feels that necessity is laid upon it. The calls for help—pressing calls—are coming continually, and our treasury is empty. Allow us to state a fact or two in reference to our finances. The reader is aware that the present board had transferred to it the remnant of the "old debt," amounting to considerably over $30,000. In addition, there were appropriations of several thousand dollars to the China and Indian missions, for the support of the missionaries and the schools, the past year unprovided for. These all had to be met, and, in the meantime, the missions in the various Annual Conferences had to be sustained. Prior to the last General Conference we had two boards, domestic and foreign. The domestic missions were sustained by special efforts for that department. The foreign work, including the China and Indian missions, were sustained by special effort on the part of the secretary and the board, whose whole energies were in that direction, and for the payment of the old debt. The General Conference consolidated the two boards, and elected but one secretary. The new board had to provide for the payment of the old debt, and for one-half of the appropriation to foreign missions for 1870, amounting, in all, to at least $40,000. They had also the missions to support the current year, which would swell the sum to something like $50,000, that must be raised at once to relieve the church and carry on the work, independent of domestic missions in the bounds of the various Annual Conferences. In the meantime, it will be remembered that the General Conference adopted the following resolution, viz:

"Resolved, That the appropriations already made by the Annual Conference Boards shall be met according to the law obtaining heretofore, without respect to the present law requiring forty per cent. to be forwarded to the Parent Board."

This left the present board with a revenue of only ten per cent. on the amounts collected for domestic missions, and what might be generously given to the cause. The reader cannot fail to see into what a strait the board was driven, and how likely the missionaries already employed would be left without aid. The board, however, went to work, nothing daunted; the secretary devoted his whole time and all his energies to his task; the treasurer put his mind to the work—and all agreed, having the Board of Bishops to back them, that the old debt must be paid, the missions sustained, the hearts and hands of our brethren made strong, and the character and credit of the church maintained. All this was to be done without delay.

We have the pleasure of reporting that the old debt is nearly provided for, and will be paid this year if our plans are not thwarted. After the meeting of the Annual Conferences next autumn, and we begin to realize the forty per cent. allowed the Parent Board, we will feel safe, and will have nothing to fear. But the question now is, How shall we live till that period? We must have several thousand dollars the incoming spring and summer. We cannot borrow—the board has determined to create no more debts. Our only alternative is to make this exposé to our brethren, and beg those who can spare a little to send us a contribution for our present relief. Thousands of our friends have given nothing for the payment of the old debt. Who will come to our help? It is your cause, your church, your missions, and we are your servants for Christ's sake. O that some wealthy brother or sister would send a check for a thousand dollars, five hundred, one hundred! We would gladly accept fifty, twenty, ten, or the widow's mite. Who will come to our help? May God open the hearts of his children to a large liberality!

Curiosities of the Frost.—At Moscow, in a sharp season, the frost will penetrate two feet deep in the ground, and on Charlton Island, Canada, it has been found to penetrate ten feet when the water on the same island has frozen six feet. In Sweden it penetrates the earth from three to four feet, and turns what moisture is formed there into a white substance like ice, and will penetrate standing water six feet. In Maryland and the middle States of North America the frost has been known to penetrate one foot, and even deeper.

A quaint old gentleman, of an active, stirring disposition, had a man to work in his garden who was quite the reverse. "Jones," said he, "did you ever see a snail?" "Certainly," said Jones. "Then," said the old man, "you must have met him, for you never could overtake him."

A Chinese Caricature of Christianity.

A book which is said to be in extensive circulation in China will go far, it is thought, to account for the excitement of hostility which prevails in the empire against foreigners. It has been made known to the Christian world by the translation, by a missionary at Yang-tcheou, which was printed in Shanghai last summer. The book is called: A Death-Blow to Corrupt Doctrines: A Plain Statement of Facts. Published by the Gentry and People. It charges excessively corrupt and iniquitous practices upon the Christian teachers and people. Many of its allegations are of such a character that they cannot be published in this paper. Those which we can quote are atrocious enough to stimulate the worst and most savage passions. Among them are the following:

"Adherents of this religion whose bodies are dismembered after death are called 'Saints of the first class.' Those who have only their heads cut off are called 'Saints of the middle class.' Those who have their ears and noses cut off are the 'inferior saints.' Children dying in infancy are called 'virgin genii.' When the women who are keepers of the chest die, they are called the 'chaste genii.'

"In case of funerals, the religious teachers eject all the relatives and friends from the house, and the corpse is put into the coffin with closed doors. Both eyes are secretly taken out, and the orifices sealed up with a plaster. This they call 'sealing the eyes for the western journey.' If any are unwilling to conform to these burial customs, the teachers regard them as rebelling against the authority of the church, and lead a crowd of men to their dwellings to insult them in every possible way. The reason for extracting the eyes is this: from one hundred pounds of Chinese lead can be extracted eight pounds of silver, and the remaining ninety-two pounds of lead can be sold at the original cost. But the only way to obtain this silver is by compounding the lead with the eyes of Chinamen. The eyes of foreigners are of no use for this purpose. Hence they do not take out those of their own people, but only those of the Chinese.

"Passing the night with another person, they are able to possess themselves of his secret thoughts, and improve the opportunity to do injury.

"They use different methods to obtain the brains, hearts, livers, etc., of children. It is impossible to enumerate all their practices. If we seek for the general motive which leads to them, it is a fixed determination utterly to befool our people, and, under the false pretense of religion, to exterminate them. Thus they wish to take possession of the middle kingdom. What infatuation to embrace such a religion as this! I have, by an extensive searching of ancient books, and by accurate observation, been able thus to disclose their wickedness, and to sound the alarm so as to give you timely warning."

The writer then exhorts the people:

"My friend who compiled the preceding treatise accomplished his work by investigating a great multitude of books, and making use of a large experience and observation. His statements are as clear as the light. The simple reading of them is sufficient to make one's hair stand on end. Even the vicious and uncultivated cannot listen to them without dread. Hence the production was put immediately into the hands of the printer to give warning to all, so that those living within the four seas may, when they see it, gnash their teeth in rage. Although you are not permitted to seize the battle-ax and sword for vengeance, you can destroy them by your mouths and tongues. In this way the universal hatred will find vent, and the power of corruption will be broken. The immediate effect will be that men will be at once set right, and in the future our doctrines will be firmly established."

A large number of quotations from Chinese works are appended, as if in verification of the charges. Among them are:

"The followers of T'ien-chu constantly practice killing men to sacrifice to Jesus in praying for happiness. They also offer sacrifices at their graves. When a principal man dies they offer one thousand men as a sacrifice. To procure victims, they catch foreigners and traders coming into their borders, and if there are not sufficient they seize travelers, so that no one dares to go to market alone.—Record of Things Seen and Heard in Other Lands.

"In England they have the art of cutting out paper men and horses, and by burning charms and repeating incantations, transforming them into real men and horses. These they use to terrify their enemies. They may, however, be dissolved by beating a gong, or by discharging large guns at them.—Mirror of the West."

Of the several stories, alleging particular incidents of the exercise of the horrible Christian rites, the following will answer as a specimen:

"In the reign of the Emperor Wan Lie, a foreigner named Pa-ta-li came to Chekiang and began to persuade men to join the Tien-chu sect; and great numbers were ensnared by him. There was a certain military under-graduate called Wang Wen-mu, an athlete, who hearing that when any one who had joined this sect died, they secretly took out his eyes, had a desire to test the matter, and so by false pretenses entered the sect. For some days he ate nothing, and word was sent to the priest, who came, and sure enough he had a little knife in his hands; and when coming forward was about to cut out Wang's eyes, when Wang, springing up suddenly, hit him and drove him out of his house, and cut off his head and destroyed his image of Jesus. When this affair came to be known in the capital the Emperor rewarded him liberally.—Records in the Wide-Awake Hall."

The work closes with a petition from the human for the expulsion of the non-human species, which says:

"If this sect is finally allowed to spread in China, then this land, which for so many thousand years has been noted for its civilization and refinement, will at once be transformed into the abode of naked monsters and mermaids, roaming about like flocks of wild or domestic animals. Would not this be exceedingly distressing? Would it not be profoundly distressing? We would quietly suggest that the very best thing at present would be carefully to strengthen the coast defenses, to restrain and stop their trading vessels, pluck up their roots, close up their fountain, and destroy their fierce and rebellious natures. We come all together shedding tears of blood, and pray that you, our Emperor and divinely intelligent parent, will be our leader, and drive out the non-human species, and preserve us, the good and virtuous; and, digging out this root of anarchy, resuscitate the perfection of the doctrine of Confucianism."—Methodist.

Church Liberality.—According to the recent statistics of the church of which Rev. Henry Ward Beecher is pastor, in Brooklyn, there were the past year 173 admissions. Present membership, 1,982, of whom 1,210 are females; baptisms, 64, of which 28 were of children, and 9 of adults by immersion; deaths, 11; Plymouth Sunday school membership, 1,107, average attendance, 712; Bethel Sabbath school membership, 960, average attendance, 726; contributions, $11,000; pew rents, $56,000; music expenses, $6,000, of which $1,500 goes to the organist and $2,000 to the director; 2 deaconesses. This is a large congregation, and spends a great amount of money in the support of its own church objects; but its contributions to the work of the church at large are very small compared with those of many other churches whose names are much less familiar to the public ear.

The Presbyterian church, corner of Fifth avenue and Nineteenth street, of which Dr. John Hall is pastor, has only 755 members, but it reports to the General Assembly, for the year, contributions exceeding $100,000, in addition to all its own expenses.

The First Presbyterian church of New York, of which Rev. W. M. Paxton, D. D., is pastor, reports to the General Assembly annual contributions exceeding $146,000, without taking into account its own expenses.

The Wonders of Prayer.—Abraham's servant prays—Rebekah appears. Jacob wrestles and prays, and prevails with Christ—Esau's mind is wonderfully turned from the revengeful purpose he had harbored for twenty years. Moses prays—Amalek is discomfited. Joshua prays—Achan is discovered. Hannah prays—Samuel is born. David prays—Ahitophel hangs himself. Asa prays—a victory is gained. Jehoshaphat cries unto God—God turns away his foes. Isaiah and Hezekiah pray—one hundred and eighty-five thousand Assyrians are dead in twelve hours. Daniel prays—the lions are muzzled. Daniel prays—the seventy weeks are revealed. Mordecai and Esther fast—Haman is hanged on his own gallows in three days. Ezra prays at Ahava—God answers. Nehemiah darts a prayer—the King's heart is softened in a minute. Elijah prays a drought of three years succeeds. Elijah prays—rain descends apace. Elisha prays—Jordan is divided. Elisha prays—a child's soul comes back; for prayer reaches eternity. The church prays ardently—Peter is delivered by an angel.—Rev. J. Ryland.

Pythagoras used the letter Y as a symbol of human life. "Remember," says he, "that the foot of the letter represents infancy, and the forked top the two paths of virtue and vice, one or the other of which people are to enter upon after attaining the age of discretion."

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

The Bishops of the Methodist Church have chosen the Rev. H. H. Farrall, of Decotah, Iowa, to establish a mission at Rome, Italy.

The ministers of New York city are said to be uniting in a formal remonstrance against the practice of the daily papers of reporting sermons.

One hundred and seventeen new Lutheran churches were dedicated in the United States during the year 1870, being a fraction over two every week.

It is stated that ten or twelve full-blooded Indians desire to enter Highland University, Kansas, to prepare for the ministry of the Presbyterian Church.

The Presbyterian church of Truro, Nova Scotia, has had but three pastors in one hundred years. The present pastor was installed in 1838. One of the elders has held the office for sixty-seven years.

The Methodist mission to the Chinese in San Francisco has erected a mission building. The Chinese themselves have contributed $440 toward it—one man, Dr. Li Po Tai, subscribing $50, and the scholars of the school $112.50 in small sums.

On New Year's day the Pope had reigned twenty-four years, six months and fifteen days—just one day longer than Pius the Sixth. His pontificate has been longer than that of any other Pope, and bids fair to reach the years of St. Peter.

The first settlers belonging to the Lutheran Church, in this country, were Hollanders, who settled on the Hudson, in the State of New York, in 1621. The first Lutherans from Germany, four thousand in number, came in 1710, and settled in Pennsylvania and New York.

When the Sunday School Society was founded in France, in 1852, there were in all France only two hundred schools; now there are more than nine hundred, giving instruction to forty thousand children. The income of the society from donations and sales just exceed £1,000.

The total number of theological seminaries of all denominations in the United States is said to be ninety-two. Of these, fourteen are Roman Catholic, with each from three to fifteen professors; and they report nearly twelve hundred students, who are preparing for the priesthood and other offices in the church.

In forty years (1830–1870) the income of the Church Missionary Society (English) has risen from $150,310 to $750,000; its communicants from 318 to 21,705; its European missionaries from 34 to 203; its ordained native preachers from 0 to 109. Only let this noble society maintain such ratio of increase, and her "jubilee" will be glorious.

Sunday Schools in the Sandwich Islands.—A Sunday school jubilee was not long since held, at which nearly two thousand children were gathered. The vast audience was held in fixed attention by a native, a fine speaker and an educated Christian gentleman. It was a glorious sight! What hath God wrought in these islands of the sea in a brief half century!

Russia.—In this country masses and vespers are perpetual, but sermons are scarcely ever heard. There are no seats or chairs in the churches. The services, mostly singing and chanting, are in Scandinavian, and not generally understood by the people. A writer in the Sunday Magazine writes hopefully as to the formation of a religious tract society. A Bible society is already in existence.

The Church Missionary Record (English) reports a tour made by the Bishop of Calcutta, "in his capacity of metropolitan," through South India. At Palmacotta he ordained three native pastors, raising the whole number in the Madras diocese, in connection with the Church Missionary Society, to fifty-one. He also "confirmed" one hundred and fifteen candidates on the same tour.

The friends of temperance in the English Australian colony of New South Wales are in high spirits at the passage, twenty to six, of the permissive liquor bill, by which two-thirds of the residents of any district have the power to forbid the sale of intoxicating liquors in the district. Here is, probably, an opportunity to secure a practical experiment of the value, temporary or permanent, of the permissive policy as a temperance measure.

At a meeting of the Executive Committee of the American Unitarian Association it was proposed that for the present year the money that might be properly used for publishing new tracts should be expended in purchasing and circulating copies of the Religious Magazine, the Christian Register, and Liberal Christian. The board, after a full discussion, decided to purchase two hundred and fifty copies of each of these periodicals, to be used in the same way as the copies of Old and New, voted for at a previous meeting, for presentation to such reading rooms, libraries and public institutions as may seem best to the publication committee.

In Russia the circulation of the Bible is rapidly increasing. Not long ago a handsomely bound copy of the New Testament, quarto size, was presented to one of the Emperor's children as a birth-day gift. The Empress complained of its size, and asked: "Why is not a smaller edition printed?" "If it is your imperial majesty's pleasure, it can soon be done," was the answer. Her majesty at once gave orders for fifteen thousand copies, and the number was soon increased to fifty thousand. Since 1863 over eighty-five thousand copies of the New Testament have been circulated in the Russian language.

A dispatch has been lately sent from Pekin by Mr. Wade to all the British consuls in China, for the information of British missionaries, that they have no treaty right of residence whatever beyond the treaty ports; and that if they do venture beyond them, they do so at their own risk, and cannot expect help from their own government. If this be so, it will certainly greatly change their position in the eyes of the natives and native authorities, and ought to restrain purchases of inland mission property, to be destroyed any moment with impunity by native mobs, like that at Tientsin.

Exhibit of the Northern Methodist Book Concern.—The financial exhibit of the Book Concern as shown by the books at the close of the fiscal year 1870, and presented by the agents at the late meeting of the Book Committee, is printed in detail on our third page. It will be seen that the total assets, East and West, are estimated at $2,701,525.56; that the net capital, over all liabilities, is $1,494,320.56; that the net earnings for 1870 were $75,287.72; and that, after paying the Bishops' salaries and other expenses ordered by the General Conference, amounting to $39,541.56, there is left the sum of $35,745.56 to be added to the increase of capital.—New York Christian Advocate.

The Roman Catholics of Richmond, Virginia, on January 12, held a meeting to express their sympathy for the Pope in his afflictions. The Bishop of the diocese presided and made a speech. The mayor of the city read the protest, and the programme was carried out without dissent. Some of the avowals of the Bishop and other speakers were strangely discordant with what is generally thought to be universal American sentiment. Growing bold in consequence of the silence of opponents, the Bishop affirmed that "the Reformation had given birth to the heresy that the people are the source of power, but it was now becoming every day more apparent that the people cannot be governed by their own consent."

A New Idea.—The American Tract Society have conceived the happy idea of issuing an eight page weekly illustrated religious journal, absolutely undenominational in character, fully illustrated, purely religious (i. e., not busied with commercial or political news discussion,) aiming to supply, peculiarly, matter of religious interest and instruction for home Sunday reading. The Rev. Lyman Abbott, a gentleman of journalistic experience, great good sense, and generally recognized literary ability, has been induced to take charge of the editorial department of this new enterprise. We can think of no better security for the excellence and usefulness of such a publication than Mr. Abbott's editing and the Tract Society's fine engraving and printing.—Christian Union.

The religious movement in Austria differs from that in other Roman Catholic countries, such as Italy and Spain, in one essential characteristic. The Liberal Italians and Spaniards seek an alteration in their relations toward the church from political motives, but they do not ask for any alteration in the doctrines of the church. In Austria the causes of the struggle between Liberal Catholics and Ultramontanes lie deeper. The former, who are chiefly Germans, not only aim at a complete separation of the church from the State, but firmly resist the spiritual pretensions and blind intolerance of the Holy See. Their first demand was for the liberation of the schools from ecclesiastical control, the introduction of secular education, and the establishment of secular institutions for the training of teachers, so as to remove not only the schools, but the teachers, entirely from clerical influence. Such a demand is far more threatening to the spiritual power of the church than the attacks which have been made on its political position in Italy and Spain, and this explains why the religious struggle is so much more embittered in Austria than in those countries.—Interior.

"Hurry, mamma!" said the little innocent, with his cut finger. "Hurry; it's leaking!"

POST OFFICES.

As changes are being made in the post offices of the preachers, they will greatly oblige us by furnishing their addresses as early as possible. Don't forget to give the post office from which your paper is to be changed, as well as that to which it is to be sent.

OUR PUBLISHING AGENT.

We are glad to announce that the Publishing Committee, at its recent meeting, have arranged with Rev. Robert J. Harp to take charge of the business department of the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE. Bro. Harp assumes the onerous duties of this position at the earnest desire and solicitation of the editor and the Publishing Committee, who regard him as the man for the place, and bespeak for him the hearty co-operation of all the agents and friends of the paper. Hereafter all communications of a BUSINESS NATURE should be addressed to Rev. R. J. Harp, 112 Camp street, New Orleans. All communications for the columns of the paper should be addressed, as heretofore, to Rev. Linus Parker.

BISHOP ANDREW.—Our venerable senior Bishop reached this city on Saturday, the eleventh instant, and will remain for two or three weeks. It would be a great pleasure and gratification to his many friends if he could prolong his stay much beyond the time proposed. The Bishop is in better health than for two or three years past, and is able to talk to the Sunday schools, and be present in the Sunday morning congregation. He is now seventy-eight, and, although infirm in body, is cheerful and serene in mind, ministering and deriving enjoyment by social and religious intercourse with those who love and revere him.

A GERMAN CATECHISM.—Rev. J. B. A. Ahrens has brought out a new catechism in German for the use of our German families and Sunday schools. It embodies the substance of the Wesleyan series, is beautifully bound, and, we have no doubt, compiled and edited with taste and good judgment. This work has been long and greatly needed, and we welcome its appearance with much satisfaction. It is published at the office of the Evangelical Apologist, 112 Camp street, New Orleans.

WE SEE from a communication to his presiding elder, published in the Baltimore Christian Advocate, that the Rev. R. A. Holland has severed his connection with the Methodist Episcopal Church South, and that he has become a candidate for orders in the Protestant Episcopal Church.

WE ARE very glad to learn that Dr. Deems, of the Church of the Strangers, was not on the train which met with the disaster on the Hudson River railroad. He was alive and well at last accounts, and fully engaged in his ministerial labors in the city of New York.

ATTENTION is called to communications from Dr. McFerrin, which will be found in another column. All who wish for information concerning our missionary work should peruse the doctor's articles with care.

HABIT IN RELIGION.

The well known influence of habit is nowhere more evident than in religion, and in nothing else is the formation of good habits more important. It is a law which comes in to reinforce principle, and to aid in the maintenance of a godly life. By its operation virtue is confirmed and piety is strengthened. It is an element of stability which can be counted on in times of unusual trial. Other things being equal, the man of established religious habits will stand when others fall.

The inward life is amenable to this power, so that the movement of the thoughts, the current of the affections and the texture of faith are all modified by it. The government of these activities of the soul becomes easier with practice, until at length the friction and conflict of the earlier religious experience are measurably overcome. As in the unconverted state habit riveted sin upon the soul, so in the new creation the same influence roots and grounds the believer in the practice of righteousness. The danger to young converts is in a considerable degree owing to the circumstance that good habits have not yet been formed. The greater security of a long experience is largely owing to their establishment. The regulation of the inward life is therefore of unspeakable importance that right habits may be planted, and that vicious ones may be overcome and extirpated. Devout and concentrated religious thought may be secured as opposed to vain and wandering thoughts; love, cherished and kindled by persistent watchfulness, takes possession of the heart permanently, and faith, accustomed to unwavering reliance, becomes at length a stranger to vacillation and distrust. The spiritual nature, by repetition and perseverance in holy tempers, becomes almost invincibly fortified. The perturbing influences of earlier experience are no longer felt, the subtle currents which once jostled the compass and caused the needle to vary have lost their power, and the Christian exclaims: "My heart is fixed, O God, my heart is fixed!"

The force of habit, in its effect upon religious duties, is very great. It is seen in prayer with reference to its character and frequency. The habit of secret prayer once formed goes very far to insure the believer's perseverance. It ceases to be a matter of occasional attention; it does not depend upon the frame of mind. It is divested of fickleness and inconsistency, and is incorporated into the daily life as an essential of piety. The duty of prayer in the family and in the social meetings of the church, when habitually attended to, will be performed with pleasure and comfort. It will not be crowded out by other matters, nor will the time for its performance be forgotten. Religious reading, especially the reading of the Bible, is facilitated by this principle. The practice, once established under the pressure of conscience and divine authority, becomes a source of enjoyment, and is craved and desired more than our necessary food. All of these obvious duties, so vital to spirituality, are often neglected for no other reason than that the habit of their observance has never been formed. People are ready to plead the want of time, the lack of gifts, when the real trouble is that they have no disposition, or that they have never established right and wholesome religious habits.

Without wishing to press the application too far, we believe that habit has much to do with our usefulness in the world. Activity in religion is something to be cultivated, and generosity may be attained in the same way. The grace of God must lie at the foundation, constraining love must be present, and also a conscientious survey of personal accountability. But working and giving become a habit, a part of the life and existence, and a necessity, so that those who have long practiced these eminent graces cannot be idle or niggardly.

The opposite of good habits is often exhibited in religion. Things vicious and unlovely are developed and matured by the operation of the principle we are considering—parasites, it may be, and fungi, but still having their associations, if not their nourishment, in the religious character. Superstition and fanaticism, bigotry and manifold perversions owe their strength to this familiar law. An uncharitable and censorious spirit and spiritual pride are confirmed by long indulgence. The outer vestments of the religious profession become cynical and repulsive, and the example settles into a chronic misrepresentation of a gospel which beams with gladness and joy. While the law of habit needs to be rigidly guarded in religion, it is of the utmost importance that Christians should avail themselves of it to reinforce the motives and principles of their high calling. It is particularly urgent that young believers lay a good foundation in this respect. The courage and suffering expended at the outset will pay well in the end; and they will find, in time, that what at the beginning was a heavy cross, has come at length to be their joy and their safety. Let them rigidly persevere in right habits of prayer, of religious study, of zealous work and generous giving, and they will soon realize a blessedness which none but the faithful servant can ever know.

FRANCE AND PEACE.

The indications of peace are hopeful, and a draft of a treaty is already made out. The Germans, we may be sure, will relinquish none of the military positions and advantages until peace is assured. The Emperor William and his conquering hosts are to make a triumphal entry into the French capital before they turn their faces homeward. The people of France are heartily tired of the war, and the Constituent Assembly, just elected, will doubtless reflect the popular sentiment. It is, perhaps, too soon to predict what the new government will be. Matters at present seem to put aside all ideas of a republic. It remains that Louis Napoleon will be reinstated, or that some member of the Orleans family may be called to the throne of France. The election of Thiers and others of his political class is thought to point unmistakably to the last named result. A popular reaction, however, seems to be taking place, favorable to the captive Emperor, and it is not unlikely that the powerful influence of William and Bismarck will be directed to the same end. The Protestant world will watch the reconstruction of France with a peculiar interest and with no little anxiety. The kingdom of God is first in the Christian's estimate of revolutions, and our opinions and sympathies are rightly determined by the religious bearings and significance of these great national events.

THE WORK OF CHRIST.—We have the pleasure to announce a new edition of Bishop Marvin's "Work of Christ." It is now too well known to need review. It has fallen under the notice of some of the ablest theologians of the country, and has been commended in terms of unqualified admiration. It is a masterly exposition of the doctrine of the atonement, accompanied with some speculations concerning the influence of the atonement on other worlds, which exhibit the doctrine in original and inspiring views. These views have arrested the attention of some of the best thinkers among students of the Bible, and will interest and instruct all readers concerning some of the most profound truths of our holy religion. The present is a handsome edition and reflects credit on the Southwestern Book and Publishing Company, the printers and publishers. Price per copy, sixty cents, with usual discount to preachers and dealers.—St. Louis Christian Advocate.

BISHOP KAVANAUGH.—The many friends of Bishop Kavanaugh in West Virginia and eastern Kentucky will be pleased to learn that he has almost recovered from his recent affliction, caused by a hurt which for a time threatened to deprive him the privilege of walking in the future. May his useful life be spared to bless the church and the world for many years to come.—Christian Observer.

THE St. Louis Advocate states that Rev. William Perkins, of the Missouri Conference, died on the thirty-first of January.

LOSS AND GAIN.

Our confrere of the Baltimore Episcopal Methodist very naturally expresses the regret and extreme reluctance felt at the transfer of Bro. Tudor to this new field of labor. Among other things he says:

Our border work needs all the support we can bring to it, and we cannot afford to part with such men as William V. Tudor. As he, like a true Methodist itinerant, has yielded himself up to the constituted authorities of the church, we of course must bow to the same behest, and look to the great Head of the Church to supply such laborers as the exigencies of the work may demand. Bro. Tudor "is to the manor born." He has grown up among us, and has done the work of an evangelist in his native Conference, well and faithfully, for more than fifteen years. As a preacher he has sustained himself in the capital of the nation with marked ability and usefulness. As a pastor and earnest worker in every department of the church, we have only to point to results. He will carry with him the respect and affectionate regard of his fellow-laborers, and our best wishes for a career of continued success and increasing usefulness. May the Lord go with him and greatly bless his ministry in the Crescent City.

THE Episcopal Methodist speaks as follows of our church in Maryland:

It has been suggested that we have perhaps raised the standard a little too high in speaking of Southern Methodism in Maryland. In the tabular statement, which, for obvious reasons, we published a few months ago, we fell below the actual figures. Several churches had been overlooked in our calculations, which would have swelled the number to sixty instead of fifty-four erected in our State in the last four years. We are painfully sensible that in this city and in Maryland we are financially weak and numerically small. Dr. A. L. P. Green, at the General Conference in May last, gave a correct estimate of our real condition. The affectionate regard of that far-seeing and noble friend, for our welfare, will not be questioned. He spoke from actual observation and an intimate knowledge of our affairs, the result of his frequent visits, and which his sagacious mind fully comprehended. Although we have often been constrained to ask, "By whom shall Jacob arise, for he is small," still we have reason to thank God and take courage.

We were far from allowing what some had assumed, that the Southern Church in Maryland was a failure. As a faithful sentinel the Episcopal Methodist was bound to correct such an impression. From the facts presented, since the organization of our church in this State, under the circumstances, the result is marvelous. We believe that much more might have been accomplished had there been more of the spirit of self-sacrifice, more moral heroism, more dependence upon God. But God be praised for the band of faithful men and women, of whom it may be said: "Ye had compassion of us in our bonds, and took joyfully the spoiling of your goods, knowing in yourselves that ye have in heaven a better and enduring substance." Let us be true to ourselves, true to our principles, true to that form of doctrine and discipline delivered to us by our fathers, and the result is not doubtful. "The wilderness and the solitary places will yet rejoice, and the desert will blossom as the rose."

MISSIONARY RECEIPTS.

Received of J. C. Huey, of Louisiana Avenue Church, New Orleans, and placed to the credit of the treasurer of the Louisiana Conference Missionary Society.....$50 00

Received of S. P. Russ, of Carondelet Street Church, for the missionary debt, and placed to the credit of the treasurer of the same..... 25 00

Amounts paid on previous subscriptions or contributed for either of the above, and all other religious and benevolent objects, will be acknowledged as above.

R. J. HARP, Agent.

AN OLD DISCIPLE.—The Rev. S. B. Suratt reports to us the death of one who may be truly said to be "full of years." The case is really noteworthy. Brother Suratt writes: "Miss Milly Huey died Jan. 25, 1871, aged one hundred and twelve. She was born in North Carolina. She died in Hardeman county, Tennessee, where she has resided for fifty years. About a century ago she joined the Baptist Church, to which she was attached until her death. She was unusually active and vigorous until nine months since, at which period one of her limbs was dislocated by a fall, from which she never recovered. The exercise of her mental faculties was retained unto the last. She died in the faith."—Nashville Christian Advocate.

AN INTERESTING LETTER.

[The following letter was addressed to the secretary of the Morean Street Sunday School and Missionary Society. The recent remittance, it will be seen, was most timely. We hope that other schools will place themselves in direct correspondence with our China mission.—ED.]

SHANGHAI, CHINA, Dec. 7, 1870.

MY DEAR BROTHER: Your letter of October 8, accompanied by one from Bro. Foster, of the Felicity Street Sunday School Missionary Society, announcing the dispatch of your joint remittance in behalf of our missionary schools at Shanghai, was received on yesterday. It was unexpected, but not the less welcome. He who supplied his prophet by the mouth of ravens knoweth how to open the hearts of his people, and your gifts in behalf of our school are as seasonable as was the bread to Elijah. Indeed, I had about used the last dollar of the school funds in hand, and was beginning to wonder where I should find funds for the next month's expenses. Your letter relieves the situation, for, though the money has not yet arrived, it is confidently expected by next mail from San Francisco.

I have now a very fine class of twelve boys under instruction in a boarding school, to which is also admitted six day scholars, three of whom are little girls. Bro. Lambuth also has both a boys' and girls' school, numbering in all about fifteen pupils, I believe. During the week their studies are equally divided between the Chinese classics and our religious books. On the Sabbath all attend services in our city chapel, the Hwa-Shan Tang, and in the afternoon receive special instruction in the Sabbath school. They have very tenacious memories, and all their acquisitions are treasured up. Everything is memorized. They can repeat a book from beginning to end without faltering. It is simply wonderful. They almost literally eat their books. It is amusing to see them recite to the teacher. Each singly advances and hands his book to the teacher, then turns his back and begins the recitation, which they call "backing the book."

We are exceedingly obliged to you for your timely interest in this department of our work, which is altogether extra, and not supported by funds remitted by the board. We have long tried to make it a permanent work, but never could get it sustained. I hope now, however, that we shall not be reduced in the future to such straits and failures as we have experienced in the past. We cannot make bricks without straw, and have been driven to despair in our efforts to find our own straw. Moreau and Felicity Sabbath School Missionary Societies shall be our Aaron and Moses to guide us out of the land of bondage, and give us liberty from oppression.

Accompanying I send you a photograph of the boarding school, twelve pupils and the teacher; also a photograph of myself, supported by my two assistant editors of the two Chinese newspapers, copies of which I also send.

It would be very gratifying to write you more at length this mail, but I cannot for want of time—will try to send you something interesting another time. By the way, I have just sent some little jottings to the Sunday School Visitor that may interest your little missionaries. They are dedicated to the Little Friends of the China Mission, among whom I am happy to number Moreau street Sunday school. May God abundantly bless you, my brother, in your noble vocation, and turn the hearts of the dear children unto the Lord, who hath said: "Of such is the kingdom of heaven."

In great haste, your brother in Christ, YOUNG J. ALLEN.

THE annual meeting of the College of Bishops is to be held in Nashville, on Monday, May 15. The Book Committee is to meet on Wednesday, May 17. The Sunday School Convention convenes on Thursday, May 18. The Board of Missions will meet during the same week.

NEW PUBLICATIONS.

THE SOUTHERN MAGAZINE.—We are indebted to the publishers, and also to Mr. Albert Eyrich, of this city, for copies of the February number of this excellent monthly. This magazine is a credit to the publishers, Messrs. Murdoch, Browne & Hill, of Baltimore. It is the Eclectic under a new name, and greatly improved. No one who subscribes for the Southern Magazine will regret it if its present high character is maintained.

THE SOUTHERN FARM AND HOME.—This excellent periodical is edited with much care and ability, and published in good style. It is taking rank with the best agricultural journals of the day, and should be taken and read by every farmer and planter in the South. Published by J. W. Burke & Co., Macon, Georgia. Price, $3 per annum.

THE NINETEENTH CENTURY presents a good table of contents this month. It is one of our most ably conducted Southern periodicals. Living-ston & Erckman, publishers, Charleston, South Carolina.

SUNDAY SCHOOL JOURNAL FOR THE LITTLE AND YOUNG PEOPLE.—This is one of our best Sunday school periodicals, about the size of our own Sunday School Magazine, and gotten up on the same plan. It contains uniform lessons for the month, called "The Berean Series," with a full review of the same. Published by Carlton & Lanahan, New York, for the Methodist Episcopal Church. Price, sixty cents per annum.

THE SINGING PEOPLE is a new monthly, published by Philip Phillips, New York, and devoted to the advocacy of congregational singing. The January number contains several pieces of music and a considerable amount of choice reading matter. The periodical is well conducted, and the cause which its publisher seeks to promote is of the greatest importance.

THE YOUNG PILOT is an original monthly for young people, published in Chicago by the Young Pilot Publishing Company. It is a new enterprise, as the present is No. 3 of volume 1. It is handsomely printed and is ably conducted. Price, per annum.

THE NINETEENTH CENTURY presents a good table of contents this month. It is one of our most ably conducted Southern periodicals. Living-ston & Erckman, publishers, Charleston, South Carolina.

SUNDAY SCHOOL JOURNAL FOR THE LITTLE AND YOUNG PEOPLE.—This is one of our best Sunday school periodicals, about the size of our own Sunday School Magazine, and gotten up on the same plan. It contains uniform lessons for the month, called "The Berean Series," with a full review of the same. Published by Carlton & Lanahan, New York, for the Methodist Episcopal Church. Price, sixty cents per annum.

THE SINGING PEOPLE is a new monthly, published by Philip Phillips, New York, and devoted to the advocacy of congregational singing. The January number contains several pieces of music and a considerable amount of choice reading matter. The periodical is well conducted, and the cause which its publisher seeks to promote is of the greatest importance.

THE YOUNG PILOT is an original monthly for young people, published in Chicago by the Young Pilot Publishing Company. It is a new enterprise, as the present is No. 3 of volume 1. It is handsomely printed and is ably conducted. Price, per annum.

THE SILVER TONGUE AND ORGAN REPERTORY is a monthly miscellany devoted to vocal and instrumental music. It is published by E. Needham & Son, New York, and bears also the imprint of J. Bayley & Co., Chicago, and of Philip Weinlein, New Orleans. Price, fifty cents per annum.

HEARTH AND HOME, published by Orange Judd & Co., New York, is one of our most valued exchanges. As a family paper it contains everything that can be desired in a secular newspaper. Special prominence is given to agriculture, live stock and ornamental gardening. The household department is worth more than the cost of the entire paper. Two pages are usually devoted to Our Boys and Girls. The illustrations each week are very superior.

APPLETONS' JOURNAL is well sustained in the literary and scientific departments. Its weekly illustrations, entitled Picturesque America, are as instructive as they are pleasing to all classes. The publishers are entitled to great praise for the manner in which this heavy journal is brought out.

ARTHUR'S LADIES' MAGAZINE, for February, and the Children's Hour, by the same publishers, are promising to hand, and always welcome. No better and no purer literature comes out from any press than that which is published by T. S. Arthur & Son, Philadelphia. The moral and religious tone is unexceptionable, whilst the artistic and literary merits are not excelled.

LIPPINCOTT'S MAGAZINE for the month has an interesting article on "The Ice Belt," also a good article on Lord Palmerston. "Rome on the Twentieth of September" is timely and graphic. "Our Mouthly Gossip" is diffuse, savory and readable throughout.

THE GALAXY, for February, contains several very taking articles. Among them we note, "Successful People," by Titus Munson Coan, "Sons of Imperial Sovereigns," by D. Piatt, "Mr. Lincoln and His Friends in Council," by Thurlow Weed, and "Mr. Black to Mr. Wilkinson," by J. S. Black. "Science Miscellany" contains an abundance of curious and useful paragraphs. "Memoranda," by Mark Twain, braces the usual amount of spice and humor.

THE MANUFACTURER AND BUILDER for January, 1871, is an excellent number. The drawings and engravings are numerous, and the entire contents are of the most instructive character. All who wish to be posted in the progress of science and mechanics will find this periodical perfectly invaluable. Western & Co., publishers, 37 Park Row, New York. $1.50 per annum.

THE ATLANTIC MONTHLY.—The February number has No. 1 of "Our Eyes and How to Take Care of Them," an article of practical value, which all may read with fit. "Castilian Days, No. 11," is about Spanish living and dying, and will not fail to entertain and instruct. "The Story of a Famous Book" tells the history of Franklin's autobiography. "The Origins of Folk Lore" will dispel many a pleasing historical illusion. It is very hard to give up William Tell. "Our Whispering Gallery" is occupied at large with Hawthorne and his works. "Recent Literature" is elaborate and discriminating, as usual. The peculiar school of religious thought to which the Atlantic belongs is of course prominent in such notices as that of "The Origin and Development of Religious Belief."

THE NEW YORK TEACHER AND AMERICAN EDUCATIONAL MONTHLY, for February, contains the usual amount of instructive and suggestive matter. An excellent periodical, and of special value to teachers. Published by J. W. Schemerhorn & Co., New York, at $2 a year.

FROST Eldridge & Brother, Philadelphia, we have received a neat 12mo—"Six Books of the Æneid of Virgil," by Thomas Chase, M. A. The text is in clear type, and is accompanied by copious explanatory notes and a vocabulary. Mr. Chase is professor of philosophy in Harvard College, and is competent for such a work. The student will be grateful for the notes. If there is any defect it is in the fact that the student is helped too much.

THE SUNDAY MAGAZINE, for this month, is rich in the best things, religious and literary. Our readers are aware that it is edited by Dr. Guthrie, of Scotland, and published by J. B. Lippincott & Co., Philadelphia. Price, $3.50 per annum. In the ample table of contents we note as specially valuable: The Evil; Woman's Work in the Church; How to Study the Old Testament; William Cowper and his Hymns; and Special Providence, Miracles and Prayer.

GOOD WORDS, for February, contains the usual amount of choice matter. We note particularly: Thoughts on the Temptation of Our Lord; Michael Faraday; German Miners; and Coral and Coral Reefs. J. B. Lippincott & Co., publishers, Philadelphia. Price, $2.50 per annum.

GEORGE P. ROWELL & Co.'s American Newspaper Reporter and Advertiser's Gazette. This is a weekly journal of newspaper intelligence, and gives a large amount of information about the press of the country. Everybody connected with the printing, publishing and advertising business will find it of the greatest value. It is a weekly, handsomely printed on delicately-tinted paper.

NEW ADVERTISEMENTS.

BE SURE to read the advertisement of Philip Werlein, whose good taste, indomitable energy and thorough acquaintance with musical instruments have enabled him to extend his business and enlarge his stock so rapidly that we are always surprised, on entering his large establishment, at the new additions to his beautiful assortment of instruments. Call at 80 and 82 Baronne street and see for yourselves.

N. JENKINS' "ANNIHILATOR," for the cure of rheumatism and gout, has been but recently offered to the public, and consequently is not as widely and favorably known as it must eventually be. It has already effected some wonderful cures, some of which are known to our personal friends. The proprietor is an acceptable member of the Methodist Episcopal Church South of this city, and would not, we believe, wittingly make any misrepresentation of facts. See advertisement in this issue.

THE LAW FIRM of Muse and Thompson have elsewhere a card in our present issue. They are competent and reliable gentlemen. Those who intrust business to them may expect prompt and faithful attention.

SEWING MACHINES.—Mr. Hedrick, at 159 and 118 Canal street, is a gentleman to whom we can conscientiously recommend our friends when they wish to secure good sewing machines. See advertisement elsewhere.

MESSRS. ZABLE & DALTON.—We take pleasure in calling attention to the advertisement of this worthy firm. Call at 62 Camp street and examine their assortment.

WE TAKE pleasure in calling attention to the card of General J. B Gordon, of Atlanta, Georgia, elsewhere. We are indebted also for the pleasure of a call from the general and Colonel Henry Heath, of New York, who are here in the interest of the University Publishing Company.

Obituaries.

Died, in Newton, January 29, at fifteen minutes past ten o'clock A. M., ANN MCINNIS GRIFFIN, wife of the late John Alford Griffin, of Pascagoula, Jackson county, Mississippi.

MRS. P. A. COWART was born January 25, 1849; married October 21, 1868, and died January 5, 1871.

Sister Cowart was an obedient child, full of meekness, and always endeavored to make all around her happy. She was devotedly attached to her husband, and ever ready to administer to his wants. She remained by his bedside, during the late epidemic, day and night for weeks, and would have preferred to die herself rather than see him die. She was a loving, faithful mother. While in health she was constantly singing, "O how I love Jesus," and during her last sufferings these words were in her heart and on her tongue. She gave her dear child specially to her mother and husband, requesting them to bring it up in the fear of the Lord, as she had dedicated it to him in baptism, hoping to meet it, with other loved ones, in heaven. Her husband and parents have promised to meet her in the home of the blessed. May they ever remember that promise.

A FRIEND.

Died, in Columbia, Louisiana, at one P. M. on Thursday, January 26, 1871, JOHN JACOB, oldest son of Dr. Stephen Decatur and Mrs. Mary P. Reynolds Tillman, aged eleven years, one month and fifteen days.

Our little friend and pupil has "passed from death unto life." His sickness was of but short duration. He bore his affliction without a murmur. When told that he must soon die and leave us he seemed perfectly resigned and willing to go. He was rational even to the very last moments of his life. A few moments before he breathed his last he called his weeping mother to his bed-side, told her that he was going home, and asked her to go with him. Then without a struggle the little Christian, with a face glowing with the smile of resignation, closed his eyes in death, and winged his way from earth to heaven.

What a change a short time has produced! This Friday evening we laid his lifeless form in the cold and silent grave.

To the grief-stricken ones he has left behind we would say, in behalf of his schoolmates: You have our deepest sympathies; and though we weep for the one we so much miss from our little circle, yet we must know that he has preceded us but a short time; and we feel fully assured that your noble boy has gone home to heaven, where he will live in peace and happiness forever, amid the boundless realms of eternal light and love.

D.

At a called meeting of Darlington Lodge, No. 149, Free and Accepted Masons, on the thirtieth of December, 1870, the following preamble and resolutions were unanimously adopted:

Whereas, the gavel has sounded, the craft has assembled, and lo! one is missing. It is our beloved brother, Rev. GEORGE H. CLINTON.

The working tools have dropped from his nerveless grasp; yet we know he has not left his work unfinished. Under his hand the rough ashlar has been polished, the gauge has ruled the hours, the plumb maintained its uprightness and the square its correctness.

IN MEMORIAM.

It has pleased almighty God, in his inscrutable providence, to remove from among us our highly esteemed brother, George H. Clinton. In thus taking a final leave of our beloved brother, it behooves us who knew him well to give to his memory something more than a parting tear.

As a man he was exemplary in his conduct, polished in his bearing, and ever ready to lend a helping hand to the needy.

As a minister of the Methodist Episcopal Church South he was equaled by few and excelled by none in expounding those religious principles which were the great aim of his life.

As a father we leave the tears and mourning of his family, who miss his guidance and feel their loss, to speak of his virtues as a husband and father.

As a Mason we find it difficult to express in words the extent of our loss. He was the life and light of his lodge. He was loved for his virtues, esteemed for his faithfulness to our order.

He is lost to us, but his memory will abide with us. Our grief is only assuaged by our confidence that the Grand Master of the Universe will give him a place in the Grand Lodge above, where his labors will know no sorrow, and where he will be crowned with a happy immortality. Therefore, be it

Resolved, That while we, as Free and Accepted Masons, recognize in his death a sad bereavement and a great loss to our order, we are assured, from the memory of his good, pure, upright and pious life, that our loss is his gain.

Resolved, That we sincerely condole with his bereaved widow and orphaned children, and tender them our warmest sympathy.

Resolved, That the lodge room be draped in mourning, and the brethren wear the usual badge of mourning for thirty days.

Resolved, That the secretary be ordered to send a copy of these resolutions to the widow of the deceased.

Resolved further, That the editors of the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE and Greensburg Star and Journal be requested to publish these resolutions.

WM. H. RAMSAY,
J. M. NETTLES,
A. W. CARRUTH,
Committee.

I certify that the foregoing is a true copy of the preamble and resolutions.

N. JENKINS' ANNIHILATOR,
A Purely Vegetable Compound
FOR THE PERMANENT CURE OF
RHEUMATISM AND GOUT.

WE TAKE PLEASURE in being able to announce to the public that the above mentioned painful diseases can be entirely and permanently cured. Many popular medicines of the day have rendered inestimable relief to sufferers from these diseases. But experience has demonstrated the fact that such relief is only temporary, and that the patient is not cured through their instrumentality.

The remedy now offered eradicates every vestige of the diseases of which it claims to be the "Annihilator," and there can be no relapse. Let all those, then, who are suffering from these complaints send for a bottle of N. JENKINS' ANNIHILATOR, and give it a trial. It is a simple preparation of purely vegetable substances, and can do no harm; whereas my unparalleled success in the use of it in the southern and southwestern parts of this State, (to which localities, and especially to Fisher T. Rawson and James E. Bradley, would I refer those who desire facts before trying it for themselves,) justifies me in offering the Annihilator as a positive cure for Rheumatism and Gout. This is a broad assertion, but a fair trial of it will certainly convince the most skeptical that it is not an exaggerated one.

What the Annihilator Will Do.

1. From one to two bottles will cure permanently any first attack of Rheumatism or Gout.
2. From two to twelve bottles, according to durat on of disease, will cure permanently any case of Rheumatism or Gout.
3. It will cure many cases of Neuralgia, from the simple fact that the origin of the disease has been of rheumatic character.

PRICE, $3 PER BOTTLE.

The Authorized Biography of Gen. Lee.
CARD FROM GEN. GORDON.

EDITOR NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE—Dear Sir: Permit me to reply to the inquiry of numerous correspondents in regard to an authentic Idography of General Lee by saying, through your columns, that at the request of General Lee's family Colonel Charles Marshall, his former Aid-de-camp and Military Secretary, is now writing a sketch of his life from his official and personal papers, furnished by the family for his exclusive use, which will very soon be published by the University Publishing Company, 4 Bond street, New York, in the "Memorial Volume" now being prepared by the Faculty of Washington College.

It will be an additional inducement to the Southern people to subscribe for this volume to know that the entire profit from its sale will go to the "Lee Memorial Fund."

The Child's Corner.

SIR LARK AND HIS WIFE.

BY GEORGE MACDONALD.

"Good morrow, my lord!" in the sky alone,
Sang the lark, as the sun ascended his throne.
"Shine on me, my lord; I only am come,
Of all your servants, to welcome you home
I have flown for an hour, right up, I swear,
To catch the first shine of your golden hair".

"Must I thank you, then," said the king,
"Sir Lark,
For flying so high, and hating the dark;
You ask a full cup for half a thirst:
Half is love of me, and half love to be first.
There's many a bird that makes no haste,
But waits till I come. That's as much to my taste."

And the king hid his head in a turban of cloud;
And the lark stopped singing, quite vexed and cowed.
But he flew up higher, and thought, "Anon,
The wrath of the king will be over and gone;
And his crown, shining out of the cloudy fold,
Will change my brown feathers to a glory of gold."

So he flew with the strength of a lark he flew,
But as he rose the cloud rose too;
And not a gleam of the golden hair
Came through the depth of the misty air;
Till, weary with flying, with sighing sore,
The strong sun-seeker could do no more.

His wings had had no chrism of gold,
And his feathers felt withered and worn and old;
And he sank, and quivered, and dropped like a stone,
And there on his nest, where he left her, alone,
Sat his little wife on her little eggs,
Keeping them warm with wings and legs.

Did I say alone? Ah, no such thing!
Full in her face was shining the king.
"Welcome, Sir Lark! You look tired," said he.
"Up is not always the best way to me.
While you have been singing so high and away,
I have been shining to your little wife all day."

He had set his crown all about the nest,
And out of the midst shone her little brown breast;
And so glorious was she in russet gold,
That for wonder and awe Sir Lark grew cold.
He popped his head under her wing, and lay
As still as a stone till the king was away.

SERMON BY BISHOP KEENER.

The following sermon was delivered at the Sunday school mass meeting in St. Louis during the semi-centennial services. Our young readers, and old ones too, will thank the Bishop for this entertaining discourse. We give it as published in the St. Louis Christian Advocate.

"There is a lad here who hath five barley loaves and two small fishes."—John vi; 9.

Let us consider:

I. THE LAD.—II. THE LOAVES.—III. THE LORD.

I. THE LAD:

1. The only lad spoken of in the New Testament. The other evangelists say nothing of him, and because so little is said we are interested the more.

2. We imagine him carrying that basket of bread, and wonder how he managed to keep it amid five regiments of men. We presently understand that he was with the company of the disciples—probably going along with the Saviour to take care of the bread. What a fine opportunity he had to see! and a youth would see many items that older eyes could not. At any rate, the lad that carried the bread that day ought to be remembered. Little supposed he early in the morning, when he started out, that he was carrying food for five regiments of men—as little as the people supposed it.

3. I suppose his mother sent him. Boys are not thoughtful; they think of their own wants, but not often of other people's—one of those godly women that ministered to the Master, and were mindful of him, for he was forgetful of himself, and he and his little company were often hungry. We can almost see her putting the bread in the basket, and the two little fish, may be taken by the boy's own hook, and you may be sure a white napkin over it all to keep out the dust. Early in the morning he started from Bethsaida. The stream of people showed him the way. When he got there in sight of Christ he reported to Andrew—probably his uncle—and to Peter.

4. He waited a long time, and saw and heard a great deal. Boys always get up very close on such occasions. They worm in or squeeze through; and when a boy is working his way to Christ I don't care how much he pushes. On that occasion he was at a good point to see the miracles, for the Saviour that day healed many. Oh, it is a great thing for a boy to get up close to Christ. His words and his works are just as well suited to boys as to men.

But now the evening began to come, and presently Andrew came and looked in the basket to know exactly what was in it. Well, the principal thing in it was bread.

II. THE LOAVES:

1. The bread was not wheat, but barley; but, I doubt not, as good and white as bread could be; about enough for twelve men, with a little relish of fish. The company of disciples were fishermen, and it is very likely the father of the lad was a fisherman. These fish show where the bread came from.

2. The loaves were flat and made to break, not to cut. Presently the lad heard the Saviour's order, and saw the disciples fixing the people—getting them into companies of hundreds and fifties, and making them all sit down; no confusion, and then they could count of themselves how many there were. Fifty men or one hundred men must sit down in ranks, one behind another. The women and children were not omitted—thrown in.

3. Next he saw the Master take the bread in his hands and the fish, and bless it, and say grace over it. Then he saw him hand loaf after loaf and fish after fish to his disciples, and they handed them to the multitude. It took a good while; it was a tremendous quantity of bread and fish, for the people were very hungry, and they ate squarely as much as they could. Probably some had not had a good full meal in a long time before. There was more than they could eat. Each disciple had a basket full after it was all over—twelve baskets full.

4. It was a wilderness, and in just such a place the children of Israel, two thousand years before, had been fed with manna, but they had to cook it. Moses called for manna; Christ gave bread.

5. Bread is made usually of wheat or barley or corn. Wheat and corn are made largely of water, earth and sunshine—without turning sunshine into wheat and then into bread, the Master turned sunshine at once into bread. We don't see any water in the air, but there is a great deal there. So there is doubtless bread in its air state. At any rate, this showed him to be the Lord of the harvest, both of the earth and of the sea.

III. Next we come to THE LORD, the "true bread," as he calls himself.

1. Directly after this miracle he told the people that he was the Bread that came down from heaven; and if he could make bread without seed is he not the true Nourisher—the Living Bread?

2. There are two sorts of life. There is the life of the body—blood life; and there is the life of the soul—spirit life. Both need food. You may feed your body and starve your soul. Many people are distressed to know how they shall get bread for themselves and their children who never care what food their souls have—so there are two sorts of bread.

3. The Saviour did not make barley bread because it was so necessary, because the people might have done without it; but to show them that he was the source of life—the support of their being—and that he could feed their souls with his life, for he was the bread of God. Indeed, he told them that unless they received life from him they could not live; but if they took of his Spirit they should never die. "He that eateth of this bread shall live forever."

We now wish you—

1. Ask yourself, How can I eat this bread that came down from heaven—Jesus Christ? By believing on him. "He that believeth on me shall live forever."

2. Always keep near the Saviour and the Saviour's people.

3. A small boy can carry food to five thousand people if the Lord bless that which he may carry. So when we are doing even a small act for Christ's sake it may become a very large one in God's providence.

4. The Saviour will at last make bread for us in heaven, and feed us directly out of glory, which is heaven's sunshine.

5. If the Saviour can make a great deal of bread out of a loaf, he can use a very small boy to advance his glory on earth, and at last make him brighter than a seraph.

THE trouble with many young Christians is that they are incessantly pining for assurance and comfort instead of hungering after righteousness. Worldly gratification they could never think of seeking. But spiritual joy is quite a different matter. Now it is as easy to be selfish in the pursuit of spiritual joy as of any other. Not happiness, but the will of God, is the thing to seek. Astronomers often get their best view of a star by turning the telescope toward some star near it, and thus seeing the first by a side light. So he who follows duty comes soonest to happiness.

SCRIPTURE.—At a Sabbath school concert in Worcester, one Sunday evening, a little boy stood up to say his piece, and forgetting the words of the text hesitated a moment, then with all the assurance possible said: "Blessed are the shoemakers." There is many a worse perversion of Scripture, prompted by the sect-spirit among those "children of larger growth" usually called men and women.

The Farm and Garden.

Growing the Quince.—Varieties.

"In the Western States there is little attention paid to growing this excellent and useful fruit, and many persons are to be found who do not know the fruit when it is placed before them. Within a very few years our people will begin to realize that it is a fruit very easily grown, and paying the grower even better than the pear; good, well grown quinces bringing in market from $8 to $10 per barrel—not half the price of fine pears, but the quince is subject to no disease here, and is very productive. Where you give the quince as good cultivation as the pear enormous crops are the result. The quince needs rich soil, and rather rich and cool; there should be a yearly application of rotten chips, mold or old decaying straw thrown around them. The pruning should be sparingly done, cutting out only such twisted or ill-formed branches as sometimes occur. The bush or shrub form seems best suited to the quince, and, if attended to by a little shortening in of outer branches, will form a beautiful sight when loaded with its golden fruit. Trees six to seven years of age, that have been well grown, will usually produce from two to three bushels to the tree. This fruit makes a most delicious preserve, and when mixed half and half with sweet apples is a fine fruit to put up in cans, giving a flavor found in no other fruit. The orange quince is the only variety that is worthy of cultivation for its fruit; the Angers is used for a stock for the pear, and is of no value as a fruit; the Fontenay is also used for stocks; the Portugal is a fruit of good quality, but a shy bearer, and tender; the Rea's mammoth is a seedling of the orange, of large size and fair quality, the tree a strong grower and very upright, but, unfortunately, is not entirely hardy."

We clipped the above from some exchange we neglected to mark. We have asked often and often, why are there not more quince trees planted? Throughout the entire South this fruit is little known and used. No doubt of its being a market fruit, if enough were grown; and if planted on proper land, and well taken care of, it will pay. Who has ever tried for new and improved varieties? Where is the public spirited man who will make this fruit a study and experiment? Produce large, juicy, sweet quinces, and it is a fortune.—Southern Farmer.

THE editor of the Morehouse Conservative gives sound advice to planters. In an article on the importance of raising their own corn and meat, we find the following suggestive paragraphs:

Last spring, coming up from New Orleans, after passing Trinity, at the mouth of Black river, the boat at each landing put out sack corn almost invariably the first thing. Now think of it, will you, ye people! producing cotton at losing rates, and buying corn from the West! If this isn't folly, then we don't know what it is. We have observed closely, and have the observations of others, and this is the result: The Southern planter who always has a little corn for sale, who is never without some little meat to spare, who can always furnish his neighbor with seed potatoes, seed peas, etc., is the man who is ever in easy circumstances—who is never in debt; who is never in debt to his merchant; who don't have to borrow money at ruinous rates to pay his taxes, etc.

But outside of all this, if our planters would only plant just what they could save, the matter would be improved. We said, on another occasion, and repeat it here, there has been cotton enough lost in this parish the past year—now standing in the fields or lying on the ground—even at present prices, to furnish a large colony with bread. How perfectly suicidal such a course! Corn with us is scarce and high, and the West must again furnish us with meat. And here, in the presence of present low figures for cotton, and as we stand upon the threshold of the new year, "Shall we have a change?" Shall the interest of the whole country, the vitality of every industrial pursuit, be sacrificed to this fatally foolish course? We have said before, and we devoutly believe it, that one-half the past crop of cotton would bring better prices, supply the whole country with bread, keep every one out of debt, and render the planter independent and comfortable. But to continue the course of the past few years we need look for no material prosperity—for no home improvements and home enjoyments. The cloud will still hang upon our sky, and virtual penury the final result.

PEARS AT THE SOUTH.—While it is doubtless true that some varieties, which are very fine in New England, will not succeed at all here, still it is an unquestionable fact that the varieties which do succeed here are larger and of higher flavor than the same varieties in a colder latitude. This is the case with the Bartlett, Duchesse d'Angoulemo and Seckel. The Bartlett, especially, is fully fifty per cent. larger, and of far superior flavor. Indeed, this variety attains its greatest perfection in the States bordering on the gulf, and, besides, is the surest crop that can be grown. We have had the trees in bearing some ten years, and never a failure. It succeeds equally well in this climate on both quince and pear, and comes into bearing earlier than almost any other variety—say in two to three years on the quince, and three to four years on the pear. The fruit is subject to no insect depredations, and consequently is always fair and perfect, and if pulled from the tree when green, but fully matured—as it always should be—and placed in a cool and dry room, ripens to perfection. In its season—say, in this latitude, from the middle of July to the middle of August—the Bartlett has no competitor. And we desire here to call the attention of the people of the South to the importance, in a money point of view, of growing this fruit on a large scale for the Northern markets. Throughout the United States the Bartlett is the most popular pear grown, and always finds a ready sale at high prices in all the Northern cities. And, as it requires to be picked while green and hard, it will bear transportation to the remotest section of our country without the least danger of injury. The great fruit markets of Boston, New York, Philadelphia, Cincinnati, Louisville, Chicago and St. Louis could be supplied a month or six weeks in advance of the time of ripening there. Indeed, our entire crop could be disposed of before theirs would come upon the market. The business once established, with a full supply, and there is no estimating the extent of the demand; at the present time we know of no business so invlting, so full of promise, to us of the extreme South as this. A few acres in Bartlett pear trees, with proper culture and management, would be a fortune. Who of our readers will try it?—C. C. Langdon, in Mobile Register.

YOUNG FRUIT TREES.—The most vital period in the life of a fruit tree is during the first three years of its youth. It is then only when it can be properly trained, easily managed and well protected. If, as many undoubtedly are, they are crammed hastily into small holes dug in hard soil, left without manure, permitted to be overrun with grass and weeds, or what is still worse, the ground persistently cropped with grain, is it at all surprising so many trees fail, and so many orchards are utterly starved? Treatment like this is nothing but throwing away capital, with absolutely no prospect of returns. If, on the other hand, a few trees are well planted in good, deep, rich soil, well pruned yearly, and kept clear of insects and worms, it takes but a few years to bring them into a productive condition, and ten trees well cared for will yield five-fold more than one hundred indifferently planted. The contrast between thrifty and unthrifty trees stares us everywhere we go. We are astonished, after all the exhortations of the press to cultivators "to take care of their fruit trees," to see how little heed the great mass give to it. Young trees must be well treated. Plant less rather than more; always manure highly, and once each year examine the trunk and bark for worms. Precautions like these, demanding only a few moments' time to each tree, are the Alpha and Omega of successful fruit culture. Care for your trees as well as for your children, and it will never be said of you, for your own hands will pluck the fair fruit that never would come if the trees had been left to themselves.—Horticulturist.

"He planted for his heirs,"

ON WEDNESDAY, the eighteenth ultimo, two hundred delegates met in convention at Philadelphia to forward the agitation in favor of an amendment to the Constitution which shall recognize Christianity as the national religion. Ex-Governor Pollock, of Pennsylvania, was elected chairman, and Rev. G. E. Smith, of Connecticut, secretary. Dr. Edwards, of Baltimore, Dr. Sloan, of Pittsburg, and Prof. McIlvaine, of the University of Pennsylvania, made speeches. The following resolution, which was duly carried, embodied the sense and purpose of the convention:

"That in view of the controlling power of the Constitution in shaping State as well as national policy, it is of immediate importance to public morals and to social order to secure such an amendment as will indicate that this is a Christian nation, and place Christian laws, institutions and usages in our government on an undeniable legal basis in the fundamental law of our nation—specially those which secure a proper oath, and which protect society against blasphemy, Sabbath-breaking and polygamy."—Christian Union.

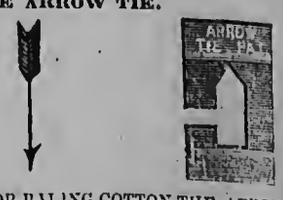
THE ARROW TIE.



FOR BALING COTTON THE ARROW TIE is the most popular, being the best Cotton Tie in use.

Planters and Cotton Press men everywhere prefer it to all others.

THE ARROW TIE

was used to cover MORE THAN HALF THE CROP OF 1869, giving entire satisfaction.

The patentee and manufacturer of the celebrated ARROW TIE, J. J. McComb, formerly of New Orleans, now residing in Liverpool, having control of the best and most extensive Rolling Mills in Europe, is constantly importing large stocks of this popular Tie, manufactured of the very best quality of English iron, to meet the increasing demand for it throughout all the Cotton States.

Planters can buy or order the ARROW TIE of all dealers in Iron Ties, and of cotton merchants generally, at the lowest market price; and we respectfully solicit the patronage of Planters and Factors everywhere.

BRACES AND TRUSSES.—DR. JOHN LANGELL informs the medical profession and others that he has constantly on hand and for sale a complete assortment of RUNG'S TRUSSES, Spinal and Shoulder Braces, and other appliances for the prevention, relief and cure of general debility, feeble weakness and derangements of public speakers and singers, palpitation of the heart, bronchitis and weakness of the lungs, weakness and deformity, dyspepsia and nervous affections, constipation and chronic diarrhea, female derangements and extreme displacements of the womb, RUPTURE, Piles, prolapsus-ani, and weakness of the male and female system.

These light, cool and springy auxiliaries are the special favorites of the profession, are intensely common-sense and rational in their action; supply a missing link in treatment; place the above affections in a more and more hopeful light, and often effect cures where medicine can only mitigate, more than it can cure a hernia or a dislocated joint.

He specially desires an examination of these appliances by the professional brothers. Where necessary the professional application of the above braces will be under our supervision or that of the family physician.

These valuable appliances are sanctioned by a large number of the medical profession in the United States and Europe as the best adapted to fulfill the purpose for which they are intended, and the Trusses and Braces are adopted by the United States government for the use of the army and navy. Terms—Consultations free. Send for their pamphlet, it is better to call.

Guyot's Geographical Text-Books.

"Incomparably superior to anything published."—Agassiz.

Introduction to the Study of Geography.
Elementary Geography.
Intermediate Geography.
Common School Geography.

Guyot's System is approved and indorsed by the most distinguished literary and scientific men of our nation; such as Profs. Agassiz, Dana, Tenney, Henry and others, celebrated in science throughout Europe as well as at home.

The fact that ONE MILLION (1,000,000) copies of the work are in use in the schools of our country, at the present time, is proof of the unparalleled success attending the New System, for no other series of books ever published in America have ever secured so rapid and extensive introduction. They are the text-books in nearly all the colleges, seminaries, normal schools, etc., in the United States; in the public schools of the cities of New York, Brooklyn, Rochester, and most of the cities and towns of the Eastern States; Cincinnati, Cleveland, Columbus, Springfield, Toledo, Marietta, and most of the other important towns and cities, numbering nine thousand schools in Ohio, and hundreds of towns and cities in the other Western States, while in the Southern States and California they are being extensively adopted.

Believing that the publication of Professor Guyot's series has marked a new and better era in the presentation of geographical science, that by it the pupils of this generation obtain a clearer, more definite and extended knowledge of the world on which they live, and that it is so systematized as to render that knowledge more valuable and permanent, we commend it to the attention of interested in educational improvements and progress.

DR. DEEMS' SERMONS,

AS PREACHED FROM THE PULPIT OF

are published and mailed, postage paid, to subscribers regularly during the week succeeding their delivery. No sermons are so elegantly printed either in Europe or in this country.

The Church of the Strangers is a Christian communion, composed in part of persons who have been members of the Baptist, Congregational, Episcopal, Lutheran, Methodist, Presbyterian and other denominations, and in part of those who have made a confession of faith under the ministry of the Pastor. We believe ourselves to be the first unsectarian church established in America. Our symbol of faith is the Apostles' Creed, our ritual is simple, our communion is open, and our seats are all free. We are at war with no existing denomination of the Christian Church, but are endeavoring to supplement the labors of them all, and are at perfect peace with all who "love our Lord Jesus Christ in sincerity." Our aim is to demonstrate the practicability of Christian Unity, to keep up a Free Christian Church in this city, and to furnish a Sunday Home for Strangers whom pleasure or business may bring to the metropolis.

"As brilliant as those from Plymouth pulpit, they are sounder in theology and purer in style."—Banner of the Church, Atlanta, Ga.

FIRST BIBLE PRINTED HERE.

A bibliograghical essay on "The First American Edition of the English Bible," by the Rev. Dr. Joseph A. Murray, of Carlisle, Pennsylvania, was read to the Numismatic and Antiquarian Society of Philadelphia on the fifth instant. The first permanent colony did not arrive till 1607, on the coast of Virginia—the very year in which our present version of the Bible was commenced in the mother country. In 1620 the sturdy and virtuous "Pilgrim Fathers," having their English Bibles with them, reached their New England home. And during almost the entire reign of eight sovereigns in succession the sacred volume had been uniformly imported. During all that time not a man or family possessed a Bible—not a copy was read or heard read—that had not been brought across the Atlantic. The first Bible in English, with the American imprint, was not published till more than one hundred and fifty years after the arrival of the Mayflower, or about eighty years ago! In 1664 the Rev. John Eliot had printed at Cambridge, Massachusetts, the Bible in the language of the Natick Indians. This was the first Bible printed, but not being in the English language, as patent royal or cum privilegio was not requisite. In 1743 Christopher Sauer, or Sower, at Germantown, Pennsylvania, published the first German edition of the Bible, "after having been three years in the press." But it was not until about one hundred and seventy years after the first English colony had been planted in America (at Jamestown, Virginia, 1607) that the Bible, in the English language, was printed. During this long period, as stated, the colonists were dependent upon the press of the old country for their supply of the sacred Scriptures. After independence had been declared, however, such was the scarcity of Bibles that Dr. Allison, pastor of the First Presbyterian church in Philadelphia, and others, memorialized Congress on the subject, and that body, in 1777, appointed a committee to confer with printers, with the view of having published thirty thousand copies at the expense of Congress, "to be reimbursed by the sale of the books." (Journal, September 11, 1777.) The difficulty of obtaining type and paper induced the committee to recommend to Congress to direct the Committee on Commerce to import, at the national expense, twenty thousand English Bibles from Holland, Scotland or elsewhere; and Congress ordered the importation. But afterward, when the unsettled state of the country and its commerce prevented the execution of this order, Congress resumed the subject of printing, which was referred to a committee of three, in which the Rev. George Duffield, of the Presbyterian Church, and the Rev. William White, of the Episcopal Church, chaplains of Congress, assisted. And the first American edition of the Bible in the English language was printed in 1781-82, in small duodecimo form and brevier type.

LAZINESS IN GOD'S HOUSE.—Posture in prayer is of some account. Standing, kneeling and prostrate, are all mentioned in the Bible. A modern invention adds to those of scriptural authority sitting in the pews. This we are far enough behind the spirit of the age to consider unbecoming and irreverent. It is a city habit mainly. But you will find here and there in country churches, where the old devout habits cannot all be broken in upon, the city style is copied by a select few. This is disrespectful to the congregation and to God. It wears a lazy look. It is not worshiping God with the body and spirit, which are his.

Let all things be done decently and in order. This requires all to join in the worship of the congregation in united acts of divine service. When they sing, then sing; when they pray, then pray, in the attitude of the adopted custom.—Reformed Church Messenger.

INCONSISTENCY.—The son of Scipio Africanus, a profligate young man, wore on his finger a ring upon which the image of his father was engraved. The Roman censors were so much disgusted with the degenerate son wearing upon his person the picture of his noble parent, that they insisted on his taking the ring from his fingers. They considered that he was insulting, rather than honoring, his father by wearing it. And thus will God regard all his degenerate children who bear his name without conformity to his image. In the army of Alexander the Great there was a soldier of the name of Alexander. To him it was said: "Either be brave or change your name."

CONSTANT occupation prevents temptation.

Scientific.

INDIA RUBBER INEXHAUSTIBLE.—The belt of land around the globe, five hundred miles north and five hundred miles south of the equator, abounds in trees producing the gum of India rubber. They can be tapped, it is stated, for twenty successive seasons without injury; and the trees stand so close that one man can gather the sap of eighty in a day, each tree yielding, on an average, three tablespoonfuls daily. Forty-three thousand of these trees have been counted in a tract of country thirty miles long by eight wide. There are in America and Europe more than one hundred and fifty manufactories of India rubber articles, employing some five hundred operatives each, and consuming more than ten million pounds of the gum per year, and the business is considered to be still in its infancy. But to whatever extent it may increase, there will still be plenty of rubber to supply the demand.—Scientific American.

A VERY valuable discovery has been made in surgery in the matter of producing a covering of skin over large wounds. It has always been difficult to cause the healing of wounds where any large surface of integument was gone, as nothing but skin will produce new skin, and this for only a short distance around the margin. It is now shown that a very small portion of skin transplanted upon the wound will form a nucleus for growth, although the transplanted portion seems to fall off. Dr. Frank H. Hamilton has, with his usual enthusiasm and skill, tried the new practice, sacrificing, in the first instance, a portion of his own personal integument for the benefit of his patient and science. Six successes have been the result in the Charity Hospital in this city, while experience has shown the cause of failure in others. The credit of this discovery is due to M. Reverdin, a young surgeon of Paris; and it is now claimed to be shown by experiments in that country that it is only necessary to scrape epidermal cells from healthy skin, and sprinkle them upon a wound, when they will act like spores in producing other cells and the growth of skin.—Independent.

TO PREVENT the possibility of hydrophobia becomes instantly the anxious thought of any one who has had the misfortune to be bitten by a dog. The proportion of venomous bites to those which are harmless is doubtless small, and yet precautions can never be out of place. Dr. Nathan R. Smith gives in the Baltimore Sun some valuable hints. A deep wound is less dangerous than a scratch, because of the effusion of blood, which washes away the poison. The virus produces no immediate irritation, but develops the disease commonly in about six weeks. For prevention of this fatal issue, let the wound be instantly washed again and again with soap and water. Then apply a pencil of caustic potash, holding it firmly in the bite fifteen seconds, without regard to the severe pain. If the potash cannot be immediately obtained, it can be extemporized by boiling down the lye of wood ashes to the consistency of molasses and applying that with a stick. Milder caustics are not reliable, though dilute nitric or sulphuric acid may be used. After the caustic the wound may be poulticed for two days, and then dressed with simple salve. This treatment, the doctor thinks, will always prevent the dread disease.

IF WE understand the brief telegrams from the English party which observed the solar eclipse in Sicily, the weather was not quite favorable, but the sun's corona was found to be one hundred and fifty thousand miles in height. The American observations were confirmed, which, we should suppose, indicated certain spectroscopic lines, especially those found in the lights of the aurora. But the telegram from the Spanish party says that the corona gives no lines, but a continuous spectrum. The polariscope gave doubtful results. Two good photographs of the corona were taken. Some very curious solar protuberances recently observed are figured and described in Nature. From a very brilliant protuberance a fragment was seen to detach itself, and rise like a cloud, growing larger and dimmer. It disappeared in about twelve and a half minutes, after making a sweep of ninety thousand miles. Another rose to about the same height, as a vertical streak made up of spindle-form filaments. Another observation showed several well defined streamers, which appeared to be composed of matter violently ejected; but at a certain point of elevation, violently deflected by some force acting at right angles, so that the streamers at their tops were bent over into a position at right angles with the vertical current. Powerful currents at a great elevation above the sun are thus indicated, showing also the presence of an atmosphere extending far beyond the limits which calculation would assign.—Independent.

NEW ORLEANS MARKETS.

From the N. O. Price Current.

The general market has continued quiet, but some branches of the wholesale trade have shown more movement in filling orders for spring goods, groceries, etc. Sugar has been in fair request, and most of the receipts have met a pretty ready sale at about previous rates. The better qualities of molasses have maintained their previous position, but the lower grades have been extremely dull, and ruled still more in favor of buyers. Operations in Western produce have been restricted by light supplies.

COTTON.—The following are the arrivals since the tenth instant:

Louisiana and Mississippi	bales	28,020
Lake		106
Arkansas		5,303
Florida		44
Mobile		299
Texas		201
Total		33,973

On Saturday operations were restricted by scant supplies of clean, bright cottons and even-running lists, which were the most in request, while the poorer qualities were neglected, and the sales did not exceed 6,700 bales, ruling at prices which required no change in quotations, except a reduction of ⅛c. in the inside figures for good ordinary. On Monday the demand was more active, and 9,200 bales changed hands, at rather easier prices for mixed lists and stained or dusty lots, but, if anything, stiffer rates for the higher grades and nearly all clean, bright lots, but without showing a quotable variation in any description. On Tuesday the market opened without any marked variation in prices, although the lower grades were more irregular and unsteady, but after the receipt of the dispatches, reporting a decline of ⅛c. in gold at New York, factors met the demand more freely, and accepted offers which they had previously refused. Strict ordinary sold at 12c. and a fraction less, and strict good ordinary at 13⅜ and 13½c., but low middling, middling and strict middling, although hardly as buoyant as on Monday, were without any quotable change. Good middling sold at 15½c., which was easier. The demand was fair, and the business embraced 8,000 bales.

This makes an aggregate for the past three days of 21,300 bales.

The receipts at this port since the first of September (exclusive of the arrivals from Mobile, Florida and Texas) are 858,092 bales, against 738,711 bales to the same date last year, and the increase in the receipts at all the ports, up to the latest dates, as compared with last year, is 564,362 bales. In the exports from the United States to foreign countries, as compared with the same dates last year, there is an increase of 331,210 bales to Great Britain, 66,104 to other foreign ports, and a decrease of 109,699 to France.

Referring to our remarks above, we quote as follows:

Ordinary	11¼ to 12
Good ordinary	12⅞ to 13⅛
Low middling	13⅞ to 14⅛
Middling	14⅜ to 14⅝
Strict middling	15 to 15⅛

SUGAR.—The demand has been only moderate since our last review, and the supplies on Saturday and Monday were sold slowly at about previous rates, say 5 to 5⅛c. per pound for inferior, 6 to 6⅛c. for common, 7 to 7⅛c. for good common, 7⅞ to 8c. for fair, 8¼ to 8⅝c. for good fair, 9 to 9¼c. for fully fair, 9½ to 9¾c. for prime, 10 to 10½c. for choice, 11¾ to 12⅛c. for yellow clarified, and 12¾ to 13¾c. for white.

MOLASSES.—The demand has been only moderate since our last review, and previous prices were barely sustained. The poor qualities, which are most abundant, are very dull.

MONETARY.—Gold, 110⅞ to 111⅛.

American silver half dollars, 108½ to 109, and Mexican dollars at 1% per cent. premium in gold.

The sales of warrants include $15,000 new State on Saturday at 71, and $600 new Metropolitan Police at 98½; $3,100 former on Monday at 71, $16,000 at 75, and $900 at 75½; and $1,100 on Tuesday at 75. Dealers have bought new State at 74, new Metropolitan Police at 98, and asked 75 for the former, and 98½ to 99 for the latter.

City Treasury notes are quoted at 24 per cent. discount.

NEW ORLEANS, February 6, 1871.

In compliance with the requirements of the act of Congress entitled "An act to provide a national currency secured by a pledge of United States bonds," approved June 3, 1864, and of the eighteenth section thereof, I publish herewith the certificate of authority issued to the New Orleans National Bank of New Orleans.

RICHARD JONES, Cashier.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT.
Office of Controller of the Currency.
Washington, January 30, 1871.

WHEREAS, By satisfactory evidence presented to the undersigned, it has been made to appear that THE NEW ORLEANS NATIONAL BANK, in the city of New Orleans, in the county of Orleans, and State of Louisiana, has been duly organized under and according to the requirements of the act of Congress entitled "An act to provide a national currency secured by a pledge of United States bonds, and to provide for the circulation and redemption thereof," approved June 3, 1864, and has complied with all the provisions of said act required to be complied with before commencing the business of banking under said act.

Now, therefore, I, John J. Knox, Acting Controller of the Currency, do hereby certify that "The New Orleans National Bank," in the city of New Orleans, in the county of Orleans, and State of Louisiana, is authorized to commence the business of banking under the act aforesaid.

In testimony whereof, witness my hand and seal of office this thirtieth day of January, 1871. JOHN JAY KNOX.

by which the business men of the city could bring their merchandise, trades, professions, and the like, before country readers. This is easily understood when it is remembered that FOUR HUNDRED PREACHERS, scattered throughout the Mississippi, Alabama and Louisiana Methodist Conferences, are all more or less active agents for the paper; and when it is also remembered that our paper circulates among a large class of people who seldom see any other New Orleans paper.

VOL. XVII. NEW ORLEANS, THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 23, 1871. NO. 6.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

San Francisco, Feb. 16.—The steamship Great Republic has arrived from China and Japan, bringing nine Japanese students for San Francisco, seven for New York and thirteen for Europe, including one prince. Lord Howard de Walden is among the European-bound passengers. She also brought one hundred and sixty-four Chinese. Her freight list contains 5,700 packages of tea to be shipped overland to Chicago, 1,140 packages for Boston, 1,100 packages of tea and a large quantity of silk for New York; also a list of freight for the States via Panama.

Advices from China and Japan report the smallpox as prevalent at Yokahama. A number of the crew of the United States steamer Benicia had been attacked and several had died. No officer had been attacked. The crews of several German vessels in the harbor had also suffered. The disease had assumed the form of an epidemic at Jeddo on the twelfth of January.

Messrs. Dallas and Ring, employed as teachers in a Japanese college, were attacked and cut down with swords; they were frightfully but not fatally injured. Their assailants escaped.

Mr. Seward had left Hong Kong for Singapore. Before leaving he held a reception at the American consulate, at which he made a speech, commenting at length on the course pursued by our people toward China, intimating that we must be prepared to be just toward the people of that country before demanding an extension of commercial privileges and relations. He thought the future of Japan assured, and considered the condition of affairs in China not more discouraging than those of Japan eight years since. He returned thanks for the courtesies shown him, by the natives and foreigners alike, in all parts of both empires. His health is much improved.

Washington, Feb. 16.—The Committee on Reconstruction have ordered the chairman to report a bill repealing the test oath, according to the President's recommendation. There were two negative votes, Charles H. Porter and Hamilton Ward. The committee also reported, but had recommitted with the privilege to print Mr. Cobb's bill creating a Ku-Klux commissioner in each county of the States lately in insurrection, and Kentucky. The bill gives the commissioner extraordinary judicial powers. He can call out the posse comitatus or militia, or the nearest army or naval forces to serve his processes.

Washington, Feb. 16.—The House commerce committee to-day decided not to disturb the railroad bridge over the Rigolets, except to require the draw to be put in line with the current.

Representatives Sheldon and Sypher were before the Appropriations Committee urging the completion of the customhouse at New Orleans. The hearing seems favorable.

Washington, Feb. 17.—House.—Mr. Jones, of Kentucky: Petition in favor of the Cincinnati and Southern railroad.

The House then went into committee on army appropriations. Speeches limited to half hour. The bill appropriates $27,500,000. The committee rose without action.

The conference report, territorializing the District, passed and goes to the President, who will, undoubtedly, approve it.

The balance of the day was occupied with local legislation.

House adjourned.

Senate.—Mr. Fenton presented petitions from leading New York merchants asking a correction of the abuses in customs regulations.

Appropriations resumed. An amendment to strike from the legislative, executive and judiciary appropriation the clause inserted last year by Senator Drake was proposed, which prohibited as evidence in the Court of Claims certain Presidential pardons.

The amendment authorizes any pardon or amnesty granted before the suppression of the rebellion under the proclamation of President Lincoln. This amendment is not to apply to suits in the Court of Claims arising under the act of March, 1863, to provide for the collection of abandoned property and the prevention of frauds within the insurrectionary districts. The claims opened by this amendment are about $10,000,000.

The amendment does not help persons pardoned by President Johnson after April, 1865.

The amendment was rejected by a vote of thirty-two to nineteen.

Mr. Trumbull renewed portions of the amendment repealing the proviso of the law which makes a pardon the evidence of the guilt of any party accepting it.

Mr. Conkling argued that portion was virtually a confession of guilt.

Mr. Trumbull's amendment that a pardon should not exclude a pardoned party from the Court of Claims was carried by the casting vote of the Vice President.

The debate was quite bitter, and showed no disposition to give Southern claims any more generous consideration than heretofore. The executive session then adjourned.

Washington, Feb. 17.—The Appropriations Committee of the House have agreed upon $175,000 for the New Orleans customhouse.

Mr. Wheeler, chairman of the Committee on Pacific Railroads, gave notice that he would, on Tuesday, call up the Southern Pacific railroad bill.

The West Point case was resumed, and the resolutions finally adopted as reported by the Committee on Military Affairs. It restores the three deserters, and orders a court of inquiry.

The bill for the safety of travelers carried by steam was taken up. It contains seventy-one sections, and covers fifty-five printed pages. It establishes regulations against fire, leaking, explosions and other accidents. The bill passed, and goes to the Senate. House adjourned.

Washington, Feb. 18.—House.—The conference committee on consular and diplomatic appropriations reported, and their report was adopted.

The army appropriation bill passed.

The New Iberia case was discussed the balance of the day.

Senate.—The Judiciary Committee were discharged from the further consideration of female suffrage and the recognition of the Christian religion.

The Judiciary Committee reported adversely to the bill establishing the western judicial district of North Carolina; also in relation to the district attorney of Louisiana; also a bill repealing several acts relating to the tenure of office.

After a short executive session the Senate adjourned.

Memphis, Feb. 19.—The greater part of Helena, Arkansas, was destroyed or ruined by a hurricane on Friday night. Widow Stewart was fatally injured, and her little son instantly killed. The Baptist church was demolished. The principal sufferers by the hurricane were Miles & Co., Ramsay & West, Howerton & Co., and Barlow & Norton. Loss estimated at $100,000. The same storm severely injured Pocahontas and Iuka, Mississippi.

The hurricane on Friday night destroyed a building left in Helena by the recent fire. Several were fatally hurt.

The latest from Arkansas represent that the Senate is still without a quorum, and affairs are more threatening.

Washington, Feb. 20.—Farmington vs. Sanders, from Tennessee, involving the constitutionality of the cotton tax. The court below affirmed its constitutionality. Justice Nelson, in the Supreme Court today, announced the affirmative of that judgment by a divided court.

Washington, Feb. 20.—The House Committee on Pacific Railroads instructed Mr. Wheeler, chairman, to report the Senate bill so amended as to cut off all branches and additional land grants, thus securing a main trunk line from the eastern boundary of Texas to San Diego. It is thought the Senate will immediately concur.

The Ku-Klux.—A bill to arrest and punish the so-called Ku-Klux, by the appointment of Federal commissioners in every county in the South, with power to issue warrants, hold to bail, and commit for trial, was considered at the meeting of the Reconstruction Committee this morning and agreed to. The bill is full of details; but the main point is the supersedure which it proposes of the State authorities and the definition which it gives to acts as crimes not known to the law; such as the prohibiting of any person from masking himself or in any way making a disguise in order to commit crime. Secret political societies are virtually prohibited. It seems to be the intention to put this bill through at the present session. It will create an army of office-holders.

New York, Feb. 21.—Cotton firm, with a fair demand.

Sterling is strong and gold steady.

Liverpool advices report the market firm, with sales of twelve thousand bales uplands at 7½@7⅝d.

FOREIGN.

San Dominoo City, Feb. 3.—The Dominican commission arrived here from Samana Bay yesterday. Every one connected with the party is in excellent health. The want of coaling facilities detained the ship six days at Samana.

The commission found that the inhabitants of that peninsula generally favor annexation.

Bordeaux, Feb. 18.—The Assembly has conferred executive power on Thiers, with the power to select his council, of which Thiers is president. Favre continues as minister for foreign affairs. The chamber showed a disposition to postpone consideration regarding Alsace and Lorraine. Thiers insisted upon its present consideration, saying the Assembly must, on its own responsibility, clearly declare its wishes upon the subject.

London, Feb. 18.—In a debate in the House of Commons the general prevailing tone is that England's weak hesitancy has lost her the respect of belligerents and invited early war for her existence.

Bordeaux, Feb. 18.—The English, Austrian and Italian embassadors visited Thiers and officially recognized the new government.

London, Feb. 18.—Lord Lyons telegraphs to foreign departments that the French Assembly having voted almost unanimously for the appointment of M. Thiers as chief executive, pending the decision of France upon definitive institutions, he has announced, verbally, to Thiers, the recognition of the government by England.

London, Feb. 20.—In the House of Commons to-day Mr. Gladstone, in reply to an inquiry, denied that her majesty's government had received any proposals for the purchase of British dominions in North America. Mr. Gladstone took occasion to deprecate the introduction of questions of this character pending the sittings of the joint high commission at Washington.

The composition of the new ministry under President Thiers produces an excellent impression.

It is reported the Germans have levied a fresh requisition of two million francs on St. Quentin.

Versailles, Feb. 20.—A dispatch from Versailles says: The Emperor of Germany will lunch at Ecole Militaire on entrance into Paris, in consequence of the fever having been reported at the Tuileries.

It is the intention of the Emperor to return to Berlin immediately after reviewing the troops in Champ de Mars.

The Crown Prince is to receive a triumphal entry into Berlin.

London, Feb. 20.—The Telegraph has a dispatch from Paris, dated the nineteenth, which says: The authorities fear there will be unpleasant demonstrations against Emperor William and Count Bismarck if the Germans enter Paris.

Paris, Feb. 20.—The Germans will retain Metz, and half of the exacted indemnity is to be paid by the fifteenth of March.

It is reported that the armistice will be extended to the second of March.

London, Feb. 21.—A dispatch from Havre says the city of Alencon, refusing to pay an assessment, the mayor and ten councilmen have been imprisoned.

A dispatch from Bordeaux, dated the twentieth, says Bismarck is willing to resign Metz if Luxemburg is given to Germany. Bismarck employs threats in urging Thiers to terms.

A dispatch from Paris, dated the twentieth, says the question of the occupation and retention of Metz has been settled. The Lorraine line annexed will include Pont-a-Mousson.

The French wish to prolong the armistice until the second of March. Von Moltke insists as to the condition of a prolongation of the armistice that the Germans shall enter Paris. It is expected that this condition will prevail.

The meeting of the Berlin Parliament has been postponed.

The French must pay half of the war indemnity by the fifteenth of March.

Paris is fast assuming its ordinary appearance, and prices are much reduced.

Thiers, Favre and Picard arrived at Paris yesterday, and were to go to Versailles to-day.

All the European States have recognized the new government. Louis Joseph Buffet is the new minister of finance.

Duke de Broglie has been appointed French minister to London.

The Crown Prince has returned to Versailles after four days' absence.

In the House the government was sustained in a vote upon a resolution adverse to its army policy by one hundred and eighteen majority.

Paris, Feb. 21.—Thiers' plan is to conclude peace upon Bismarck's terms, to clear France of the Germans, bring back the French army, giving the command to General Changarnier, induce the National Assembly to proclaim the charter of 1830 the supreme law, and provide for a plebiscite, whether Count de Paris will be King.

It is believed that Bismarck's terms will be accepted without modification.

DEATH OF GENERAL MAGRUDER.

This distinguished military man died in Galveston on Sunday, the nineteenth instant. The Picayune of this city gives the following synopsis of his eventful history:

A dispatch announces the death at Galveston, on Sunday morning, of John Bankhead Magruder, late major general in the Confederate army. He was born in Virginia, and was appointed to the United States Military Academy from that State in 1826. He was commissioned second lieutenant by brevet in the Seventh Infantry, July 1, 1830, and in the First Artillery in 1831; was assistant commissary of subsistence in 1835, promoted to a first lieutenancy in March, 1836, and to a captaincy in June, 1846; was breveted major for gallantry at Cerro Gordo, April 18, 1847; commanded a battery of light artillery in General Pillow's division; was breveted lieutenant colonel for gallantry at Chapultepec, in which battle he was wounded.

At the beginning of the war of secession he resigned his commission as full colonel of artillery, and entered the service of Virginia as colonel of volunteers, and served with great gallantry and efficiency in Virginia until 1863, when he was transferred to the Trans-Mississippi Department, commanding the subdivision of Texas, where, aside from his well known military achievements, he won the esteem and honorable friendship of very many soldiers and citizens. They have recently presented to the brave and very accomplished veteran a fine plantation, with improvements, in order to secure his residence in that State.

I observe that of all plants God hath chosen the vine, a low plant that creeps upon the helpless wall; of all beasts the soft and patient lamb; of all birds the mild and guileless dove. Christ is the rose of the field and the lily of the valley. When God appeared to Moses it was not in the lofty cedar, nor the sturdy oak, nor the spreading palm, but in a bush—a humble, slender, abject bush; as if he would by these elections check the conceited arrogance of man.

The True Magnet.—The power of the magnet gains nothing from the gilder's or the graver's art; its attraction lies in itself, and is diminished by foreign accretions. So it is with the greatest of all magnets, of which Christ spake when he said: "And I, if I be lifted up, will draw all men unto me." We may draw men to ourselves by genius, eloquence, eccentricity, but we can draw men to Christ only by the attraction of the cross.

Of law there can be no less acknowledged than that her seat is in the bosom of God, her voice the harmony of the world, all things in heaven and earth do her homage, the very least as feeling her care, and the greatest as not exempted from her power; both angels and men and creatures of what condition soever, though each in different sort and manner, yet all with uniform consent, admiring her as the mother of their peace and joy.—Hooker.

The Manufacturer and Builder, for February, is better than usual, though always good. The drawings and wood cuts in the present number are very fine, and its ample pages are stored with the most instructive articles. We know of no periodical which affords so much useful knowledge in reference to science, mechanics and kindred matters as this. Published by Westorn & Co., New York. Price, $1.50 per annum.

The Prophetic Key is a monthly, published at Versailles, Kentucky, by P. S. G. Watson and A. F. Baker. The February number is the first we have seen.

A CHINESE LOVE-FEAST.

The Christian Advocate of New York contains an account of a native Chinese love-feast. It differed very little from the same thing at home, except in the single circumstance that tea took the place of water. It would not have been Chinese without that.

The services were held in the Tienang (Heavenly Rest) church, in Foochow city, Rev. Hu Yong Mi presiding, October 13, 1870, and were opened by singing [illegible] tion of "And are we yet alive!" and by prayer. The chairman then read a portion of First John, chapter iv, also Eph. iv, 1-6, John xxi, 15-18, and added some brief but very impressive remarks on the responsibilities and duties of the native church, expressing his conviction that times of severe trial were approaching when it might be necessary for them to give up their lives for Christ as Peter did. These remarks were the more affecting from the recollection of the recent Tien-tsin massacre, when the native Christians were slaughtered without mercy by the infuriated mob. While the bread and tea were passed around the audience sang the hymn, "How tedious and tasteless the hours." Hu Yong Mi was the first one to rise and speak. He said:

"Last night Teacher Sites gave us a lecture on astronomy, and stated that by the use of telescopes we can discern world after world. Well, it is just so in my religious experience. I am ever and anon discovering new wonders in religion. The love of Christ is all in all to me. I care less and less for the world, and am more and more absorbed in my work as a preacher. I daily see more clearly the importance of laying up my treasure in heaven, and am constantly pressed with the thought, "Whatsoever thy hand findeth to do, do it with all thy might." What we have to do must be done quickly. It seems to me wonderful that God should count me worthy even to suffer for him—that he should use my vile body even in the fires of persecution, to glorify his name. Let us forget ourselves and think only of God."

SIA SEK ONG.

"This is to me an occasion of great joy. After a year's separation we meet with each other, and with God. During the year we have had many troubles, but I have found that while enduring the greatest trials I have enjoyed the most peace. It is good to bear the yoke of Christ. Last year Bishop Kingsley met with us in love-feast; now his place is vacant on earth. When the tidings of his death reached me I could not refrain from weeping. At first I could not understand why he was taken away, but now the subject grows more plain. God wants us to trust in himself alone. And then the Bishop's example of devotion to Christ will not be lost; it is constantly urging me forward in my work. I am fully determined to give myself wholly to Christ; but I dare not trust in my own strength. We are living in the days of the Holy Spirit. During the year I have seen evidences of the Spirit's power in the hearts of the people. The condition of things here is rapidly changing, and I feel that great events are about to transpire. Let us all be faithful."

LI YU MI.

"I thank God for the privilege of meeting in this place. Like the apostles of old, we are also 'a spectacle unto the world, and to angels, and to men.' The world hates God; we love him; hence we must prepare for trials. During the year two of the members under my care have died. They were both my intimate friends: both gave promise of great usefulness to the church; but God has taken them away. They died in peace and have gone to the heavenly Canaan. It was a blessed privilege to be with them during their last sickness. The Bible tells us: 'It is better to go to the house of mourning than to go to the house of feasting; and that the day of death (is better) than the day of one's birth.' These death-bed scenes are profitable to us. It is not customary for the unconverted Chinese to speak of such things in their public assemblies, but we are not afraid to speak of death in our public gatherings. They who die in the Lord are blessed; though they die, yet shall they live again. The Bible tells us that the dead are not lost; they shall live again. We shall meet them again in the New Jerusalem, when 'They shall hunger no more, neither thirst any more; neither shall the sun light on them, nor any heat; for the Lamb which is in the midst of the throne shall feed them, and shall lead them unto living fountains of waters, and God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes.'"

WONG MENG FUNG.

"I am not a preacher, but I am the father of one of those to whom the last speaker referred as having died during the year. I thank God that I am permitted to meet with you. It is a great satisfaction to me to know that my son was a Ch[illegible] he spoke of his own sinfulness, of his utter unworthiness, of his reliance on Christ, and of his willingness to depart and be forever with the Lord. He urged us all to be faithful and try to meet him in heaven. I am growing old, and had hoped my son would aid me when I am too feeble to work; but it is the Lord who hath taken my child away, and he doeth all things well. I wish you all to pray for me. I find no pleasure in the world, but in the Saviour I enjoy great peace. We should love God more than parents—more than everything else."

Missionary Subscription, Alabama Conference.

The subscribers to the fund for the payment of the debt of the Missionary Society, who gave their names at the Conference in Montgomery, are hereby informed that the book containing the subscription is in my hands. The Conference secretary informs me that payments are to be made to me. The time is nearly out, and one payment, and only one, has been received. The amount due (on the book) is $1,150. The subscribers are earnestly requested to be prompt in paying.

Montgomery, Alabama.

Miss Alice Carey, the poetess, is dead. Her funeral took place in New York, at the Church of the Strangers, on the fourteenth of February, and the services were conducted by the Rev. Dr. Deems, who also read the last poem written by Miss Carey. The body was inclosed in a handsome silver-mounted casket. On the plate was the following inscription: "Alice Carey, born 1820—died 1871, aged fifty years." Horace Greeley, Bayard Taylor and P. T. Barnum were among the pall-bearers. She was buried in Greenwood Cemetery.

The Rev. G. W. D. Harris, D. D., we learn from the Rev. H. B. Avery, of Dyersburg station, who called at our office on Tuesday last, is rapidly declining in health, being confined to his room and to his bed almost constantly, in extreme feebleness. Our venerable father is strong in faith, and patiently waiting for the coming of the Master—ready to live and ready to die. A long life of usefulness and honor approaches its end—a happy and glorious eternity is at hand.—Western Methodist, February 18.

Flattering.—A pastor, whose flock had found pastures golden as well as green, complimented their liberality in this wise: "Why, brethren, the command to the Jews was only to give a tenth, and here are our pillars, Deacon A. and Deacon S., who give a twentieth of their "diggings." A twentieth, brethren; think of it! Just twice as much as those old Israelites gave."

During a recitation on natural history, in one of our well known colleges, a student in the pursuit of knowledge concerning animals, said: "Professor, why does a cat, while eating, turn her head first one way and then the other?" "For the reason," replied the professor, "that she cannot turn it both ways at once."

Rejoicing in the Lord.—"I am reminded of the good woman," said Spurgeon, lately, "who illustrated the rest of the soul in God, in a time of a fearful earthquake, by saying to her affrighted friends: 'How glad I am that God can shake the world!' I always believed that he could, and now I see him do it.'"

THE GREATEST LOSS.

BY FRANCIS BROWNE.

Upon the white sea-sand
There sat a pilgrim band,
Telling the losses that their lives had known,
While evening waned away
From breezy cliff and bay,
And the strong tide went out with weary moan.

One spake, with weary lip,
Of a fair freighted ship,
With all his household to the deep gone down;
But one had wilder woe
For a fair face, long ago
Lost in the darker depths of a great town.

One mourned his youth
With a most loving ruth,
For its brave hopes and memories ever green!
And one upon the West
For far-off hills whereon his joys had been.

Some talked of banished gold;
Some of proud honors told;
Some spake of friends that were their trust no more.
One spake of a green grave
Beside a foreign wave,
That made him sit so lonely on that shore!

But when their tales were done
There spake among them one,
A stranger, seeming from all sorrow free.
"Sad losses have ye met,
But mine is heavier yet,
For a believing heart is gone from me."

"Alas!" those pilgrims said,
"For the living and the dead,
For fortune's cruelty, for love's sure cross,
For the wrecks of land and sea!
But, however it came to thee,
Thine, stranger, is life's last and heaviest loss.

A Few Grand Totals from the Minutes of the Mississippi Conf. for 1869.

1. The white members and local preachers sum up 16,075.

2. The amounts assessed for the pastors, $49,144.

3. The amounts paid to the pastors, $37,639.

4. Deficit of pastors, $11,505.

5. Amount paid per member and local preacher, $2.34 1-16.

6. Deficit per pastor, $118.60.

7. So that while there was paid per member, for the support of the pastors, a little over $2.34, the pastors paid by this deficit, per pastor, $118.60.

8. This shows the difference to be in favor of what the pastors pay, by this deficit, to be more than fifty times more than is paid per private member! Who, then, pays most for the gospel and the church as a class? All will see that it is the pastors; for the assessments were only sufficient for a bread-and-meat living—nothing for luxuries, nor for tuition of children, nor for visitors.

9. Amount collected for missions, $2,204.50; Conference collection, $1,640.03; Bishops' fund, $1,145.75; making a total of $4,990.28, which is a fraction over 30 cents per member! When will we be able to send missionaries to all the world at that rate of giving? When will we pay the claims of superannuates, widows and orphans at that rate of giving to them? Nearly 14 cents per member for the cause of missions! Now who is to blame for this small amount for missions and for superannuates, etc., and for the Bishops?

I think the preachers are to be blamed for most of it! That is a hard charge, you say. But let facts speak out. These minutes show that from forty-five charges there was no report of collections for missions; forty-six charges send no Conference collection, and forty-five charges do not report anything for the Bishops! Did the preachers ask the people for anything for these collections? I do not believe they did, or they would have had something to report. It is time such pastors were at some other business than that of starving God's people to death by such negligence.

One circuit reports four hundred white members, but not one cent for missions, Conference collections or Bishops' fund! Another reports three hundred white members, and is alike deficient. Could not those seven hundred members have been induced to give something for the collections? If the preachers had asked them they would have given. What was that presiding elder doing to allow this state of things?

Ex-Pastor.

The great globe itself is not more interlaced with golden veins, and filled with precious things, than the field of revelation, the storehouse of [illegible] riches of Christ.

GOSPEL EXPEDIENTS.

While we may object to such entertainments as church fairs as a means, yet often as an expedient the adoption of such a method promises and insures the help which is required. Its availability is a plea in its favor. Many will contribute to getting up a fair that would not help by any other appeal; their time, efforts and influence are given, they are enlisted, their sympathies are drawn out by the inspiration and enthusiasm of the occasion. It lays its contribution on every one. No single individual may give much, yet a great many do a little, and the aggregate is astonishing. The ladies and others that lead in the enterprise are in stress for a few days and nights, too. The tension is great, yet a few days ends the struggle, and they have the pleasing and gratifying assurance that they have been the leading instruments in accomplishing so much for the Redeemer's kingdom.

To feel that my money, my influence, put a brick, a plank, in an edifice for Christian education, or a temple where the true and living God will be worshiped by future generations, is a satisfaction and comfort of no mean character.

For a fair to be gotten up and conducted on principles of Christian liberality, decorum and propriety seems unobjectionable. When the blessings of God have been invoked, and all the elements entering into it assimilate and blend, when no jar or discord is produced, when no wine or strong drink is permitted to tempt the unwary, when no game of chance, raffling or selling at exorbitant prices and not returning change, is allowed, we conclude it an expediency in the "name of the Lord," and to promote his cause. Whether the spiritual influence of the church is promoted by it may be brought into question. "Were it not better to suffer financially than spiritually?" I answer: Better for neither to suffer. Church members must not compromise their influence in this or any other place. Is it a necessary consequence that the spirituality of the church should suffer loss? Certainly the address and tone of character of the Christian will be as "becometh the doctrine of God our Saviour," and impress the irreligious in favor of religion. Spirituality! that is the very substratum of religion. A religion without a spiritual power and influence is a form—cold, lifeless, inert. Let it be imbued with spirituality. "I would not go into it but for the church," said a good, hearty sister the other day.

Where is an higher motive?—to promote and advance the church militant! Enough to inspire to sedulous effort! As many outsiders become interested from other than strictly religious motives, does it not seem an opportune season for all Christian people to be interested? Methodists of New Orleans, awake! not only to this, but all our interests! Now is the time to strike for the building up of our holy Christianity within the limits of this great and wicked city! Let there be an hearty and unanimous participation. "Many hands make light work" is a trite saying. The Apostle to the Gentiles instructs that "the whole body fitly joined together and compacted by that which every joint supplieth, according to the effectual working in the measure of every part, maketh increase of the body unto the edifying of itself in love."

Remember, our entertainment opens on Tuesday evening, the seventh of March. †

A heathen philosopher once asked a Jewish sage: "If God really hates idolatry, why does he not destroy all the idols?"

The sage replied: "If idolaters only adored such objects as the world did not require, God might possibly destroy such idols.—But they worship the sun, moon and stars. Shall he, then, destroy the world, or disturb the beautiful harmony of the universe, on account of these fools?"

Avoid those who take pleasure in exposing others to contempt by jeering, mocking or mimicking. Keep off from such as from the heels of a horse that kicks all near him.

JOHN CLARKE'S EPITAPH.

"To the memory of Dr. John Clarke, one of the original purchasers and proprietors of this island, and one of the founders of the first Baptist Church in Newport. Its first pastor and munificent benefactor. He was a native of Bedfordshire, England, and a practitioner of physic in London. He, with his associates, came to this island from Massachusetts, in March, 1638, O.S., and on the twenty-fourth of the same month obtained a deed thereof from the Indians. He shortly after gathered the church aforesaid, and became its pastor. In 1651 he, with Roger Williams, was sent to England, by the people of Rhode Island Colony, to negotiate the business of the colony with the British ministry. Mr. Clarke was instrumental in obtaining the charter of 1663 from Charles the Second, which secured to the people of the State free and full enjoyment of judgment and conscience in matters of religion. He remained in England, to watch over the interests of the colony, until 1664, and then returned to Newport, and resumed the pastoral care of his church. Mr. Clarke and Mr. Williams, two fathers of the colony, strenuously and fearlessly maintained that none but Jesus Christ had authority over the affairs of the conscience. He died April 20, 1676, in the sixty-sixth year of his age, and is here interred. This monument was erected by his trustees, March, 1840."

This is an exact certified copy of Dr. John Clarke's epitaph, as furnished me by Rev. B. A. Chase, of Newport, transcribed directly from the tombstone. And it agrees with that published by J. R. Graves, except Mr. Graves has suppressed the last sentence, "This monument was erected by his trustees, March, 1840," and has added a line from Mr. Comer, as quoted by S. Adlam, ("First church in America," page 56.) Let it be distinctly understood that the quotation, "First church in America," is no part or parcel of said inscription. And furthermore, that the "scratched up" or "exhumed" tombstone of Dr. John Clarke was erected about "thirty years ago." Is it likely that a tombstone would have become so deeply imbedded in mold and dirt in thirty years? Is it not ridiculously absurd for Mr. Graves and Mr. Paxton to appeal to the inscription on Clarke's tombstone as the only true record of the origin and history of the Baptist Church in the United States of America? Surely such teachers should "blush before their own folly."

W. E. Paxton, in his defense of J. R. Graves, writes as follows: "By request of the convention he (Graves) preached twice during the session. In one of his discourses he took occasion to remark that Dr. John Clarke, of Newport, had never received the honors that were due him—that he, and not Roger Williams, was entitled to the credit of having founded the first Baptist church in America; and he referred to the inscription upon the tombstone of Dr. John Clarke as proof of his statements." See Elder Paxton's article, published in the Baptist, November 26, 1870.

The only difference I can perceive between Mr. Paxton and myself, relative to the assertion made by Mr. Graves, is this: I have given the language used by Mr. Graves, "That he read it upon the tombstone, 'Dr. John Clarke founded the first Baptist church on the continent of America.'" Mr. Paxton says: "Graves said Dr. John Clarke, and not Roger Williams, was entitled to the credit of having founded the first Baptist church in America; and he referred," says Paxton, "to the inscription of Dr. John Clarke as proof of his statement." Did he refer to the inscription, Mr. Paxton? Yes; he said the fact was thus inscribed. I demanded of Mr. Paxton, a good while since, to state to me in writing precisely what Mr. Graves did say; and after repeating my request the second time he responded by saying: "He did not choose to be bullied into anything." Certainly not. I felt authorized to ask or call for the precise language used by Mr. Graves, from the fact that Mr. Paxton attempted to deny my statement, and gave a different version of the subject at issue.

But, candid reader, after all, where is the difference, in substance, in logic and in truth, between my statement and Paxton's admission with regard to what Graves said concerning the inscription on Clarke's tombstone. Mr. Paxton, while making a labored effort to relieve his client, has in the outset thrown the weight of his testimony against him; and further on in his article he quotes part of Clarke's epitaph, and says: "Here it is stated that the first Baptist church in Newport was gathered by Dr. Clarke in 1638." But the inscription says it was gathered shortly after.

I wonder by what rule shortly after a date specified can be made to mean in that date? It was certainly gathered shortly after 1638—that is, a few years, in 1644, as history generally and uniformly shows.

And now, in conclusion of this whole matter, I wish to offer the following facts:

First. Mr. Graves delivered his convention sermon in the presence of a large audience—ministers and laymen.

Second. There seems to be remarkable unanimity of understanding that Mr. Graves did refer to the inscription on Clarke's tombstone in attestation of what he (Mr. Graves) termed a new fact—that Clarke, and not Williams, founded the first Baptist church on the continent of America.

Third. While all who were present on the occasion do not recollect the precise language, they doubtless recollect the subject matter, and there are a number who recollect the precise language, as I have already given.

BISHOP WHATCOAT'S REMAINS.

A writer in the Methodist Home Journal has the following about Bishop Whatcoat's burial place:

"Bishop Whatcoat's remains lie in Dover Methodist Episcopal Church burial ground. He was interred immediately under the pulpit of the old Wesley church. In 1855 the Philadelphia Conference and the congregation of Dover Methodist church erected a neat and substantial monument over the Bishop's grave. The following is a faithful transcript of the epitaph which I took this afternoon:

In Memory of
REV. RICHARD WHATCOAT,
Who was born at Quinton,
Gloucestershire, England, A. D. 1736.
Became a traveling preacher in 1769.
Was ordained Elder by Rev. John Wesley,
And sent to America with Rev. Dr. Coke,
To assist in organizing
The Methodist E. Church,
In 1784,
Was constituted Bishop
At the General Conference in 1800,
And after six years' faithful service,
In the Episcopal office,
Died in great peace,
In Dover, Delaware,
July 5th, 1806.
In life and death he was the model of a Christian, a minister and a Scriptural Bishop."

Will the Pope's Council Meet Again?—It will be recollected that the council of the Pope which met daily in the Vatican for seven months, (from December, 1869, to July, 1870,) was not dissolved, but prorogued—to meet again at the call of the Pope. Archbishop Spalding speaks of this nineteenth council in a recent lecture as the greatest ever assembled. "Nearly a hundred different languages were spoken; but no difficulty was experienced, as the proceedings were all conducted in Latin. There were forty original bills before the council, but only two had been finally acted on, although others were under way when the recess took place. So particular were the members that an entire day was spent on the particular location of a comma in a sentence, and the final vote was not taken until the next day.'

Besides—they consummated a deed which no other council had ever attempted—they invested their president with a divine attribute by declaring him infallible! What further use can there be for a council to a head already clothed with infallibility? If it has nothing to do—will it ever meet again? Should its members desire another convocation, where will they assemble?

Dr. Manning, of London, it appears, is expecting a miracle to restore the Pope's temporal authority and domain as the autocrat and King of Rome. His career is not yet at an end. We must wait and learn by the providence of God what the future of papal error and superstition shall reveal.—Christian Observer.

Reputation is what men and women think of us. Character is what God and angels know of us.

THE MINISTER'S WIFE.

The Romish Church enjoins celibacy on its clergy, principally on the ground that family ties interfere with that degree of consecration to the duties of the clerical office which the interests of religion demand. The Apostle Paul admits his right to take to himself a wife, but evidently sacrificed his right on the altar of his devotion to the work of the ministry. Protestants claim that the history of clerical celibacy proves the system to be generally hurtful to morality, and conceive that a wife may serve as a helpmeet to a minister in his sacred calling. But a view prevails at the present day that, in choosing a wife, the young clergyman is justified in limiting his ideas of her service to the care she may take of him. And it not unfrequently happens that his notions are limited to her adaptation to his personal tastes and individual habits. Indeed, some ministers imagine they perpetrate a witticism by informing their people that the churches, in calling them, did not call their wives.

But, practically, it must be apparent that a minister's usefulness is greatly affected by the adaptation or non-adaptation of his wife to the peculiar nature of his calling. In her personal relations to her husband she can either mitigate or aggravate the trials of a minister in the discharge of his official duties. She can manage to relieve him of domestic cares, or add these to his other burdens. She can enable him to live within the limited salary which the churches are generally careful their pastors shall enjoy, or she can help to plunge him into debt. She can annoy him with complaints about church matters and gossip, or she can help him to bear manfully those she cannot keep from his knowledge.

In her intercourse with the church she can provoke criticisms that will impair his influence, or neutralize censures which his imperfections might excite. She can become a cipher in the agencies of church life, or she can become a leader or sympathetic co-operator in those measures of usefulness which so eminently belong to woman's sphere and adorn woman's character.

Instances are numerous in which a minister of fine abilities for doing good has been crippled by the counteracting influences of his wife; and, on the contrary, there are many cases in which the principal secret of a minister's success has been the beneficent services of his wife.

In choosing a wife every young minister should remember that his consecration vows require him to take into prayerful consideration her fitness to become a laborer together with him in the work of the ministry. Every woman to whom such an opportunity comes should realize that her "husband does not belong to her exclusively, but that he was wedded to the church before he was wedded to her." She may add to the brightness of his crown and share in the glory of his reward, or she may rob his crown of its luster, and herself suffer loss.—Christian World.

A Safe Investment.—Many a man is sorely perplexed how to safely invest his money. We can inform such anxious inquirers of the experience of one individual, a native of Massachusetts, and for many years a missionary in western New York. The Rev. Mr. Hubbard, a Congregational minister, was remarkable for his piety, his communion with heaven, his faith and his generous sympathy. According to his means he was exceedingly liberal, so that the more calculating regarded him as going beyond the bounds of reason. But he had what they deemed a strange answer to give, namely, that this was the way in which he wished to invest his money. "We differ," he would say, "only in the way in which we wish to invest our money. You prefer to have your in a farm or mortgage securities; I prefer to have mine, if I have any, invested in doing good. If any man has money to put at interest, let him do good with it. He will thus have the largest income and the safest capital." And we are told that he looked upon the treasury of the Lord as a bank of deposit, a bank that would never fail, where property and interest were both safe, and that he never thought himself the poorer, but rather the richer, for giving.

Evidently he took God at his word; which should not be accounted a very strange thing, though, alas, it is too rare. He believed God when he said: "He that giveth unto the poor shall not lack." "He that hath pity upon the poor lendeth unto the Lord; and that which he hath given will he pay again."

When will the great body of Christians come to the same simplicity of faith? Must it not be so ere the millennium dawns?—Examiner and Chronicle.

He who esteems trifles for himself is a trifler; he who esteems them for the conclusions to be drawn is a philosopher.

SABBATH SCHOOL BOOKS.

Sabbath school reading pervades the entire family, and abides through the week, occupying more or less of each of its successive days. It has been estimated that three millions of Sabbath school books are taken out weekly, and probably read by more than one member of the families receiving them. So that we cannot, if we would, confine our Sabbath school libraries to the classes to which they are issued, any more than we can measure their influence by the size of the volumes composing them. The field traversed by these messengers of the churches is as broad as society. Villages and smaller towns favored with Sabbath schools get most of their reading from these libraries. They supply the reading, mold the taste and shape the thinking of that community. Children are often found to enroll themselves in two, if not three, Sabbath schools for the sake of their books; often the inquiries of children in respect to books offered to them betray the fact that they are consulting other tastes than their own—perhaps a father, mother or some other member of the family.

This class of books has greatly multiplied of late years. Whether this increased demand has come from the comparative cheapness of the books, their popular, not to say sensational character, or from an improved taste for reading, is not clear. Millions of dollars are invested in the business of making these Sabbath school books. Many of both sexes are giving their lives to the preparing of these volumes. In 1869 there were five hundred new Sabbath school books published; in 1868 four hundred and thirty; and for years previous the issues of this class of publications averaged one a day. The aggregate number of Sabbath school books is now estimated at seven thousand different works.

There is, therefore, a strong temptation, almost a necessity, to secure the sale of such issues, irrespective of their real value to the moral improvement of our children. This fact indicates the need of great caution in the selection of library books.

Every book, before catalogued in a Sabbath school library, and sent out on its mission of influence, should be examined by persons of intelligence and taste, as well as piety—persons capable of discriminating error, however disguised by fiction or rhetoric. Let us, then, while we give due heed to the instruction of our Sabbath schools, not neglect their libraries. The teaching may be salutary, but the reading poisonous. A single class may be injured by a poor teacher, but a bad book may destroy many families.—Christian Mirror.

TO SUNDAY SCHOOL TEACHERS.

We hear of a great many things necessary to make a Sabbath school successful. People say it needs a live superintendent, and so it does; and a good library, fine singing and papers for the scholars, etc. It needs these, but more than anything else it needs teachers that have been taught of Christ. The question is asked in the Bible: "How shall they preach except they be sent?" And so we might inquire: "How shall they teach except they be taught?" A teacher may be thoroughly informed on the lesson; he may have question books and commentaries; he may even understand theology; but unless he be constrained by the love of Christ he will fail of being the teacher he ought. No other qualifications can take the place of a warm heart, for "what comes from the heart will go to the heart." It has been said—and truly—that heart-power is the strongest moral power in the world, and the teachers that have been successful in leading their scholars to Jesus have had this power.

God is no respecter of persons, and surely he is no respecter of teachers; neither of Sabbath schools. We read of many schools in the land that have been richly blessed, and why may not "some droppings fall on" every school. "He is willing, he is able." Teachers, do we realize that we are responsible for the souls that are under our care? God said to Ezekiel: "I have made thee a watchman unto the house of Israel; therefore hear the word at my mouth, and give them warning from me."

Now, if we are not faithful to the souls of our scholars, will not God require their blood at our hands? Perhaps there are very few teachers who have no interest in or love for their scholars; but oh, how cold and feeble it is compared to the anxiety they ought to feel. It is like a spark of fire that can only be fanned into a flame at the foot of the cross. "Without him we can do nothing," but "we can do all things through Christ which strengtheneth us." "If it tarry wait for it, and to the earnest, agonizing prayer of a faithful teacher the blessing will surely come—it will not tarry."—H. K. Bushnell, in Christian at Work.

DRIFTING.

Echoes of cathedral music
Heard, it may be, long ago,
Linger with us unforgotten,
Haunt us still, and live and grow;
They are drifting, softly drifting,
Through the wild unrest of life,
Golden organ-notes, uplifting
Weary souls above the strife.

Though the clamor of the city
Round our outer being rolls,
Still those sacred notes are filling
All the chambers of our souls;
As if touched by hands immortal,
Stray chords, tremulous with love,
Drifted through some open portal
Of the wondrous church above!

In the gray and silent morning,
Ere the shadows are withdrawn,
When the white mist hides the valley
With a vail of airy lawn;
Then we listen—hearing slowly,
Through the stillness deep and calm,
Murmurs of that music holy,
Like the cadence of a psalm.

When the summer sunset lingers
Low adown the crimson west,
And the weary hands are folded
With the blessed sense of rest,
Then we listen—strengthened, soothed
By the magic of that strain,
Till the furrowed brow is smoothed,
And the heart grows young again.

They are drifting, softly drifting,
Through the great world's daily strife,
Golden organ-notes that tell us
Of a new and better life—
Low, clear music, sweetly blending
With the spirit's voiceless cry;
Under-tones that have no ending,
Echoes of eternity!

The Last Eclipse and What it Revealed.

The constitution of the sun has been thoroughly studied during the last dozen years. By the application of the improved processes of the polariscope and the spectroscope the general physical properties of its surface have been ascertained with a close approach to accuracy. By the polariscope the qualities of the light are determined—whether it is radiated or reflected light, and how it has been affected by passing through the earth's atmosphere. By the spectroscope the chemical constitution, the form—whether solid or fluid—of the substances from which the light emanates, and the vapors, if there are any, through which it has passed to reach the earth, are determined with general certainty. Total eclipses afford the most favorable opportunities for especial studies of the envelopes by which the sun is supposed to be surrounded. The last three eclipses—that of 1868, in India; that of 1869, in the United States; and that of December last, on the north shore of the Mediterranean—were watched with careful attention. Expeditions, composed of the most competent astronomical and spectroscopic observers, went, fully equipped, to the most favorable spots for observation, and recorded all that they saw in a form to be perpetuated, and to admit of further examination. By the observations of 1868 and 1869 the sun gave up several of his great secrets. Another was revealed on December 22.

It has been ascertained that the apparent surface of the sun was a mass of white-hot metallic matter, composed of thirteen or fourteen of the substances known upon the earth, containing none that could be distinguished that did not exist on the earth. This mass is in a state of constant seething and boiling, like the melted metal in an iron-founder's furnace. The cavities which would be found in the process of boiling, fortified by the corresponding rifts in the gaseous envelopes above, form the spots, which were the first objects of study on the sun's disk. This main body is called the photosphere.

Above this is a red-hot layer, which has exhibited itself at the time of total eclipses in the form of immense waving "protuberances," or whorls of red light, rising some ninety thousand miles above the sun's surface. Spectroscopic observations during the eclipses of 1868 and 1869 established the fact that these protuberances and the red envelope, called the chromosphere, from which they arise, are composed of ignited hydrogen gas, with vapors of iron at the base. These conclusions have been verified many times, and are now verified nearly every day by examinations of the protuberances, which may be made in the full light of the sun, by processes which have been very recently brought into use. No one doubts the fact now, more than he doubts that the sea is composed of water.

But there was an accompaniment to all the eclipses, called the corona, which continued to be a mystery. It was a haze of pale light, somewhat like the aurora borealis in general appearance, extending to immense distances on all sides of the darkened sun. At four corners there were streamers stretching away out to distances that could be computed at millions of miles, if it was a real appendage to the sun. It seems difficult to explain how the sun could carry an appendage extending so far out, so much lighter than hydrogen—the lightest matter known—as this must be, which should yet be dense enough to be visible at all. Some thought it an effect of an atmosphere of the moon. This theory was long since ruled out. Some thought it an illusion of the earth's atmosphere, but this hypothesis seemed inexplicable. Plausible theories connected it with the zodiacal light, with the meteoric system, and with the aurora borealis. It had been examined with the spectroscope at the Indian eclipse in 1868, and at the American eclipse in 1869, and the results contradicted each other. It was agreed among astronomers that the corona should be the grand object of attack at the eclipse of December 22, 1870.

The United States took the lead in the preparation for examining this eclipse. Our colleges furnished professors to make the observations; the government furnished transportation, many instruments, and other facilities. English philosophers were hindered by the hesitation of their government to give them help, and at last joined forces with our observers. The Germans did little, and the French nothing, on account of the war. In the result the accuracy of the American observations of 1869 was vindicated.

There were two principal expeditions: one made its headquarters at Cadiz, in Spain; the other at Syracuse, in Sicily. Parties from both occupied neighboring towns. The English Professor Lockyer, who stands at the head of spectroscopic observers, took a station near Mount Etna, but was prevented by a storm from seeing anything.

The weather was stormy for several days before the eclipse, down to the time of its commencement. A few momentary clear intervals were seized, however, and improved by spectroscopic observations, and obtaining exact outlines of the sun's disk, by which the forms and places of the protuberances for the time being were clearly defined. Both in Spain and in Sicily, at a few of the stations, there came a rift in the clouds at the time of totality, through which the eclipse was observed and the corona caught. As we have said, the deductions of the American observers of the eclipse of 1869 were fully confirmed. The Indian observations in 1868 had given a continuous spectrum without any lines, either dark or bright. The American observations, the year following, had given a spectrum crossed by bright green lines. As the acceptance of these results would lead to conclusions entirely new, which astronomers were not ready to explain, there was a disposition to reject them. All the observations made on December 22 agreed in showing the bright green lines as they had been recorded by our observers. The polariscope showed that the corona shines by reflected light, and that it is not atmospheric. There was just haze enough at Catania, Sicily, to deprive the coronal appearance of the exaggerated effects which our atmosphere gives it, and its true outline was traced out, and found to correspond with the outlines that had been made in the days before of the chromosphere and the prominences—that is, where there was a protuberance of the chromosphere there was also a protuberance of the corona over it. It is established that the corona belongs to the sun, and that it is limited in size, much of its enlarged appearance and its quadrilateral form, as we see it, being ascribable to the diffraction of our atmosphere.

The green lines in the spectrum start another question. Nothing like them is afforded by any substance known on the earth. They denote some new substance in nature. Traces of something similar are seen in the aurora borealis and in the zodiacal light, phenomena which are quite as mysterious as the corona was. The Saturday Review conjectures that in this we may have "touched the edge of that cosmical ether, that unknown substance, which everything points to and nothing shows, which is yet perhaps revealed under certain magnetic conditions in the higher regions of the atmosphere," and which is in this case rendered luminous by the intense heat of the sun.

Thus, in this case, as in all the facts of science, the new point of knowledge gained is accompanied with a new doubt to be determined. The English papers make liberal acknowledgments of the services rendered by the Americans, and of the accuracy of their observations.

CHRISTIAN HOSPITALITY.—The Christian duty of hospitality is too much neglected by Christians. They lose by its neglect many precious opportunities of doing good, and of getting good. There is nothing that endears the heart of the young and of the stranger more than a warm home welcome from those upon whom they have no claim. It opens the heart's door wide to receive impressions of good, and fills the memory with grateful remembrances.

GAMBLING.

"In southern Germany men have been known to stake their all upon the turn of a single card, who one month previously had been worth not less than half a million florins. Not less reckless have been men in Hamburg and Lombardy. In Mexico ventures of from twenty-five to one hundred thousand doubloons have been lost at only three different sittings at the same table. In France the game of courting the smiles of fortune has often cost the player five thousand francs an hour—a risk of $950 American, or £200 English, in sixty seconds. In Rome, that most ancient of all cities, men have ventured and lost, during one or two nights, not less than ten thousand ten scudi gold pieces—a sum equal to about $100,000 American, or £20,000 English. In Spain, from the days of Columbus to the present time, many a don is recorded to have lost, within twenty-four hours, eight hundred thousand doubloons—that is, £2,400,000 English, or $12,000,000 of our American gold coin. In England, where the spirit of gambling is not so conspicuous as in more southern countries, £10,000 is sometimes considered low play with certain aristocrats, but then it ranges upward occasionally to the round number of £50,000. In the United States, in one city alone, it is estimated from $50,000 to $500,000 will change hands through gambling means during one day and night. But, then, even these enumerations only apply to a certain class denominated the "bon ton, or aristocracy," of the world—hence do not take into consideration the class of gamblers lower down in the scale of life—yet, making a rough estimate from instances cited, we can honestly assert that the average gambling exchange of money throughout Christendom during but twenty-four hours may exceed, though it is not less than, $80,000,000, or somewhere about $123,100,000,000 worth of specie in a year of three hundred and sixty-five days."—The Globe.

The above extract has been prepared with care from authentic sources, and deserves the consideration of all friends of good order and public morals. That gambling is on the increase in our cities and throughout the country, facts like the above will testify. Our club-houses are the nurseries of this vice. There is more iniquity daily practiced in these dens of sin than the uninitiated dream of. It is time that the Christian sentiment of the country was brought to bear upon it, and that effective measures were taken for its suppression.—Christian Intelligencer.

PILLOWS OF STONE.—Rev. C. S. Robinson, D. D., in one of his recent letters from the East, to the Christian Union, has the following concerning "Pillows of Stone:"

"A word may be said about the hardship of stone pillows, and about this Eastern habit of sleeping. The climate throughout all Southern Palestine is not only warm, but sunshine tends peculiarly and excessively to sunstroke. It drives to drowsiness almost irresistibly.—Whenever one of the natives has an hour of waiting he invariably sleeps, as the readiest method of disposing of his time. In the parable those unfortunate virgins may seem exceedingly commonplace who fell into slumber when a wedding was on the way. 'I admit they were foolish to sleep even until the cry was heard, 'Behold, the bridegroom cometh.' But they did just what most people do when kept under pressure in these regions. Then as for conveniences, you are to remember that a stone has these two advantages: it is generally cool, and it is free from vermin; and furthermore, it is almost the only thing for elevating one's head which can easily be found. No stock of old trees, no fallen trunks remain in this country; these and such things are gathered at once for firewood. There are no hillocks of green grass. And when you recall the sort of head-covering to be worn by all who desire to avoid dizziness and danger, that is to say, either a turban or the folds of a thick band of muslin around the temples, you will perceive that even in the historic instance of Bethel, Jacob did not have so terribly a hard time of it as would at first sight appear. His pillow was on his head, and a cool fragment of rock made him no mean bolster."

PURITY—BACKSLIDING.—Cornelius turned to God in the army; and the sons of Eli followed after Satan in the temple. Domitian and Marcus Antoninus filled the same throne, where the one astonished the universe by his wickedness, the other by his virtue. The treasurer of the Queen of Ethiopia was converted in the vanity of a heathen court, while Judas went astray in the company of the apostles and of Christ.

MANY persons have quickness to discover their faults who have not energy enough to eradicate them.

THE RADIANT PATH.

The path of the sun is a radiant path. It is not only glorious; that expresses but half the truth. It is glorious because it is radiant. The sun is not like the moon—a mere reflector, glittering with borrowed light. God has given it light in itself; and therefore it shines, and cannot but shine. If the mountains could be lifted up until they should inclose it like a wall; and the clouds, ascending from the mountains, should concentrate their masses and over-arch it like a roof—it would shine still. Nay, made the more intense by the confinement, it would turn the mountains into diamonds and the clouds into crystals, and flash through them all, and fill the world with new splendors.

So with the path of the just. His glory is from within. It is radiant. Put him where you will, he shines, and cannot but shine. God made him to shine. For instance, imprison Joseph—and he will shine out on all Egypt, cloudless as the sky where the rain never falls. Imprison Daniel and the dazzled lions will return to their lairs, and the king come forth to worship at his rising, and all Babylon bless the beauty of the brighter and better day. Imprison Peter—and with an angel for his harbinger star, he will spread his aurora from the fountains of Jordan to the wells of Beersheba, and break like the morning over the mountain and sea. Imprison Paul—and there will be high noon over all the Roman empire. Imprison John—and the isles of the Ægean, and all the coasts around, will kindle with sunset visions, too gorgeous to be described, but never to be forgotten—a boundless panorama of prophecy, gliding from sky to sky, and enchanting the nations with visions of heaven, transits of saints and angels, and the ultimate glory of the city and kingdom of God.

Not only so; for modern times have similar examples—examples in the church, and examples in the state. For instance, bury Luther in the depths of the Black Forest—and the angel that dwelt in the bush will honor him there; the trees around him will burn like shafts of ruby and his glowing orb loom up again, round and clear as the light of all Europe. Thrust Bunyan into Bedford jail—and as he leans his head on his hand the murky horizon of Britain will flame with fiery symbols—'delectable mountains,' celestial mansions, with holy pilgrims grouped on the golden hills, and bands of bliss, from the gates of pearl, hastening to welcome them home.—T. H. Stockton.

NATURE'S GOD.

"Look up through nature to nature's God." Who is nature's God but the God of nature? God is the author and creator of all things, visible and invisible. To all those who appreciate the beauties and glories of the universe above and around, the existence and goodness of God must be apparent. In nature we have a great and wondrous book, portraying clearly the omnipotence, wisdom and goodness of the great Jehovah. It is a volume that is infinite and inimitable by man. Yet all languages can read it—all nations understand it; and it is open and free to all. "The creation speaks a universal language and reveals to man the power of his Creator."

Behold the innumerable worlds on high in all their continuous and varied circumvolutions. They speak in loud yet inaudible strains, that God made them all, and now guides them in their regular and concentric courses, through all the ages! He, too, made the great and mighty sea, "wherein are creeping things innumerable, both small and great" God, in his infinite goodness and wisdom, made the mountains and the vales, the broad lakes and the majestic rivers, the everlasting hills and the gorgeous woodlands! He created the majestic oak and the tiny flower, "the cedar of Lebanon and the hyssop that groweth out of the wall." "Without him was not anything made that is made."

Man may say that he doubts the existence of God amid this stupendous display of creative wisdom and power! But it is incomparatively more difficult to disbelieve amid so many and convincing proofs of divinity. Satan and man's own unbelieving, wicked heart may lead him to imagine there is no creative, ruling power; but reason and universal nature tell him quite a different story. The beauties and magnificence of nature speak in characters of living light and truth of the great Jehovah, who is in all and over all, God he blessed forever!

"Ours is a lovely world! How fair
Thy beauties even on earth appear;
The seasons in their courses roll,
And bring successive joys; the sea,
The earth, the sky, are full of Thee.
Thou benignant, glorious Lord of all."
I. N. K., in Religious Telescope.

HERE is Fun's epigram on the statue of George Peabody in London:

To blow hot and blow cold in a couple of days,
Is one of the world's greatest failings!
While alive he was always environed with praise,
But now he's surrounded with railings.

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

THE Methodist Book Concern has a capital of $1,458,575.

IN SIX YEARS there has been an increase in the number of infant baptisms from 30,891 to 50,453.

BISHOP CEXE, of western New York, has enjoined upon the clergy of his diocese the use of the gown instead of the surplice, when preaching.

MR. CHAUNCEY ROSE, of Torre Haute, has given about $300,000 in charity, his latest gift being $100,000 for a Presbyterian female college in Indiana.

CONSIDERABLE religious interest is reported among a number of the churches in New York. The conversions in seven or eight of them are estimated at about two hundred.

THE treasury of the Methodist Episcopal Mission Society showed a deficit, last December, of $115,646. A strong call has been issued from the Mission Rooms, urging the denomination to a contribution of not less than $1,000,000.

THE American Sabbath Tract Society, organized by the Seventh-Day Baptists, relies for funds upon the contribution by every member of the denomination, young or old, of the earnings of one day. The system worked so well last year that it will be put in practice again in 1871.

THE Quakers of England complain bitterly of the compulsory fines to which they have been subject in support of the Established Church. Although they are really a small and unimportant body, it is claimed that since the beginning of the last century they have been forced to pay not less than $6,000,000.

FIVE YEARS IN SWEDEN.—Five years ago the Methodist Church had no church congregation or membership in Sweden. Now there are twenty-one missionary workers, with a lay membership of over two thousand, and rapidly increasing. The progress of the work there is of the most gratifying character, and the future is full of promise.—New York Christian Advocate.

NEW ENGLAND PAPISTS.—Le Protestens Canadian, published in St. Albans, Vermont, says that "the two little States of Rhode Island and Connecticut contain two hundred thousand Catholics. In Rhode Island half of the children born in 1869 belonged to Catholic parents. It is therefore probable that the Catholics will soon be in a majority in that State, where they already form a third of the population."

BANOO KESHUB CHUNDER SEN, on his return to Calcutta, organized an "Indian Reform Association" for the promotion of the following objects: 1. The advancement of woman; 2. General and technical education; 3. Cheap literature for the poor; 4. Temperance; and 5. Charity. The association publishes a journal called the Sulad Sumachar, or Cheap News, which is sold at less than a cent.

JOHANNES, the Greek Bishop of Alaska, after making a brief visit to what was formerly Russian America, will take up his permanent abode in San Francisco. While awaiting a convenient opportunity for his northern tour, he devotes himself to preaching in English to a California congregation of thirty communicants. The sum of $30,000 has been appropriated by the Russian government for building a missionary church in the California metropolis.

THOMAS H. SKINNER, D. D., professor in the Union Theological Seminary in New York city, died on February 1, in the eightieth year of his age. He was born in Florida; was for several years pastor of Presbyterian churches in Philadelphia, and was the first pastor of the Mercer street Presbyterian church in New York city, till 1850, when he became connected with the Theological Seminary. He was a man of much learning, and occupied a high standing in the Presbyterian Church.

A MORAVIAN missionary has recently returned from Greenland. His services have extended over a period of forty years, and he now becomes a superannuate. He testifies to the improvement which has taken place in many respects during that time among the Greenlanders, chiefly, it would seem, as the fruit of educational effort in connection with the mission. In all Greenland there is but one station in the neighborhood of which there are heathen. With this exception all the Greenlanders now profess Christianity.—Methodist.

THE SECRET OF UNANIMITY.—The New York Tablet, in its notice of Father Preston's lecture on the Temporal Power of the Pope, innocently says:

There is no difference of opinion among Catholics on this subject, for we do not allow any difference on such questions. The decrees of the church forbid it. The reverend father read from the Syllabus in support of his propositions. Whoever maintains contrary opinions cannot be a Catholic. This may be arbitrary, and is so. Truth is arbitrary, and this is truth. No Catholic can maintain an opinion opposed to the temporal power of the Pope.

APOSTOLIC SUCCESSION.—The Rev. Thomas Williams, of Providence, now ninety-two years old, is a Congregational minister, well known for his eccentricity and his intellectual ability. He once presented the doctrine of apostolic succession, in a conference with an Episcopal clergyman, in this wise: "The difference between us as to a call to the ministry is this—I believe that a man is called to preach, if he can preach. I believe that a man is called to be a blacksmith if he can make a shoe or a nail. You believe that he is so called if he is descended from Tubal-Cain!"—which was certainly hitting the nail on the head.

THE NEW MISSIONARY SHIP "MORNING STAR."—This little vessel was launched at East Boston on the twenty-fifth ultimo, and will be ready to sail for Honolulu about the middle of February. The ceremony was witnessed by a small company, and was preceded by devotional exercises, including the missionary hymn. This is the third "Morning Star" which has been built under the auspices of the American Board. The first was launched in 1856, but became unseaworthy after nine years' service among the islands of the Pacific. The second was wrecked last year.

The Boston News says that this is a model brig, built of the very best materials.

DECAY OF IDOLATRY.—The great heathen festivals of India begin to fail and wear out. At the recent festivals at Serampore there were never present more than seventy-five thousand, whereas it used to be attended by two hundred thousand and more. The ponderous cars were drawn feebly, and those engaged in the business ridiculed those who gave the orders. For one man present—and this is a significant fact—there were fifty women and children. The great cars were left in the mud, and there they stood, after the festival was over, with the idols upon them and flags flying. Their condition, thus stuck in the mud, as the Friend of India says, "is typical of the state of idolatry, at least in and near the great cities—tottering, but still defiant, with no enthusiasm and little faith."

CHEERING NEWS comes, via Honolulu, from the Gilbert and Marshall Islands. At Drummond's Island the people were idolators till 1868. In that year they cast away their idols. In 1869 only one hundred and twenty out of a population of six thousand two hundred could read. By the middle of last November eighteen hundred were gathered in schools, of whom one thousand were reading such portions of the New Testament as were translated into their language. Two houses of worship have been built. The "Hula," a lascivious dance, has been prohibited; as also the sale and use of intoxicating drinks. "This people are making progress in knowledge, and in their way"—a very good way, one might think—"seeking to please Jehovah, whom they now worship as their God."

THE following is taken from the January number of the Presbyterian Monthly Record:

A work is going forward in that republic (Mexico) which imperatively claims our notice and calls for our aid. Despotism and Romanism, hand-in-hand, are struggling to crush civil and religious freedom. At the same time the Spirit of God is awakening many to ask for the Way of Life. The work is one from within, and not from without. It is not a mission from abroad, a foreign element, but an awakening within, among the Mexicans themselves, though aided by light that has radiated from Christian men and women from the United States. No less than forty congregations of Mexican men and women meet every Lord's day for worship and instruction immediately from the Bible. Multitudes are ready to read. The demand for light is pressing.

THE London Times, in a curious statistical article, entitled "Who's Who in 1871?" and which is devoted to a general statement of the number of high dignities in the various callings of Church and State, gives the following enumeration of ecclesiastics: There are two archbishops of the Church of England, and twenty-eight bishops, of whom two are suffragans. The Irish Episcopal Church consists of two archbishops and ten bishops, and the number of Indian, colonial and missionary bishops is fifty-four. There are seven bishops of the Scotch Episcopal Church, and the number of retired bishops is nineteen. The Roman Catholic Church in England numbers twelve prelates, and there are four archbishops of that church in Ireland. There are thirty-three deans of cathedrals and collegiate churches in England and Wales, and the number of archdeacons in the same division of the kingdom is seventy. The chaplains and priests in ordinary to the Queen number sixty-four.

BISHOP ANDREW.

Last week we were glad to announce the presence of Bishop Andrew in our midst, and that his health was better than usual. On Sunday morning last he addressed the Felicity street Sunday school, and preached at eleven o'clock at considerable length, and with much vigor and freedom. On Tuesday morning before day he was attacked with paralysis, and we are sorry to say is almost entirely helpless. His left side is badly paralyzed, although he is able to speak with some difficulty, and retains his faculties perfectly. He was conveyed to the cars on Wednesday evening, and left for Mobile in care of his son-in-law, Rev. Mr. Rush. It was the desire of the Bishop and of his family that he should return to Mobile. During his stay in the city he has been the guest of Dr. B. H. Moss, who with his family, and other friends, have been most attentive to his comfort.

We take pleasure in stating that the officers of the New Orleans, Mobile and Chattanooga railroad did everything in their power to make the Bishop's journey as agreeable as possible, even going so far as to place an entire passenger car at his disposal, if he wished it.

Herring's Patent Champion Safes. The long standing of these safes, as well as the severe tests to which they have been submitted, justify us in saying that they are entitled to the entire confidence of the public. We call attention to the advertisement in another column, and advise our readers in search of safes to call on the courteous agent at No. 53 Camp street.

We call the attention of teachers and book dealers to the advertisement of Messrs. Ivison, Blakeman, Taylor & Co., which commences with this issue. For further information than is contained in their advertisement they can address the obliging agent, T. Moroney, Esq., of this city. Orders or inquiries sent to the care of R. J. Harp will receive prompt attention.

A Good Work of Grace, says the Western Methodist of the eighteenth instant, is now enjoyed by our brethren in this city, at several churches. On Sunday last, at Saffarans street, five persons were received into the church, having professed faith in Christ. On Tuesday evening last, at prayer meeting, the brethren of Second street were greatly blessed—six persons were happily converted, and became candidates for membership. These are cheering results of the ordinary means of grace.

Those who look for faults find faults, and become fault-finders by profession; but those who look for truth and good find that.

Sorrow comes soon enough without despondency; it does a man no good to carry around a lightning-rod to attract trouble.

APPEARANCES.

Thousands of people spend more money on appearances than they do on what is needful for their real comfort. This object costs them more than all others put together; more than their religion or their charities; more than the education of their children. So much, indeed, is expended upon style that matters of importance suffer. This is first, and when its requirements are met, what is left goes to satisfy a meager benevolence and to meet the suggestions of prudential economy. This abject submission to the tyranny of fashion in outward things is to people in moderate circumstances a most fruitful source of impoverishment, while with the rich it leaves but little for better purposes. After deducting what comfort, refinement and a just elegance would judge requisite, there is still more wasted upon other people's eyes than is ordinarily bestowed upon the suffering poor, or to spread the gospel through the world. "The lust of the eyes and the pride of life" are exhibited in an extreme devotion to the outward forms of social respectability. Neither what is necessary for this life, nor for the life to come, is the question which presses for solution, but rather how am I to maintain the style and position which society imposes. If one-tenth of what Christian men and women spend, not upon comfort and luxury, but upon mere appearances, were devoted to religious and charitable objects, the revenues of all our churches would be more than doubled at once.

This insane devotion to appearances is not only expensive, but it is a source of intense misery to many. The sorest trial of a first experience of poverty is not the want of bread and raiments, or comfortable shelter, but the inability to keep up appearances. If these could be maintained, other sacrifices far more real would be submitted to with cheerfulness. If they were in a world by themselves, where no critical eyes could look upon them, or if they were surrounded by only those in like condition, there would be no anguish. All sense of humiliation and all bitter regrets would be healed by the prevalent social equality, and by the absence of unfavorable comparisons. The stroke of misfortune is often more keenly felt in this direction than in any other. The loss of credit, the impeachment of integrity, the suffering of innocent creditors, are as nothing in comparison with an inevitable declension in the style of living. Men, ordinarily brave and generous, have failed in this extremity, and have been driven to self-destruction. They could meet death by their own hands easier than they could submit to a change in the mere accidents of social life.

This bondage to appearances is the prolific source of dishonesty. If style cannot be maintained by ordinary industry, the pressure is strong to sacrifice truth and honesty at its shrine. Before debts are paid, before the claims of justice are met, must these social demands be conceded. All the artifices and subterfuges of the law are taken hold of to evade the settlement of the plainest obligations, and conscience, integrity and self-respect are bartered before the mere pretense of a shallow gentility is surrendered. Many purchase a sham respectability at the price of their integrity, and part with all true character for the base counterfeit of a depraved public opinion. Among other incentives to the wild and reckless pursuit of gain this is one of the most prominent. "The lust of the eyes and the pride of life" must be gratified at all hazards and at any cost. The end justifies gambling, forgery, overreaching in trade, and every species of trickery in business. Appearances cannot afford to wait on honest success and legitimate prosperity, nor can they submit to the gradual accumulations of virtuous industry.

Where integrity is preserved under this temptation success may be sacrificed; and what should have been saved as a competency for the family, and for capital in business, has been squandered in meeting this social extortion. It is a form of tyranny which deters many from the assumption of the obligations of marriage, and thus strikes at the very root of domestic order and virtue. If a certain standard of appearances must be maintained, beyond the requirements of ordinary comforts and simple tastes, it is natural that men should shrink from a burden which they are unable to bear. Relief from the domestic responsibility may be secured at the expense of virtue and happiness in themselves and in society, but still it will be thus secured. The misery, sins and evils of every sort growing out of this subjection to appearances cannot be enumerated in an article. The damage which it inflicts upon religion, upon personal happiness and upon social and domestic virtue is beyond estimate. Why do not piety and reason throw off the yoke, and why does not the common sense of mankind and womankind set on foot a crusade against this arch-enemy of human happiness? Emphatically why not in the case of Christians who have professedly renounced the devil and all his works, the vain pomp and glory of the world, and the carnal desires of the flesh, so that they will not follow nor be led by them? Why not?

NOTE FROM REV. DR. WADSWORTH

We take the liberty of publishing the following private note from Rev. Dr. Wadsworth. All will be glad to learn that he has entered upon his labors at Montgomery, and that his reception has been of the most cordial and gratifying character. We regret exceedingly to hear of Colonel Thorrington's serious illness, and hope soon to know that he is better. Many prayers will go up for his restoration to health.

Montgomery, Ala., Feb. 18, 1871.

Dr. Parker—Dear Brother: The important interests of the Southern University required and commanded my attention until the middle of the session. On the fifteenth instant I gave up my charge in Greensboro and entered on my duties as pastor of the Methodist church in this city. The cordial welcome and kind attentions of gentlemen who met me at the depot, and of ladies at the parsonage, and the comforts found in the house, fill me with gratitude, and inspire me with desire to be useful. I enter on the work with a free heart and with strong hope. My excellent predecessor, Rev. John Mathews, now of your city, left the church here in good order. He merits commendation, and it is freely accorded by his numerous friends and admirers, and by myself, because of his ability and faithfulness. I hope that he will be a blessing to his charge in New Orleans, as he was in Montgomery.

Our honored brother, J. Thorrington, Esq., is very ill. We are almost hopeless with respect to his restoration. He seems prepared for life or death.

E. Wadsworth.

Heretical Coughing.—The Cheney Case.—The Western Christian Advocate contains the following notice of this notable case. The coughing is a decidedly ingenious dodge on the part of weak-kneed churchmen.

Mr. Cheney, the Episcopal clergyman tried for heresy, has been found guilty, and deprived of all ministerial functions, which is as everybody expected. The trial was ex parte throughout, and objections offered by the lawyers for the defense were overruled by the four clergymen constituting the court, and "universally those that were offered by the prosecution were sustained." So says an eye-witness of the proceedings. Rev. Dr. Sullivan being upon the stand, was asked if it had not been, within his knowledge, the custom for bishops, presbyters and deacons "to add and omit words from the service of the church." The answer is ludicrous enough to give at length: "I have known one instance in which a clergyman was always attacked with a violent fit of coughing when he came to that word 'regenerate;' and when he had recovered from it he had got beyond it." Mr. Cheney's main offense seems to have been the dropping of this unlucky word; and yet he was very accommodating, for when parents asked him to use it in administering baptism to their children he always complied!

Important Teaching.—The teacher is like a switchman who holds the key to the switches on the railroad. If he does his duty faithfully the train will reach its destination safely; if he neglects it, disaster and ruin follow. A misplaced switch or a wrong signal may send hundreds into eternity unprepared.

The Kingdom in Little Children.

To watch and nurse the spiritual development in little children is the most important business in their education. Especially is this duty incumbent upon parents and Sunday school teachers; and yet how few of them are qualified for this most delicate and most Christian office? The work of the Spirit in the child's heart is scarcely credited by many, and the capacity of childhood for religious experience is a matter of grave misapprehension, where it is not altogether discredited. The success of parental care and of Sunday school instruction will depend greatly upon the views and convictions entertained upon this subject. The kingdom of God in the little child is modified by the circumstances of childhood, but it may be there in power, to be developed with the growth of the mind in knowledge and experience. Those to whom the care of this early implanted germ of spiritual life is committed cannot overestimate their responsibility, nor can they be too anxious to seek the requisite qualifications for their work. Too many of our Sunday school teachers have wrong views, or no views at all, on the subject. In some instances they are without spirituality themselves, and are utterly incapable of awakening and guiding the spiritual convictions of the young. In other instances they are disbelievers practically in the conversion of little children, and regard themselves as sowing seed which may spring up and bear fruit when the pupils get old enough to be regenerated. Right convictions on the subject of the spiritual capacity of little children lie at the very foundation of useful and saving teaching. The interest and importance of this matter will justify the following extracts, as quoted by the Independent, from the address of the Rev. L. W. Bacon, delivered before the annual convention of the Maryland and District of Columbia Sunday School Association, held recently at Baltimore:

"What question is of higher consequence to all of us—to you and to me—not only as teachers, but as men and women, than this question: How does a little child receive the kingdom of heaven? * * It is painful to think what mistakes have been made even by the greatest and best men on this cardinal question. Turning back the records of the church of Christ, we are as those who, leading in the strata of rocks the history of God's work in the creation, come now and then upon the relics of some horrid and repulsive monster. There occurs to me just now one of the fairest pages in the history of the church, that on which the illustrious Jonathan Edwards wrote the story of that unquestionably divine work—which was wrought through the preaching of himself and of the Tennents and Wesley and Whitefield—the event known in American history as 'The Great Awakening.' Amid the memorials which he gives of God's grace working upon one heart and another, he mentions, as a thing quite out of the course not only of nature, but of grace, the story of a little girl of four years old, who passed in successive stages through all the phases and symptoms of a religious experience, as those symptoms were laid down by the doctors of that day—from carelessness to seriousness, from seriousness to gloom, from gloom to despair, and then (after a sufficient interval) from despair to joy and peace in believing; and the good man tells the story with the evident conviction that that was the regular and only correct way for a little child to enter the kingdom of heaven, but that it was not much to be expected that many of them would come by that course. Alongside of this story let me put another of a different sort, but illustrating the same point. One of the most eminent and beloved of the pastors of New York city was telling me, in a little confidential circle of brethren, the beautiful story of his Christian experience: how with the earliest dawn of reflection he became conscious of a deep, tender love for God his Father and Christ his Saviour; how this feeling grew with his childish growth and strengthened with his strength; how in later years there were variations and fluctuations of feeling, and crises of religious experience, which had made him suspect that at such or such a time he was converted, and first began to be a Christian; but how, as his knowledge and experience had grown, he had settled clearly in the conviction that, if ever he had known the grace of God, he had known it from the time of those earliest recollections. A few days after this I met the venerable father of my friend on Broadway, and told him that his son had been telling me the story of his religious life. 'Oh, no, he hasn't,' said the good old man; 'he can't remember that story. Only his mother and myself can tell it. It goes back to his cradle!' Who will undertake to say at what point such a life may not be begun by the in-working of the Holy Spirit!

"But mark what sort of reception this sort of Christian meets with in the church! We are not prepared to expect divine grace in the mouth of babes and sucklings; and so, when we see the signs of grace, there is nothing to be done but to put the subject of them into the category of grown-up Christians at once. We forget that regeneration doesn't change a child into a grown-up person; but only changes it into a Christian child, but just as much a child for all that. 'And so,' said my friend, 'they did all they could to ruin me.' They made an 'infant phenomenon' of him. In that great metropolitan Presbyterian church they stood him up on a bench to make public prayers in the prayer meetings as soon as he could talk plain. In short, they gave full illustration of the fact that the church of our day does not know the art of caring for Christian little children.

"There is one shrewd, caustic remark about the prevailing type of evangelical religion—a remark of the Rev. Charles Kingsley, the novelist, and one so just and so pungent that for the sake of it one may almost forgive the animus with which it was uttered. He says: Some eighteen hundred years ago there went to and fro upon the earth one who preached to grown-up men and women that they should repent and be converted, and become as little children; but that now-a-days it is the fashion to go about preaching to children that they should repent and be converted, and become like grown folks."

LETTER FROM GALVESTON.

Sunday School Concert. — Ryland Chapel.—Dedication Services.

Mr. Editor: We have been enjoying, for some days, some interesting religious services. First, our Sunday school has had a parting concert at the old chapel, where the teachers and the older scholars have spent so many delightful hours in devout and social joy. The chapel was crowded with the parents and old folks. The children were placed at the end, in pyramidal style, up to the ceiling, rank o'er rank and file o'er file, like hot-house plants, only more beautiful. We had pleasant speeches, and one grateful tribute to the memory and uses of the venerable old chapel. Then song after song poured their harmonies upon our ears, warbled by infant and youthful tongues. At the close Bro. Howard, our excellent superintendent, in a brief and touching address, called up some pleasant reminiscences of the Sunday school in Galveston. The concert was a success and a satisfaction to all.

On Saturday morning the exercises of our first quarterly meeting, for the present Conference year, began, Dr. Mood preaching us an excellent and edifying sermon on private prayer. On Saturday night we had a farewell service, Rev. Dr. Alexander and Bro. Wesson, the presiding elder, conducting the services. In 1837 Bro. Alexander, Dr. Ruter and Rev. Littleton Fowler came as missionaries to Texas, Dr. Alexander leading the advance. He first penetrated east Texas. In a month after entering the republic he had organized a circuit, licensed preachers and exhorters, and put the machinery of Methodism into immediate and successful operation. He says to his surprise and joy he found a people prepared of the Lord, and hungry for the bread of life. Once, when he had preached an hour and a half, (it was necessary to say much to convey clear and full information,) he was weary, and retired for rest. When he had rested for the space of a half hour the brother at whose house he had preached came to him and said: "Bro. Alexander, you must preach again; the people will not consent to go until you do." So he arose and preached another hour and a half. At a camp meeting in the grove he began to preach, and it began to rain. He closed his book and paused, but the people would not move nor go away, so he resumed his sermon, and preached on in the rain—certainly not a dry sermon. He came to Galveston, where there were but a few shanties on the then naked and desolate island. The Ryland chapel was principally built by the liberality of the Rev. William Ryland, of Washington City, (the first preacher, by the way, I ever heard, when a wee boy, in Washington City.) He gave $1,800. This, with some other means collected by Rev. Dr. Summers, built Ryland chapel. It has been enlarged, but has long been too small for the needs of the congregation. So the people have built a new, beautiful and spacious church, at a cost of sixty odd thousand dollars. The hive has swarmed, and seeks a larger place. Bro. Wesson also gave some interesting historical items about Methodism in Galveston.

Sunday morning was not promising as to weather—cloudy and a slight mist—but before the hour of service the people began to move toward the church. It is at the corner of Broad and Bath avenues. It is a brick structure—a large, comfortable and well adapted basement, and a beautiful auditorium above, of a capacity of about six hundred. It has cost some $65,000. Pastors of the Presbyterian and Baptist Churches, Drs. Bunting and Howard, suspended their services for the morning, and were in attendance with their people. The house and gallery will seat, when reasonably well filled, seven hundred, but by aid of hundreds of chairs and crowding we had a full thousand, I suppose. The services began by a voluntary anthem by the choir. Then the youngest child of Bro. Allen Lewis, (who went down in the wild sea, on the unfortunate Verona, in October last,) was dedicated to God in holy baptism—many remembering, with full hearts, the little orphan's father's untimely fate. Then a portion of Scripture was read by Dr. Howard, of the Baptist Church. Then the hymn by the choir. Prayer by Dr. R. Alexander. Then another lesson was read by Dr. Bunting, of the Presbyterian Church. Then Bishop Marvin read texts from the prayer of Solomon, one hundred and second Psalm and the twenty-first chapter of Revelation. His sermon was profound, instructive and eloquent. I cannot attempt a description. At its close he announced there was a debt of $15,000; that we wished it provided for before the house was dedicated. This was a large sum especially in view of the fact that the same congregation had been called upon, not more than three months before, to subscribe some $7,000 or $8,000 toward the completion of the house. The collection proceeded, and $11,500 were subscribed. The announcement was now made that the act of dedication would be deferred until night. It was now two o'clock P. M., and it came down with rain and a north wind. The night settled down dark, wet and cold; but we rallied to the church—some two hundred and fifty present, I suppose. Dr. Mood gave us a good sermon on some aspects of the divinity of Christ. Then your correspondent rose to continue the morning collecting—$3,500 were still wanting. In a little while it was all subscribed. Then the trustees came in a body before the altar, and their chairman, in the form of the Discipline, presented the house to the Bishop for dedication, who formally and solemnly presented it to God for the holy use of his worship.

We all felt glad. It is no small nor common affair for a congregation of three hundred communicants to subscribe in one day $15,000; but it has been done, and the holy house made, like Aaron's robe, "for glory and for beauty," has been given to God. We have commenced special services and hope for good results.

Pianos and Organs.—We call attention to the advertisement of Mr. Louis Grunewald in our issue of to-day. This well established and reliable house is commended to the attention of our readers. The Mason & Hamlin organs are so well and favorably known as to scarcely need commendation. Read carefully the advertisement alluded to above.

NEW PUBLICATIONS.

NOTES, EXPLANATORY AND PRACTICAL, ON THE GOSPELS.—By Albert Barnes. In two volumes. New York: Harper & Brothers, publishers. Received from George Ellis & Brother, 82 Camp street, New Orleans.

These volumes are familiar to the public. They were first published nearly forty years ago, and have gone through a good many editions. Their theological tone is of course Calvinistic, but their popular and practical character, and the evangelical spirit which pervades them, have contributed to give them a wide circulation among all denominations. The present edition of the Notes is revised, printed from new plates, contains many fresh and useful illustrations, and gives the results of the most recent investigations. The recent death of the venerable author gives emphasis to his words which he quotes from the preface of the first revised edition, published in 1840: "Nor can I be insensible to the fact that in the form in which these volumes now go forth to the public I may continue, though dead, to speak to the living, and that the work may be exerting an influence on immortal minds when I am in the eternal world. There are no sentiments here which I wish to alter; none that I do not believe to be truth that will abide the investigations of the great day; none of which I am ashamed."

FAIR FRANCE. Impressions of a Traveler. By the author of "John Halifax, Gentleman." New York: Harper & Brothers, 1871.

Miss Muloch, now Mrs. Craill, is well known as one of the best female writers of the day. This sketch of travels in France is full of vivacity, and abounds in incident. The author's womanly intuition and nice discrimination are displayed on every page. The work will be read with peculiar interest just at this time, when so much of the world's attention is directed to the land and people which it describes. For sale by George Ellis & Brother, New Orleans.

NEW MONTHLY MAGAZINE.—W. P. Harrison, D. D., editor. Nashville: Publishing House of the Methodist Episcopal Church South. The first number of our new periodical was good; the second is better. We are glad to find it growing in size, in its subscription list, and also in merit. Its careful perusal has not been a professional task, but a genuine and unalloyed pleasure. Our church is peculiarly fortunate in the possession of such a publication, and we hope our people will show their appreciation of it by giving the enterprising publisher at least ten thousand subscribers this year. The illustrations in the February number are beautiful and add to the attractiveness of the magazine. The editor, Dr. Harrison, is doing his work with industry and ability, and deserves the largest encouragement. Contents: The Dean of Santiago; Resignation; The Drama of King Saul's Life; Life Leaves; The Dying Spaniard; The Ancient Tithe Law; Do you Think he is Married; The Red Nose; The Young Widow; Folk Lore from Many Lands; An Old Maid's Evenings; Celebrities that I have Seen; February; The Old Oak Tree; Anecdotes of Dogs; Wonders of the Sea; Historical Sketches; The Closing Scene; The Apocryphal New Testament; Modern Literature; A Reminiscence of Point Clear; The Modern Raid upon the Book of Genesis; Kindness to Animals; Wit and Wisdom of the Ancients; The Little Boy that Died; Moderation—the Key to Truth; Editor's Round Table.

PETERS' MUSICAL MONTHLY, published by J. L. Peters, New York, at $3 per annum, is devoted altogether to music. The February number contains thirty-five pages of music, fifteen pieces in all, and mostly of a valuable character. The numbers, when bound at the end of the year, will make a volume of rare value and very cheap. This periodical will be a treat to all who love music.

ARTHUR'S HOME MAGAZINE and THE CHILDREN'S HOUR are the first received of the periodicals for March. The ladies will find the engravings and fashion plates of the magazine satisfactory. The literary department is excellent, and contains something to suit housekeepers, gardeners, poets and almost everybody. The Children's Hour is a first-rate child's magazine, well edited and handsomely illustrated. The Ladies' Magazine and the Children's Hour will both be sent to one address for $3.50 per annum. Published by T. S. Arthur & Sons, Philadelphia.

OLD AND NEW.—The February number has chapter sixteen of Mrs. Stowe's Pink and White Tyranny; Raphael's Saint Cecilia; Protoplasms Again; Optimism; The Nearer Hemisphere; Sorrento Papers, and Practical Atheism, besides the Examiner, Record of Progress, and other articles of more or less interest. Roberts Brothers, publishers, Boston. Price, $4 per annum.

Obituaries.

PERRY OSIER was born in Montgomery county, North Carolina, January 4, 1810, and died in Montgomery county, Alabama, December 12, 1870.

Bro. Osier, at the early age of twelve years, was brought to see himself a guilty, helpless sinner, and embraced Christ as his only hope. He at once united with the Methodist Episcopal Church, and has ever maintained the Christian character through all his pilgrim course, and sank down into the grave with the pleasing hope of the faithful.

His house was a good home for ministers. He gave them a cordial welcome, and seemed to enjoy their society. He was a steady, straightforward man, punctually at church, strict in all his business transactions, but carefully honest in his dealings.

Only a few weeks before his journey's end I conversed with him freely upon his spiritual condition. He assured me that to him death would not be a surprise—that God's free grace had sustained him for nearly fifty years, and that his faith was strong to believe that Jesus would be with him to the end.

The wife of his youth, who shared with him the pleasures and ills of life, he has left in tears, and several bereaved children mourn the loss of an affectionate father. But the reflection should be joyous to them that dark clouds are fringed with light. While it appears gloomy to lay our kindred in the cold, silent grave, yet faith gilds this melancholy scene with the triumphant coming forth of mortality to immortality, and the reunion of loved ones in mansions of light, to be severed no more. God help the wife and children so to live that they may meet their head "in that beautiful world."

W. F. NORTON, P. C.

UNION, ALA., Jan. 30, 1871.

Death has again invaded our ranks, and "the mourners go about our streets." God has come very near to the people of Summerfield within the last few months, and has spoken loud and earnestly to his church here. Within the last few days one of the most exemplary members of our church and one of the brightest ornaments of society, in the person of Mrs. Dr. VAUGHN, has been taken from our midst. Truly here was a shining mark for death—just in the prime of life, surrounded by devoted friends and family, in the midst of affluence, just having removed to her new and comfortable home. Here, every one would say, if to be found on earth, is true happiness. Even here the destroyer enters, and in one sad hour what a wreck of human hopes and human plans! But though the king of terrers dealt a heavy blow to surviving friends and kindred, he bore off no other spoils from this encounter, for he found his victim armed and ready for the charge; and though but a feeble woman, she was a true Christian, and in the strength of grace was enabled to shout: "O death! where is thy sting? O grave! where is thy victory?"

The change has been a happy one for the deceased. She has gained all—gained heaven. But her surviving friends and family are the losers; and how much they have lost none can tell except those who knew her well. Mrs. Vaughn was a daughter of Hon. William J. Alston, well known in the political history of the State, and for the last forty years prized and esteemed in the first circles of society in south Alabama. His daughters, of course, reared under such circumstances, would be intelligent and attractive. But Mrs. Vaughn was naturally lovely. Beautiful in person, amiable in temper and spirit, naturally endowed with rare gifts, especially in the department of music, she was bound to be a ruling spirit in any circle in which she moved. Here are natural endowments, social opportunities, and educational advantages, both as a pupil and teacher. Add to all these the higher endowments of our holy Christianity, and we have the highest style of woman earth ever presents. Such a loss we have sustained as a church and community in the death of our departed sister. But if we are losers, what a loss is such a woman to her numerous family, to her orphan children, to her deeply bereaved and devoted husband! The apostle says:—"Pray for one another." Let the church, then, earnestly pray for this deeply afflicted family, entreating the Lord that these light afflictions may work for them a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory.

Her death occurred on the twenty-seventh of January, 1871, in the —— year of her age.

In conclusion I have a single reflection to add. From this case what a striking example have we of the triumphs of grace. Just before she breathed her last I repeated in her hearing a verse from one of our hymns:

"Jesus can make a dying bed
Feel soft as downy pillows are;
Whilst on his breast I lean my head,
And breathe my life out sweetly there."

"This," said she, "I now realize, and this is my dying testimony."

The Authorized Biography of Gen. Lee.

CARD FROM GEN. GORDON.

EDITOR NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE—Dear Sir: Permit me to reply to the inquiry of numerous correspondents in regard to an authentic biography of General Lee by saying, through your columns, that at the request of General Lee's family Colonel Charles Marshall, his former Aid-de-camp and Military Secretary, is now writing a sketch of his life from his official and personal papers, furnished by the family for his exclusive use, which will very soon be published by the University Publishing Company, 4 Bond street, New York, in the "Memorial Volume" now being prepared by the Faculty of Washington College.

It will be an additional inducement to the Southern people to subscribe for this volume to know that the entire profit from its sale will go to the "Lee Memorial Fund."

Respectfully yours, J. B. GORDON.

WEARINESS.

BY HENRY W. LONGFELLOW.

O little feet! that such long years
Must wander on through hopes and fears;
Must ache and bleed beneath your load;
I, nearer to the wayside inn,
Where toil shall cease and rest begin,
Am weary, thinking of your road!

O little hands! that, weak or strong,
Have still to serve or rule so long,
Have still so long to give or ask;
I, who so much with book and pen
Have toiled among my fellow men,
Am weary, thinking of your task.

O little hearts! that throb and beat
With such impatient, feverish heat,
Such limitless and strong desires;
Mine, that so long has glowed and burned
With passions into ashes turned,
Now covers and conceals its fires.

O little souls! as pure and white,
As crystalline as rays of light
Direct from heaven, their source divine:
Refracted through the mist of years,
How red my setting sun appears,
How lurid looks this soul of mine!

DECISION.

A boy needs decision of character more than any other trait, and I can sympathize with a boy who is doing his best to cultivate this virtue. It is his sheet-anchor, which, by the grace and help of God, can hold him right when all else fails him. A boy should learn how to say "No," and not only know how to say it, but how to live up to it. "When sinners entice thee, consent thou not"—that means, say "No," with emphasis, and after saying no, leave at once. It is your only safety. If you say, "Get thee behind me, Satan," he won't "get." He never goes away politely and humbly when ordered—not he. He will face you, and the only way to get him behind you is to turn around and walk away, and then, of course, he is behind you. This requires decision.

If Tom and Harry tempt you to run away from school, or go where you ought not to go, and you reply in an undecided way, "I guess not—perhaps it is not best, I rather think I'd better not," you are Tom and Harry's boy. They have you sure. If a boy is undecided he is lost. But if, when they make such a proposition to you, you say, "No, sir," and I think you might be pardoned for saying, "No, sir ee," and turn away, why then you are safe, and neither Tom nor Harry nor Satan has the least hold upon you. A boy who is undecided in his moral character, in his sports, and when he grows up in his business, floats, drifts along to sure destruction; for any craft which drifts is doomed.

Any of you who understand machinery know what it is when an engine is on a "dead center." Let me explain to those who do not understand. When the walking beam of a steam engine has lifted the crank to its highest point, or depressed it to its lowest, that point is called the "dead center." If the crank swings over, as it usually does, then the rod goes down from the highest point and up from the lowest; but sometimes, when an engine is going slowly, the crank does swing past the center, and then, as the piston presses straight down or draws straight up, does not tend to turn the crank as in any other position, the engine stops, and the crank has to be swung over the center by hand.

Now, this "dead center" is in an engine just what indecision is in a boy or man. The crank moves slowly, and without force enough to carry it over that point; it is undecided which way to go, and it stops, and till it can be started by extraneous force the boat is at the mercy of the winds and waves. If a boy's mind moves slowly and in an undecided manner, his moral force, his engine, gets on a "dead center," and away he floats down stream.

I was once standing on the dock, in one of our seaport towns, watching a large steamer getting under way. The current was running swiftly by the wharf, and the river full of large shipping. The steamer cast off and swung out into the stream; the engine made three or four revolutions and then stopped.

The pilot sounded the bell in the engine room to go ahead, but it was not answered; the boat drifted swiftly, and, in a moment, crash it went against a ship and carried away her rigging around the bowsprit; then smash into another steamboat, and made a wreck of her wheel-house and badly damaged herself. The pilot was frantic with rage at what he deemed the stupidity of the engineer; the officers of the craft were loudly cursing the stupidity of the pilot, and there was a great running to and fro of all hands, when the pilot was told by the engineer that his engine was on a "dead center," and, until his crank was pushed over in some way, he was powerless. By this time the boat had drifted a long way, and was almost a wreck; indeed, so badly damaged that she could not go on her voyage, and in her drifting she had crippled several other craft. The only remedy was to down anchor, which the pilot did as soon as he saw the engine was useless. But it was too late. The damage was done, and the boat was afterward hauled off for repairs.

Now, boys, make the application; don't wreck yourself and others by indecision; don't drift and float down the swift stream of life with all your energies on a "dead center." I always think of this when I see a man who might do a great deal of good in every way, "loafing" through life, a curse to himself and to all about him.—Churchman.

How a Rat Stole Eggs.—"'The rats having made free with my eggs, I determined to watch the process of lowering them from the shelf on which they were kept. Having concealed myself, I soon saw a rat mount the shelf, nearly three feet from the ground, take an egg between his paws, and break at one end a hole large enough to insert the end of his jaw; clasping the egg against his stomach with his two paws, and steadying it with his jaw in the hole he had made, he walked backward to the edge of the shelf, and then deliberately threw himself down, so that he fell with his back on the ground, and the egg nestling at his stomach. He turned over, and was decamping with the egg; but I stopped him and recovered it, unbroken, save the little hole at one end in which he had inserted his jaw.'"

Now, doctor, don't you think it was a little mean to take the egg away from the rat after all his trouble? He might have been allowed to keep that one, at least, and then the rest could have been put out of his reach. Perhaps he wouldn't have come again on finding out his danger.

"I can tell you something about danger," says Uncle John, "though it is not about rats, but men:

Danger Equally Shared.—"A well authenticated incident is related of a French officer, General Cherin. He was once conducting a detachment through a deep and dangerous glen. Seeing that his men rather flagged, he spoke to them encouragingly, counseling them to bear the fatigues of the march patiently. A soldier near him muttered angrily: 'It is all well for you to talk of patience—you who are mounted on a fine horse; but for us poor wretches it is a different matter.' The quick ear of the general heard the words; perhaps the narrow banks that hemmed in the road, concentrating the sound, conveyed them. He felt that it was unjust that his men should think he would not willingly share all their dangers, so he reined in his horse at once, and, dismounting, said to the murmuring soldier: 'Here, take my place awhile.' Scarcely had the latter mounted, his face covered with confusion, when a shot from the adjacent heights struck the poor fellow, and he fell badly wounded. The general turned to his troop and said, as some were told to carry off their comrade: 'You see, my men, that the most elevated place is not the least dangerous.' Life is in this like a battle-field, and it should make the lowly contented with their lot, that the most elevated places are by no means the least dangerous."

That's true, Uncle John, as a great many folks in the world find out. We ought all to get our place of duty, whether high or low, dangerous or safe.—Methodist.

Universalism in a Nutshell.—I have often seen Universalism reduced to an absurdity. But seldom, if ever, has it been better done than in the following, which I beg to recite for the benefit of any who may need it.

"I am a Universalist," said G. K., boastingly, "and you orthodox are not fair in saying that our system is inconsistent with reason." This he addressed to one who held an opposite system.

"But I will prove the irrationality of your system," said his friend. "You believe that Christ died to save all men?"

"Yes, I do."

"And you don't believe there is a hell?"

"No, I do not."

"You don't believe there is any punishment hereafter?"

"No, I do not; men are punished for their sins in this life."

"Well, now, let us put up your 'rational' system together if we can. It amounts to just this: that Christ the Saviour died to save all men from nothing at all! Not from hell, because, according to you, there is none. Not from punishment in a future state of being, for he receives his whole punishment in this life. Yours is the absurd spectacle of ropes and life-preservers thrown at an immense expense to a man who is on dry land, and in no danger of being drowned. Let me tell you that your religion is stark infidelity. If you heartily believe the Bible you could not believe Universalism."—Central Presbyterian.

The Farm and Garden.

IRISH POTATOES.

This is the season to plant Irish potatoes for early crops. To raise these to the best advantage it is necessary to plant and cultivate them with well applied labor and practical good sense. Experience has taught us that in raising potatoes they, like all other crops, must be treated according to the location and quality of the soil. In the fertile land of this section they must be planted in ridges, which are banked up sufficiently high to permit clear drainage, and allow the potatoes to lie and grow in a dry bed. These esculents do not thrive well in packed or wet soil, and when gathered from such beds quickly rot when exposed to atmospheric influences. Those gathered from dry beds are always larger, and keep better than those raised in any other manner.

Where potatoes are planted in clay soil they should be cultivated according to the peculiarities of the season and location. The most successful planting of this character, in clay soil, that has come under our observation, resulted from placing the seed in the ground, on or near the surface level, and then covering the hills with earth as the necessity of the plants require. In a long continued season of drought potatoes can be kept bedded low, so as to apply all the moisture possible. In wet seasons the earth must be hoed and plowed, and cast on the hills from below the level of the potatoes growing in the beds.

In clearings, where there is shade, potatoes always grow well if they are properly cared for. Their beds must always be several inches above the surface of the gutters which lie between the rows. In this way drainage and proper dryness are secured, and the fruit does not grow to vines, as happens when these precautions are neglected.

Potatoes can be cut into pieces for planting. Each piece must have at least one eye, and that planted so that it looks upward. In dry, warm ground these can be covered two to three inches deep, but they should not be covered with wet clods or sod.—Our Home Journal.

TOMATOES.

You must begin now if you would have early tomatoes. Prepare a special hot bed, and see that every joint is closed to keep out the cold, have a good rug and shutter ready to cover it up at night. After the first violent heat has subsided sow your seeds. Put them in drills four inches apart; sow the seeds very shallow, and make the surface firm by patting with the back of the spade. If there is lack of moisture to cause the seeds to germinate wet the earth before sowing, and, after it has dried sufficiently to work handsomely, sow. Never wet the ground after the seeds are planted, and be sure and make the surface firm. When the plants are up give them air during warm, sunny days, but do not risk the shutters and rug off at night. If you have no rug or mat to cover the sashes, use an abundance of crab-grass straw. One sash, three by six feet, will hold one thousand plants. In the latter part of February, or first of March, the plants in the nursery bed will be getting too large to keep in so small a space, therefore we must provide more room. Prepare another hot bed of five sashes, and transplant all the plants to spaces four or five inches apart each way. As they grow larger they must be again transplanted; but it will not be necessary to make the third hot bed; they may go into the cold frames from which the cabbages have been taken. Be sure, however, to transplant all the plants; do not simply thin them out. Their roots must be broken. About the twentieth of April these plants will be in bloom—large, strong and stocky—and when you draw them out of the beds it will be necessary to saturate the bed with water. Each plant will carry from the bed a ball of earth nearly as large as your head, and when set out you will find that they will not droop or wilt, but grow off at once.—Practical Planter.

Fruit Trees.—Grafting.—During the present balmy weather the season is unusually fine for grafting, which should be attended to promptly during February and March, but not later in this latitude. The grafts should be used immediately after being cut. They can be protected perfectly by laying over them one or two thicknesses of coarse cloth saturated with varnish, which, when dry, proves the best protection we have ever tried.

A grafting wax, which is in general use and gives satisfaction, is made from a fourth pound of tallow and a third pound of beeswax. While in a melted condition add about two-thirds of a pound of rosin, and while the mass is cooling work with a wooden knife into a pasty condition.

Fruit trees should be pruned as early as possible to give them fresh air and space to grow, without being crowded or debarred from sunshine.

When they are transplanted those should be chosen on which there is no appearance of the buds having begun to swell. Those having started buds will not do well, unless the trees have a foot or more of their native earth transplanted with them, and the earth must not be disturbed about their roots. Budded vines, shrubs and other plants should be treated in the same manner.—Our Home Journal.

Alsike Clover.—This valuable forage plant is a native of Sweden, but has been cultivated for many years in England. It has been grown in several parts of the United States, but, as yet, on a limited scale, and is highly esteemed as a forage plant by every one who has grown it.

"It is best adapted to moist and strong soils, and has the property of self-sowing when the flowers are left to mature, which will cause it to endure fifteen, twenty or more years. The usual course of management is to cut it once a year for hay, and afterward have it for pasturage. Its flowers, which appear in great profusion in June, resemble in shape those of the common white clover, but are larger, and of a rosy tint, of a sweet, agreeable odor, and afford an excellent forage for bees. It may be sown with autumn or spring grain."

Pruning Trees.—We prefer to prune young apple trees at the time they are planted; but if this has been neglected, we would perform the operation as soon as we discovered our neglect, no matter at what time of year this might occur. June and July are both good months in which to prune both apple and peach trees. If branches are shortened at this season a renewed vigorous growth will be more likely to follow than if the operation is deferred until later. There are certainly seasons which are far preferable to others for pruning; but our rule is to cut off or shorten a branch just as soon after we discover that it needs it as possible. For a general rule pruning of deciduous trees may be done in the winter months, or just after the leaves are fully developed in the spring or early summer.—Hearth and Home.

Bee Keeping.—The Kansas Farmer says: "There is one variety of 'stock' raising which is causing quite a stir in the agricultural world. We refer to bee keeping; not simply the keeping of two, three or even a dozen hives, but three, five or ten hundred. That our broad prairies, with their countless thousands of flowers, will afford an abundance of forage, there is no doubt; but bee keeping, like cattle raising or cheese making, or, in fact, any other branch of farming, requires much skill, tact and judgment—more, in fact, than every man can bring to his disposal. Still there are some who will be benefited by investing in bees here in Kansas."

Common Red Clover.—The best method of sowing the common clover seed is upon winter wheat, in the month of March, or with oats and other spring grain, as early as the ground is suitable for plowing; put in with a drill, or sow broadcast if the oats have been harrowed in. Sow one bushel to six or eight acres.

Cabbages.—All good gardeners sowed their seeds in October last, and have wintered over their plants in frames. These should be transplanted into the open ground during February. Make the ground as rich as you do for beets, and plant in rows thirty inches apart, the plants to stand two feet asunder in the drills.

A Very Bad Memory.—Father: "Mary, my love, do you remember the text of this morning?" Mary: "No, pa, I never can remember the text; I've such a bad memory." Mother: "By the way, did you notice Susan Brown?" Mary: "Oh, yes; what a fright! She had on her last year's bonnet done up, a pea-green silk, a black lace mantilla, brown boots, an imitation honiton collar, a lava bracelet, her old earrings, and such a fan—O, my!" Mother: "Well, my dear, your memory is certainly bad."

They are now making at Colt's factory a new patent lock for the United States mail bags. When fastened a numbered plate of glass covers the key-hole, and this glass has to be broken before the bag can be unlocked or the lock tampered with. It is said to be the most complete lock ever invented. Five thousand of them have been ordered by the Post Office Department.

"No, my dear," said a mother to her daughter, who had been taking a nap before dressing for the evening party, "you needn't rearrange your hair; you couldn't make it look more scrambled if you tried."

MISCELLANEOUS.

THE ARROW TIE.

FOR BALING COTTON THE ARROW TIE is the most popular, being the best Cotton Tie in use.

Planters and Cotton Press men everywhere prefer it to all others.

THE ARROW TIE

was used to cover MORE THAN HALF THE CROP OF 1869, giving entire satisfaction.

The patentee and manufacturer of the celebrated ARROW TIE, J. J. McComb, formerly of New Orleans, now residing in Liverpool, having control of the best and most extensive Rolling Mills in Europe, is constantly importing large stocks of this popular Tie, manufactured of the very best quality of English iron, to meet the increasing demand for it throughout all the Cotton States.

Planters can buy or order the ARROW TIE of all dealers in Iron Ties, and of country merchants generally, at the lowest market price; and we respectfully solicit the patronage of Planters and Factors everywhere.

MEDICAL.

N. JENKINS' ANNIHILATOR,

A Purely Vegetable Compound

FOR THE PERMANENT CURE OF

RHEUMATISM AND GOUT.

WE TAKE PLEASURE in being able to announce to the public that the above mentioned painful diseases can be entirely and permanently cured. Many popular medicines of the day have rendered inestimable relief to sufferers from these diseases. But experience has demonstrated the fact that such relief is only temporary, and that the patient is not cured through their instrumentality.

The remedy now offered eradicates every vestige of the diseases of which it claims to be the "Annihilator," and there can be no relapse. Let all those, then, who are suffering from these complaints send for a bottle of N. JENKINS' ANNIHILATOR, and give it a trial. It is a simple preparation of purely vegetable substances, and can do no harm, whereas my unparalleled success in the use of it in the southern and southwestern parts of this State, (to which localities, and especially to Fisher T. Rawson and James E. Bradley, would I refer those who desire facts before trying it for themselves,) justifies me in offering the Annihilator as a positive cure for Rheumatism and Gout. This is a broad assertion, but a fair trial of it will certainly convince the most skeptical that it is not an exaggerated one.

What the Annihilator Will Do.

1. From one to two bottles will cure permanently any first attack of Rheumatism or Gout.

2. From two to twelve bottles, according to durat on of disease, will cure permanently any case of Rheumatism or Gout.

3. It will cure many cases of Neuralgia from the simple fact that the origin of the disease has been of rheumatic character.

PRICE, $5 PER BOTTLE.

No charge made except for medicine. For directions as to use and further information address

BRACES AND TRUSSES.—DR. JOHN ANGELL informs the medical profession and others that he has constantly on hand and for sale a complete assortment of RANING'S TRUSSES, Spinal and Shoulder Braces, and other appliances for the prevention, relief and cure of general debility, physical weakness and derangements of public speakers and singers, palpitation of the heart, bronchitis and weakness of the lungs, spinal weakness and deformity, dyspepsia and nervous affections, constipation and chronic diarrhea, female derangements and extreme displacements of the womb, RUPTURE, Piles, prolapsus-ani, and weakness of the male and female system.

These light, cool and springy auxiliaries are the special favorites of the profession, are intensely common-sense and rational in their action; supply a missing link in treatment; place the above affections in a new and more hopeful light, and often complete cures where medicine can only mitigate, or more than it can cure a hernia or a dislocated joint.

He specially desires an examination of these appliances by the profession and others. Where necessary the professional application of the above braces will be under our supervision or that of the family physician.

These valuable appliances are sanctioned by a large number of the medical profession in the United States and Europe as the best adapted to fulfill the purpose for which they are intended, and the Trusses and Braces are adopted by the United States government for the use of the army and navy. Terms cash. Consultations free. Send for their pamphlet—it is better to call.

Guyot's Geographical Text-Books.

"Incomparably superior to anything published."—Agassiz.

Introduction to the Study of Geography.
Elementary Geography.
Intermediate Geography.
Common School Geography.

Guyot's System is approved and indorsed by the most distinguished literary and scientific men of our nation; such as Profs. Agassiz, Dana, Tenney, Henry and others, celebrated in science throughout Europe as well as at home.

The fact that ONE MILLION (1,000,000) copies of the work are in use in the schools of our country, at the present time, is proof of the unparalleled success attending the New System, for no other series of books ever published in America have ever secured so rapid and extensive introduction. They are the text-books in nearly all the colleges, seminaries, normal schools, etc., in the United States; in the public schools of the cities of New York, Brooklyn, Rochester, and most of the cities and towns of the Eastern States; Cincinnati, Cleveland, Columbus, Springfield, Toledo, Marietta, and most of the other important towns and cities, numbering nine thousand schools in Ohio, and hundreds of towns and cities in the other Western States, while in the Southern States and California they are being extensively adopted.

Believing that the publication of Professor Guyot's series has marked a new and better era in the presentation of geographical science, that by it the pupils of this generation will obtain a clearer, more definite and extended knowledge of the world on which they live, and that it is so systematized as to render that knowledge more valuable and permanent, we commend it to the attention of all interested in educational improvements and progress.

THE CHURCH OF THE STRANGERS,

are published and mailed, postage paid, to subscribers regularly during the week succeeding their delivery. No sermons are so elegantly printed either in Europe or in this country.

The Church of the Strangers is a Christian communion, confinsed in part of persons who have been members of the Baptist, Congregational, Episcopal, Lutheran, Methodist, Presbyterian and other denominations, and in part of those who have made a confession of faith under the ministry of the Pastor. We believe ourselves to be the first unsectarian church established in America. Our symbol of faith is the Apostles' Creed, our ritual is simple, our communion is open, and our seats are all free. We are at war with no existing denomination of the Christian Church, but are endeavoring to supplement the labors of them all, and are at perfect peace with all who "love our Lord Jesus Christ in sincerity." Our aim is to demonstrate the practicability of Christian Unity, to keep up a Free Christian Church in this city, and to furnish a Sunday Home for Strangers whom pleasure or business may bring to the metropolis.

"As brilliant as those from Plymouth pulpit, they are sounder in theology and purer in style."—Banner of the Church, Atlanta, Ga.

Scientific.

A LARGE VOLCANO has suddenly sprung up in Mexico on the Chihuahua road, about a hundred miles from Vera Cruz. No volcano has been observed before so far from the sea.

AT A LATE MEETING of the San Francisco Academy of Sciences specimens of the flesh of the teal duck, thickly studded with entozoa—microscopic parasites—were presented through the president from Dr. Thorn, of San Jose, California.

THE PHENOPTICAL MOTROPE.—This name has been given to a machine invented by Dr. Donders, of Utrecht, for elucidating the movements of the eye-ball. By means of it the mathematical analysis made by Prof. Helmholtz of the ocular movements may be practically demonstrated.

PROF. DAVIDSON, of the Coast Survey, says that Mount Rainier, a peak of the Cascade Range, in Washington Territory, is definitely ascertained to have an elevation of fourteen thousand four hundred and forty-four feet. California is now trying to discover a peak within its border higher than this, and thinks it has it in Mount Whitney.

LATE DISCOVERIES.—Among the most important discoveries of the German arctic expedition was a new land, about thirty-six nautical miles east of Spitzbergen, and situated north of the seventy-seventh degree of latitude north. The new territory is larger than Spitzbergen, and presents a very wild and rugged appearance, being filled with almost perpendicular mountains and cliffs.

SOLUBLE GLASS.—Mr. F. S. Barff, an English chemist, stated in a recent lecture that the failures attending the use of soluble glass, (or, as it is sometimes called, water glass,) as a preservative coating for iron, wood and other materials, have resulted from the fact that the soluble glass, as prepared by the formula commonly given in chemical works, has too much alkali in proportion to the silica. He says this can be corrected by adding to it as much silica, (obtained in fine powder from the gaseous fluoride of silican, by passing the gas through water,) as the solution of water glass will dissolve. The solution will then dry perfectly, and the coating will be extremely durable.

LEECHES are used by the hundred million a year in France, and the first cost of the leeches sold in Europe exceeds $10,000,000 a year. Australian leeches are valued as among the best, and there is great difference in qualities. In some of the Malay islands the woods are full of leeches, who have the skill, when any one is passing by, to stretch themselves out and catch hold of a garment; and the traveler is lucky who does not find himself getting an involuntary bleeding, with all his care to avoid it. In some leech-producing places people wade out barefooted into the streams where they abound, and let as many as will take a bite, when they are readily brought ashore and secured.

THE HYDRATE OF CHLORAL.—The use of this new anæsthetic, which has gained so wide a popularity within the past year, seems now to be attended with some drawbacks not at first anticipated. Its property of producing sleep and calming nervous excitement, without the immediate disagreeable effects of opium, has led to its extensive, and, in some instances, to its prolonged use by nervous sufferers. It has been found that such a protracted administration of this drug produces a tendency to congression and hemorrhage, especially to be dreaded in obstetrical cases. It is probable that this drug cannot be habitually used without injury, and more than opium or other hypnotic drugs.

TRANSMITTING POWER BY COMPRESSED AIR.—This subject is again attracting attention in the mechanical world. Some experiments made at Bloomingdale, New Jersey, by Horace H. Day, in which power has been transmitted through two miles of pipe, seem to indicate that the loss by friction decreases with the pressure at which the air is transmitted when the friction is estimated in relation to the weight or quantity of air passed through the tube. It is hence inferred that economy in the transmission of power through long tubes, by means of compressed air, is best consulted by the adoption of high pressures, say from eighty to one hundred pounds to the square inch. The experiments were made with the view to test the practicability of transmitting five thousand horse-power from the Niagara Falls to the city of Buffalo. Mr. Day considers it settled that this can be done by the use of a thirty-six inch tube, with a loss of only one per cent. of the power transmitted, if the air be compressed one hundred pounds to the square inch.

FEW persons have sufficient wisdom to prefer censure, which is useful to them, to praise, which deceives them.

NEW ORLEANS MARKETS.

From the N. O. Price Current.

The general market has been more lively since our last issue, with an increased business in some branches of the wholesale trade in filling orders for spring goods, and renewing broken stocks, from the number of country merchants who have come down to the carnival. Sugar and molasses have been depressed by excessive supplies of the poorer qualities, and the demand has been only moderate, while the receipts have been liberal. Prices have ruled in favor of buyers, without any quotable decline. Flour has continued in light supply and good request.

The accounts from various points in the interior indicate that a larger amount of cotton has been saved than there was any good reason to anticipate last month, and crop estimates now range from 3,750,000 to 4,000,000 bales.

COTTON.—The following are the arrivals since the seventeenth instant:

Louisiana and Mississippi	bales	31,638
Lake		906
Arkansas		4,654
Mobile		823
Texas		522
Total		38,545

On Saturday, although the demand was only fair, yet as the supply was moderate, prices of the lower grades recovered from the marked demoralization they had suffered during the early part of last week, and ordinary especially ruled at higher rates. It was also necessary at the close to raise the inside figures of Monday ⅛c., but with these exceptions there was no quotable change. The sales embraced 8,850 bales. On Monday, under more encouraging news and a moderate supply, factors were more stringent in their pretensions, which restricted the movement, and the business was confined to 7,400 bales, at more regular and firmer prices, without any marked improvement, the closing quotations showing no other variation than an advance of ⅛c. in the inside figures for low middling. On Tuesday the market opened with a still firmer tone, inspired by the tenor of the Liverpool and New York accounts. Factors asked fuller prices, and some sales were made at corresponding rates. Later in the day, however, owing to the falling off in the demand, partly from scant supply of freight room and an advance in the Liverpool rate to ¼d., prices lost their buoyancy, especially for all descriptions below middling, that grade and the better qualities still leaning to outside figures. The sales were confined to 5,300 bales.

This makes an aggregate for the past three days of 21,550 bales.

The receipts at this port since the first of September (exclusive of the arrivals from Mobile, Florida and Texas) are 919,651 bales, against 784,035 bales to the same date last year, and the increase in the receipts at all the ports, up to the latest dates, as compared with last year, is 619,326 bales. In the exports from the United States to foreign countries, as compared with the same dates last year, there is an increase of 544,730 bales to Great Britain, 80,600 to other foreign ports, and a decrease of 106,526 to France.

Referring to our remarks above, we quote as follows:

Ordinary	11¼ to 12
Good ordinary	12¼ to 13
Low middling	13¾ to 14
Middling	14¼ to 14½
Strict middling	14⅞ to 15

SUGAR.—The market has been in good supply, but the demand has continued only moderate. The supplies have sold slowly at 5 to 5½c. per pound for inferior, 6 to 6½c. for common, 7 to 7½c. for good common, 7⅞ to 8⅛c. for fair, 8¼ to 8¾c. for good fair, 9c. for fully fair, 9¼ to 9¾c. for prime, 10 to 10½c. for choice, 11¾ to 12½c. for yellow clarified, and 12¾ to 13½c. for white.

MONETARY.—Gold, 111¼ to 111⅜.

American silver half dollars, 108 to 108½, and Mexican dollars at 1⅝ to 1⅞ per cent. premium in gold.

On Tuesday evening $700 State Levee certificates sold at 63¾, and $1,776 at 64; and on Monday $3,200 State Printers' do. at 64.

The sales of warrants include $1,300 new State on Saturday at 75, and $1,000 on Monday at 74½. Dealers have bought new State at 73 to 74, new Metropolitan Police at 97½, and asked 74 to 75 for the former, and 98 to 98½ for the latter.

City Treasury notes are quoted at 21 per cent. discount.

NEW ORLEANS, February 6, 1871.

In compliance with the requirements of the act of Congress entitled "An act to provide a national currency secured by a pledge of United States bonds," approved June 3, 1864, and of the eighteenth section thereof, I publish herewith the certificate of authority issued to the New Orleans National Bank of New Orleans.

RICHARD JONES, Cashier.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
Office of Controller of the Currency,
Washington, January 30, 1871.

WHEREAS, By satisfactory evidence presented to the undersigned, it has been made to appear that THE NEW ORLEANS NATIONAL BANK, in the city of New Orleans, in the county of Orleans, and State of Louisiana, has been duly organized under and according to the requirements of the act of Congress entitled "An act to provide a national currency secured by a pledge of United States bonds, and to provide for the circulation and redemption thereof," approved June 3, 1864, and has complied with all the provisions of said act required to be complied with before commencing the business of banking under said act.

Now, therefore, I, John J. Knox, Acting Controller of the Currency, do hereby certify that "The New Orleans National Bank," in the city of New Orleans, in the county of Orleans, and State of Louisiana, is authorized to commence the business of banking under the act aforesaid.

In testimony whereof, witness my hand and seal of office this thirtieth day of January, 1871. JOHN JAY KNOX,

New Orleans Christian Advocate

This paper has always been well known in this community as

The Very Best Advertising Medium

by which the business men of the city can bring their merchandise, trades, professions and the like, before country readers. This is easily understood when it is remembered that FOUR HUNDRED PREACHERS, scattered throughout the Mississippi, Alabama and Louisiana Methodist Conferences, are more or less active agents for the paper; and when it is also remembered that our paper circulates among a large class of people who seldom see any other New Orleans paper.

VOL. XVII. NEW ORLEANS, THURSDAY, MARCH 2, 1871. NO. 7.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

New York, Feb. 22.—Earl de Grey, Prof. Montague Bernard and Lord Tenterden, of the joint high commissien, and Viscount Frederick Goderich and Donald McKay arrived te-day on the steamer Cuba.

Among the passengers on the Cuba was Mr. Henry Howard, formerly of the British embassy at Washington. He is now attached to the Anglo-American commission, the members of which have arrived and are stopping at the Brevoort House.

Lewis Bernard, a Frenchman, who died at St. Vincent's Hospital en Monday, bequeathed $100,000 to the American Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals. The society has also received three other bequests, amounting to $200,000, which, with the $100,000 pledged by Henry Bergh, places the society on a firm basis.

Poughkeepsie, Feb. 22.—The coroner's jury of the New Hamburg disaster, after several hours' deliberation, have returned a verdict that the victims came to their death, on the sixth day of February, at New Hamburg, in the county of Dutchess, in the State of New York, by suffocation by fire and drowning, in consequence of a collision between the Pacific express train with a car loaded with crude petroleum thrown across the track of said train, on which they were passengers. The jury believes that the oil train could have been stopped soon enough to have prevented the accident; that the employes on the oil train used all the means at their command to promptly signal the coming express train, and that the signal men did their duty in the premises, and that the express train was a half mile from the obstruction when first signaled, and could have been stopped, provided all the appliances had been effective; that for some reason unknown to the jury the patent brakes were not effectively applied.

New York, Feb. 23.—The Tybee arrived from San Domingo on the fourteenth, via Samana Bay the fifteenth. She brings the following correspondence for the Associated Press:

San Domingo, Feb. 14.—The commission met last evening and exchanged views in regard to the work remaining to be done, and the propriety of forwarding a preliminary report of investigations so far as made, and particularly as to the result of the past few days. It was agreed to name the middle of April as the time of arrival in Washington.

Upon the question of a brief report by mail, it was decided not to send it, in view of the fact that considerable important information, but just obtained, might materially modify any report made up from what had been fully considered. The Secretary of State was addressed in a brief letter, giving an outline of the work already done, and a list of the expeditions sent into the interior, together with the objects of each. The date named above was also communicated as the probable time of marching home.

The parties now out officially are the following: Prof. Blake, with geological party, and Prof. Crane for the commission, are on their way across the island to Puerto Platta. Prof. Ward is exploring La Vega. General Siegel has gone to Azeen. Profs. Marvin and Miller have gone in the same direction, with the view of examining the copper region. Dr. Parry is making thorough botanical examination, and Dr. Newcomb is pursuing medical researches in various directions. The health of the whole party remaining here is excellent.

While thus far the bulk of the testimony taken indicates a very favorable condition of affairs, it is certain that information, the exact character of which the commission does not make known, has been obtained, which, in the minds of some of its members, introduced obstacles which the earlier testimony did not promise.

Savannah, Ga., Feb. 23.—Colonel John T. Monroe, mayor of New Orleans at the time the city was captured by Butler, who was imprisoned for a long time by that general, but who has been a resident of this city since the war ended, died suddenly this afternoon.

A disastrous fire occurred last night, destroying Hodgson Block, on Bay street. Loss $250,000, about half of which is covered by insurance.

Boston, Feb. 23.—The ship Golconda, from Liberia to Baltimore, was ashore on Nantucket Shoals. The captain sent his wife, child and some passengers ashore in a boat, when a vessel was sent to the rescue of the Golconda, which found no trace of her.

New York, Feb. 23.—The French contributions now exceed $100,000.

A full length portrait of Washington, said to be by Rembrant Peale, the ownership of which has been some years in litigation, was sold to-day for $250.

The district attorney general has commenced a suit against the Ocean National Bank for $10,000 for a failure to make returns as required by law.

St. Louis, Feb. 24.—A tornado passed over Jefferson City last night, lasting about thirty minutes. A portion of the penitentiary was unroofed and part of the walls blown down, injuring the engine room so badly that work in some of the shops must stop. Damage to the building about $15,000.

The Lincoln Institute and other buildings were partially unroofed, and other damage was done. One of the guards at the penitentiary was severely injured by falling timbers.

The House of Representatives of Missouri has passed the new registration bill making registration laws conform to the constitutional amendments recently adopted by the people, and liberalizing the whole system of registration.

New York, Feb. 25.—The steamship Quaker City was abandoned sixty miles east of Cape Lookout on the twelfth instant. She was on her beam ends, with sixteen feet of water in her bilges. Her smokestack had been carried away, and the fires put out by water. The officers and crew landed at Bermuda. The Quaker City was a Haytien war vessel, sailing under the name of La Republique.

Wilmington, N. C., Feb. 27.—Henderson Oxendine, one of the negro outlaws for whose arrest large rewards have been offered, was captured by a party of citizens of Robeson county, and lodged in jail, on Saturday night.

Galveston, Feb. 27.—Thompson H. McMahon, a leading banker of this city and prominently connected in the heavy business circles of America and Europe, died of pneumonia this afternoon.

Washington, February 28.—Mr. Schlozer, new German minister to Mexico, will succeed Baron Gerolt as representative of the German empire here.

The United States vessel Relief has been ordered to New York to carry food for France.

Governor Clayton telegraghs here that in order to save the Republican party of Arkansas from disruption he declines a seat in the United States Senate.

No Southern nominations announced to-day.

The Indiana Legislature has adjourned sine die.

Senate.—Post office appropriations, including mail riders and that of Newport and Cincinnati bridges, if spans are one hundred feet above low water mark, passed.

Military appropriations were resumed.

The Senate is in session to-nigbt.

House.—The conference report upon bridgos at Glasgow and Louisiana, Missouri, was adopted.

A committee of conference has been ordered on the bill for the relief of the owners of land sold for taxes in the insurrectionary States.

The omnibus appropriation bill was taken from the table on a motion to reconsider. Mr. Archer, of Maryland, said, of all the millions appropriated by this bill the Southern States received only about $1,014,000, and even of this sum about $800,000 was for building lighthouses to benefit Northern commerce and Northern contractors. Mr. Ambler, of Ohio, objected to a debate, and the bill passed.

The bill, as passed, omits appropriations for new works. Among the items stricken out were Nashville, Montgomery, Little Rock, Paducah and St. Louis appropriations.

A committee of conference on the Texas and Pacific railroad bill was ordered by a vote of 136 to 59.

The Cincinnati and Southern railroad bill passed. Ayes, 131; nays, 62.

Mr. Butler made two unsuccessful attempts, by suspension of the rules, to get up the Ku-Klux bill.

The bill repealing all duty on coal, to take effect immediately, passed, 142 to 45. House then adjourned.

FOREIGN.

London, Feb. 24, 4.30 P. M.—The Standard's special from Versailles announces that a treaty of peace has been signed by Thiers and Bismarck. Some details which are unarranged will be adjusted to-morrow.

France pays to Germany 320,000,000 thalers, Alsace and Lorraine included. Metz and Nancy are ceded.

The German army will not enter Paris. Emperor William leaves on Monday for Berlin.

Berlin, Feb. 24.—By an imperial decree the opening of the German Parliament is postponed until the sixteenth of March.

Havre, Feb. 25.—Five thousand troops with batteries arrived here. Fifteen thousand more are expected in case hostilities are resumed.

Florence, Feb. 25.—The Queen of Spain is rapidly recovering from her recent illness, and will soon be able to resume the journey.

Manrid, Feb. 25.—The Spanish government has sent to the Viceroy of Egypt its ultimatum. The reply of the latter is unknown. Several European powers have offered mediation between Spain and Egypt.

Bordeaux, Feb. 26.—An official dispatch from Paris states that preliminaries of peace have been signed, and that Thiers will arrive at Bordeaux to-morrow.

London, Feb. 26.—The English government at the last moment interfered and persuaded the Germans not to march through Paris. The troops will pass through the open space on the south side of the city.

London, Feb. 26.—A dispatch from Athens announces that Erskine, the British minister, has communicated to the Greek government the dispatch of Granville, contending that the investigation of the Marathan massacre was insufficient, and demanding fresh inquiry, especially into the conduct of the officials previously acquitted.

A difficulty has arisen between Spain and Egypt, caused by the insult offered to the clerk of the Spanish consulate in Cairo. It was reported that all Spanish consuls have quitted Egypt. The Madrid Imperial denies this, but says that they have been instructed to act energetically. The Khedive has not yet replied to the representatives of the Spanish government demanding satisfaction.

The Spanish minister of finance has resolved to make no attempt to raise funds until the meeting of the Cortes, with the exception of issuing treasury bonds, authorized by the last Cortes.

Passenger trains have commenced to run again between Dieppo and Paris. Two arrivals and departures daily.

The Daily Telegraph has a special dispatch from Amiens saying that much uneasiness prevailed in consequence of the report that England had interfered in regard to Metz, declaring that the fortress should not be ceded to the Germans.

Versailles, Feb. 26.—The Moniteur of Friday states that six hundred and two field pieces, belonging to the army of Paris, have been delivered to the Germans, and one thousand three hundred and fifty-seven cannon in good condition were found in the fort.

The same paper denounced the arrogance of the Parisian press in assailing the victorious Germans, and calumniating their officers by accusation of pillage and robbery. It significantly declares that the occupation of Paris would be the most efficacious means of stopping such boundless effrontery and falsehood. Rhodomontade and the entry of troops is therefore inevitable as soon as the armistice expires.

Paris, Feb. 26, via London, Feb. 26.—A conclusion of the peace negotiation is now certain. Thiers and Favre and the consultative commission have accepted the following conditions: First, the cession of Alsace and Metz, but Belfort to be restored to the French. Second, the payment of a war indemnity of five milliards francs. Third, a portion of French territory, with some fortified towns like Sedan, to remain in the possession of the Germans until the conditions of the treaty are fulfilled. Fourth, the German army to enter Paris on Monday and occupy the Champs Elysees. Fifth, peace to be proclaimed when the French Assembly ratifies these conditions.

Thiers and the delegates returned to Bordeaux to-day.

The Siecle, referring to the recent message of President Grant to Congress, says it is incomprehensible how the President could compare the institutions of Germany to the United States. The comparison must have surprised Bismarck himself.

A public demonstration was made, on the twenty-fourth of February, of the anniversary of the abdication of Louis Phillippe. The proceedings were orderly, and to-day a perfect tranquility prevails.

The announcement of signing treaty of peace produced a feeling of relief throughout the capital. The reduction of the indemnity demanded by the Germans, and the restoration of Belfort, are regarded with gratification. Every preparation has been made at Versailles for the entry of the German army into Paris to-morrow in brilliant array. The Parisians will close their houses and remain invisible.

Paris, Feb. 27.—By the treaty of peace France cedes Alsace and Metz, and pays five milliards of francs within three years; the Germans to hold fortresses until the money is paid. The armistice has been prolonged one week.

Coloone, Feb. 27.—The Gazette says the signatures and preliminaries to the treaty of peace were delayed by the intervention of the English, Russian and Austrian governments. The Italian government declined to interfere.

Berlin, Feb. 27.—The news of the conclusion of peace has occasioned immense excitement in this city. The streets are crowded, houses decorated with flags and festoons, and thousands of people are in front of the palace. There will be a general illumination to-night.

Bordeaux, Feb. 27, noon.—The Assembly held no session to-day. Thiers and Picard are expected here to-night.

The extreme and moderate left held a meeting last night to prepare a protest against the session of French territory.

Berlin, Feb. 27.—The Emperor telegraphs the Empress as follows: "With deeply moved heart, in gratitude to God, I inform you that the preliminaries of peace have been signed.

"The Bordeaux Assembly must yet ratify them. Wilhelm."

A Versailles dispatch of the twenty-sixth says that M. Thiers proposes to purchase Luxembourg for Prussia in consideration of the restoration of Metz to France.

The armistice has been prolonged for ten days.

The Emperor will return to Berlin on Saturday.

London, Feb. 27.—In the House of Commons this morning, in reply to a question, Viscount Enfield, under-secretary of foreign affairs, said: The government is anxious to define its external duties toward other nations. It had last year proposed parliamentary legislation upon the subject, and had recently sent a commission to Washington. He said the subject was still under consideration.

In the House of Commons to-night Mr. Otway, formerly under-secretary of the foreign department, after stating the reported terms of peace between Germany and France, asked if her majesty's government had made any effort to mitigate their severity.

Mr. Gladstone replied that the German minister had notified Earl Granville and himself that the preliminaries of peace were signed this morning. The government declined further response.

The representatives of England at Versailles have been instructed not to accompany the Prussians through Paris. The government declines any further answer to the question: "What measures they had taken to mitigate Prussian exactions from France?"

Paris, Feb. 27.—The Journal des Debats comments on the cruel terms of peace imposed on France, and says Thiers and Favre were several times on the point of breaking off negotiations at the risk of a resumption of hostilities, and yielded only to dire necessity. Bismarck at first demanded ten milliards indemnity, and it was reduced to the sum finally agreed upon by the most strenuous exertions.

It has been stipulated that only thirty thousand German troops shall enter Paris, and they shall not march beyond the Place de la Concorde. Several journals announce that they will suspend publication during the occupation day, and recommend the inhabitants to remain within doors and close their shutters.

The authorities are very uneasy in regard to the attitude of the people when the Germans march in. The national guards have been under arms all night, and perfect order has prevailed, but the guards and regular troops are greatly discontented, and it is doubtful if they can be depended upon to restrain the people from violence at the appearance of the enemy.

The Reds held a disorderly mass meeting on Sunday in honor of the republic of 1848. Police were drowned in the Seine and the magistrates driven off.

The journals continue to assail the Prussians in the bitterest terms.

London, Feb. 28.—A dispatch from Paris to-day states that the disaffection manifested by the announcement of the proposed entry of the Prussian troops did not extend among the people. The demonstrations made on Sunday by the troops and national guards were confined to a few soldiers.

The decision of the National Assembly is anxiously looked for, and great fears are expressed that the council of the left may prevail, and that the terms of peace meet with rejection, that will complicate peace prospects.

Louis Blane and Gambetta are opposed to the acceptance of the terms.

A number of Bonapartist agents are in Paris, and will favor the rejection of the terms. The Prussians are evidently preparing for a contingency of this kind. Bismarck is known to be opposed to the entry of the troops. If a collision should occur between the people and the Prussians it will be made an excuse for putting the city under martial law.

London, Feb. 28.—Mediation was offered and accepted in the Spanish-Egyptian trouble. A peaceful solution is possible.

The excitement regarding the Prussian occupation has been somewhat exaggerated. Sullen sorrow is general, with fierce anger and threats in some quarters.

Paris, Feb 28.—It is stated the occupation of the departments south of the Seine ceases after the ratification of the treaty, and that of the other departments after the payment of five hundred million of indemnity.

The fortresses are to be occupied until the entire indemnity is paid.

Preachers' Meeting, Meridian District, Mississippi Conference.

Meridian, Miss., Feb. 22, 1871.

Mr. Editor: Being satisfied that no man can be a successful preacher without the constant cultivation of his intellect and personal piety, I propose to organize a preachers' meeting on the Meridian district to assist the local and itinerant preachers in that work. The order of business will be:

1. To receive reports from the preachers—First, an account of their religious experience since last meeting; second, as to their method of studying and preaching, and the success they have had in their pastoral work; third, as to the spiritual condition of their charges and the success of the Sabbath schools in them.

2. The reading of two or three original essays by the preachers.

3. The reading of reviews of previous essays by others of the preachers.

4. The general discussion of some important theological or biblical question.

The first meeting will be held in Meridian on the twelfth day of April next. The essayists on that occasion will be Revs. William Spillman, of Enterprise, J. A. Ellis, of Meridian, and J. W. McLaurin, of DeKalb.

The subject for general discussion is: Can the doctrine of an intermediate state after death be established by reason and the Scriptures?

All the preachers on the district, local and itinerant, are earnestly invited to attend the meetings, and to be promptly on the ground, at the Methodist church, at ten o'clock.

William B. Hines.

There having been many and conflicting statements as to who was to act as superintending or managing editor of the Independent, Mr. Bowen, the proprietor, has by card announced that Rev. Edward Eggleston, D. D., will occupy that position. The office editor is Rev. S. H. Ward, a Congregationalist minister. Rev. Dr. Spear is rather an editorial writer under salary than an editor. The venerable Joshua Leavitt, D. D., is employed in the religious department, as Rev. Washington Gladden will be also after the first of April.

The Peabody Educational Fund.

At the close of the annual session of the trustees of the Peabody Educational Fund in Philadelphia, on Saturday, February 18, Rev. Dr. Sears, the general agent, submitted his fifth annual report, setting forth that the benefits of the fund are confined to public free schools, including normal schools. The entire cost of maintaining these is in no case met by the board; a small part only of the current expenses (rarely more than one-fourth) is contributed by way of encouragement and aid, and placed in the hands of proper school officers. The plan of the board is to concentrate their efforts upon a limited number of the large towns, selecting those which will, by their example, exert the widest influence upon the surrounding country. The maximum given to any city is $2,000, minimum is about $300, the number of pupils which receive aid in any one locality being not less than one hundred. The amount of aid given to any city or town is determined partly by the number of children to be provided for, and partly by the amount of money raised by tax or contribution by the people themselves. To well regulated public free schools, kept open about ten months in the year, and having a regular attendance of not less than one hundred pupils, averaging eighty-five, the trustees pay $300; for one hundred and fifty, $450; for two hundred, $600; for two hundred and fifty, $800; for three hundred, $1,000. The people are to grade their schools and furnish a teacher for every fifty pupils. At present the rates paid to colored schools are two-thirds the rates above named.

A detailed account of all the Virginia schools aided by the fund is given in the report. The following will serve as illustrations: Richmond had no public schools a few years ago. The first year the trust fund contributed $2,000 and the city raised $10,000. While this donation remains the same, the city is now raising and paying $42,600, and is supporting thirty-nine white and thirty-three colored schools. It has also a normal school, to which the trust contributes $1,000. Petersburg has a similar system of free schools.

The superintendent, in his report, says: "It was by your aid, in 1868, that our system of public schools was started, and they have proved to be a most wonderful success." New schools have been opened, or are about opening, at Lynchburg, Alexandria, Staunton, Lexington, Fincastle, Manassas and many other places. Normal pupils are aided at the Hampton Normal School and at the Hollins Institute. The superintendent says in his report: "The Peabody fund has been of essential service to North Carolina during the past year." Assistance has been given to twenty-one schools. The colored school at Atlanta, Georgia, is aided to the amount of $800, the same that is given to Fisk University, in Tennessee, and to Hampton Institute, in Virginia. Although there is a new school law in Mississippi, the trustees have not yet been able to act in concert with the State authorities, but have for three years been aiding schools in the larger cities. There are in Tennessee more than thirty schools, which would not have existed but for the aid rendered by the Peabody fund. From this report it appears that two hundred and thirteen towns, districts and institutions in the Southern States have been assisted by the disbursement of $108,900. In connection with these contributions from the Peabody fund, the people receiving them have expended from their own resources about $550,000.

Protestant Ministers in Paris.—A correspondent of the Presbyterian states in a recent letter from London that French Protestant ministers, as well as many of their flocks, have been shut up for months in the city of Paris, and it is pleasant to learn, through Dr. Norman McLeod, that they are diligently seeking to do good by preaching the gospel not only in buildings, but in the streets, to all willing to hear; a thing which was never done before. The Rev. Mr. Pressense is the agent of the British and Foreign Bible Society, and in separate gospels and epistles, as well as the book of Psalms, has diffused the word of God wide and far.

SING TO ME OF HEAVEN.

Oh, sing to me of heaven,
When my pulse beats faint and slow;
Oh, sing to me of heaven,
While voices soft and low.

Ere the golden bowl is broken,
Or cold the fountain lies,
Oh, sing to me, ye dear ones,
Of the land beyond the skies.

Oh, tell me, then, of heaven,
Of the loved ones gone before,
Of angels waiting to greet me
When I reach the further shore.

And sing me the olden story,
Oh, sing it again and again,
Of Him who left his glory,
That we with Him might reign.

Then as, faintly and still more faintly,
The sweet strain dies away,
I shall catch its last soft echo
In the realms of endless day.

WEST FELICIANA, Feb. 1, 1871.

To the Preachers and Sunday School Teachers of the Mississippi Conf.

The impracticability of my seeing many of you in the early part of the year is one reason why I published a circular, which I am now sending to all the preachers and Sunday schools in the Conference, so far as I can ascertain the address. Any who do not receive one will please send me his address to Yazoo City. This is my post office. I wish, as soon as practicable, to communicate with the entire church, and see if we cannot wake up somewhat in our Sunday school enterprise. If you do not receive the circulars by the time you see this in print, or if it is wrongly addressed, please give me your address.

I wish also to be informed, at the earliest period, of any opportunity that may present itself in any part of the Conference for the extension of Sunday schools into neighborhoods where we now have none. We must extend our operations into more sparsely settled neighborhoods. The Uniform Lesson system is well adapted to this end. Give me the information explaining the condition of things, and I will assist you.

Will each preacher also please inform me of any and all union schools within the bonnds of your work in which our church is interested? Explain, if you please, the propertional interest we have in it, to what church the superintendent belongs, etc.

We must raise a general Sunday school fund for needy schools. This is greatly necessary. To this end let every person writing me inclose some money. I do not say how much; I say some money. Now, let every one do as I request, and we will soon have a better state of things.

Brethren, friends, co-operate freely with me, and we will improve both church and families greatly. This is the end to begin at and work from. Don't fail to get my circular.

R. ABBEY,
S. S. Sec. and Agent for Miss. Conf.

TO THE PREACHERS, CHURCHES AND SUNDAY SCHOOLS IN THE MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

DEAR BRETHREN: At the last Conference I was appointed the Conference agent and secretary to supervise and assist in promoting the Sunday school cause. I deeply feel the responsibility of the post.

At the last General Conference many of us were most agreeably surprised to find a general awakening on this subject in almost all parts of the church. From all quarters it came up that the juvenile portions of the church were largely occupying much of the mind and labor of many of our ablest and best men in and out of the ministry. It is not too much to say that the last few years have witnessed among us a great revival of interest in this part of our Zion. After several weeks' labor a committee of thirty of the best Sunday school men of the church recommended the appropriation of more of our labor in this field, and considerable changes in our modes of operation. The loud voice of the church is, that the greatest interests of religion lie very largely in this direction. The best plans within the reach of the prayers and labors of the Conference were adopted. Experience improves us. I will not say too much labor is bestowed on old sinners; but it is apparent far too little is appropriated to the young. We leave the rich virgin soil, and cultivate the poor, barren waste fields; and so we produce an occasional nubbin instead of an armful of rich and profitable ears. We must improve. Sunday school is rather a misnomer, though any name is a correct one that is well understood. It is the juvenile portion of the church—not its mere nursery. We must learn to train our children up in the church. I was glad to hear Bishop Andrew say, in an address to the General Conference, that he never breathed out of the church. Theological popery and baptistic anti-children's church membership are to be met elsewhere: but the popular errors of both, great and legion as they are, must be met here, and here only. We must keep the children in the church. The world is waking up on this subject.

Will those who receive this circular please to let the following suggestions be observed:

1. Co-operation and uniformity in conducting our Sunday schools is of the greatest importance. Without these much of our labor is lost, or nearly lost. Method and harmony are the watchwords of our success.

2. Our Sunday school literature, as now arranged, is far the best in use. So say all our men of large experience. We have sifted every Sunday school publication in the language, profiting by the good and excluding the indifferent.

3. To keep up a Sunday school you need, first, the Sunday School Magazine, published by our Publishing House, and edited by our general Sunday school secretary, the Rev. A. G. Haygood, D. D. It is indispensable to all teachers, parents and larger scholars. It is a pamphlet of thirty-two pages; price, $1 a year. Second. The Sunday School Visitor, enlarged and improved. This is published weekly at seventy-five cents a year; or for schools or clubs of ten or more, to one address, at fifty cents. It is also published semi-monthly for forty cents the single copy; or for ten or more copies, to one address, twenty-five cents a year each. And it is also published monthly at twenty cents the single copy; or twelve and a half cents a copy for ten or more. Third. Our Little People. This is a most valuable publication to start the infant mind in the right direction. It is published monthly at twenty cents the single copy, or ten cents each when ten or more are taken.

4. These publications are calculated to work in the new and improved system of Uniform Lessons. This system is being adopted everywhere, and may now be regarded the settled policy of the church, it having been recommended by all the Bishops and adopted by the General Conference. These Uniform Lessons are catechetical, prepared at Nashville, under the direction of the general secretary, new and fresh, and assigned to each Sabbath of the year, and are the same for the same day in all the Sunday schools in the church. I have not room to explain the advantages of this system here. You will find it fully set forth in the Sunday School Magazine. The lessons are sent out in the Magazine, and also in slips the size of a book-leaf. These Uniform Lessons should precede, but need not necessarily supersede, the use of catechetical books, especially in Bible classes and the higher lessons. They will be found the cheapest as well as the best mode of instruction.

5. Sunday school operations must be greatly increased among us. They must be multiplied in the country and rural districts. The new system will enable you to work small schools with the smallest number of teachers.

6. Let the pastor and presiding elder pay more personal attention to, and work more in, the Sunday school. This is the secret of success. Few schools prosper where the pastor is not the practical working head. By what rule does he relinquish or abate his oversight and religious teaching where they are certainly most needed and most profitable? Employ all your members here.

7. Procure subscribers to the Sunday school periodicals, (in clubs for schools as far as practicable,) and also please to take up a collection in each congregation for general Sunday school purposes in our Conference, at a favorable period, not later than the first of April next. Remit all moneys by post office order, or otherwise, to me at Yazoo City; and write me fully in regard to your Sunday school operations.

Please read this circular to each congregation. R. ABBEY,
S. S. Agent and Sec. for Miss. Conf.
YAZOO CITY, January, 1871.

A MAN who is going to do good with his money, when he shall get a great deal of it, makes a bargain with the devil; and the devil outwits him. Where men are going to use their money so that it will do good when they get through with it, the Lord is apt to get through with them before they think of getting through with their money. If you want to be benevolent by and by, be benevolent now.

IT IS NOT enough to learn that which is good; we must continue it unto the end.

PAY YOUR DEBTS.

BY REV. TIM. TITUS.

MR. EDITOR: I desire to say a few things, with your permission, to the numerous readers of the ADVOCATE upon a very important subject. It is important because it is so widespread; because it is the bane of this country just now; because it is the fruitful source of most of the troubles and difficulties in the land—this thing of going in debt. The true, safe business policy of every honest man is to pay for what he gets at the time he gets it. Then, you know, there is an end to all difficulty. My advice is, don't go in debt for anything, under any circumstances whatever. Everybody knows that the merchant must charge more for his goods if he sells on "time," to cover the losses incurred by selling to those who buy without the probability or intention of paying for what they buy. Don't everybody know that the man who sells on credit must be paid well for it? Hence every man who sells on credit—keeps accounts—must of necessity charge more for his goods than the man who does differently—sells strictly for cash. This is obvious to every mind, and for many good and sufficient reasons. They must have more clerks, more goods, more houseroom, and this incurs the additional expense of more rents and heavier taxes. And, in order to meet these additional expenses, they must charge more for their goods. And the man who goes in debt—buys on credit—must of necessity pay for all this. Then, I would say, economise—do with and upon less than you have been in the habit of doing, which you can and ought to do. Pay what you now already owe, and for the future pay for what you get. Here's one and there's the other, is a good, an excellent rule. And the apostle was right, exactly right, when he said: "Owe no man anything." A man can't appreciate the luxury of a quiet conscience or refreshing sleep who is always in debt. It is a dreadful tyrant, oppressing us by day and by night. Then we should consider it strictly a religious duty to pay our debts. And this holds good in all the transactions of life. No more so with the merchant, physician, mechanic or farm laborer, whom the law compels us to pay, than the minister of God. It is no more our duty to pay the merchant from whom we buy our goods, or the physician who attends us in our sickness, or the mechanic who builds our houses, or the farm laborer who makes the bread that we eat, than it is to pay the preacher who dispenses the word of life to us. And the man who fails to pay what he honestly owes the preacher, because there is no legal process by which he may be compelled to do so, is not an honest man, any more than the man who refuses to pay for the bread and meat and clothes furnished him by his merchant. And yet such is the case. There are men who will refuse to meet this solemn obligation to pay a just debt. It is a just debt, based upon a stipulated contract. For instance, a preacher is sent to a station or circuit by the Conference. He goes promptly to his new field of labor, and goes to work. He calls the stewards together. He has a family, and he informs his board of stewards that it will require just so much to support them through the year. He must have $1,000. He can't see how he is to get on with less. He must have it. But he is very plainly informed that his figures are too high; and they come to a dead halt. They can't possibly raise so much money for him. "Why, we had Bro. G. here last year, and he is one of the best preachers in the Conference, and the most popular preacher we ever had in all this country, and we only gave him $500." But the preacher says: "Brethren, I hope you do not intend to drive me to teaching a school or something else to support my family while I am serving you this year?" Well, after a few heavy sighs and death-like groans, and a good deal of "fignring," they conclude that if he will devote his entire time to the work, visit the people and hold class meetings, and get up a rousing, big, old-fashioned revival of religion on the work, they will pay him $1,000. The preacher says: "Brethren, that is just what I came here for. The Bishop sent me here to do the work of a pastor. And, in the providence of God, I am here and will do the best I can for the interest of the church. I did not come to teach school, merchandise or make cotton. I came to preach the gospel and save souls." "Well, all right," says Bro. A.; "that's the way to talk. He's my man, and we must support him, brethren." "He is willing to do the work, and trust God without security." "And we can and we must support the preacher." "I will give $50." "What will you give, Bro. B.? You give $50." "Yes." Bro. C.: "Well, I dun no; I reckon I can do as much as the rest of ye." And so throughout, with considerable halting and hesitation, the stewards pledge themselves for about $300, and further pledge themselves to raise the balance. Here, then, is a plain, straight-out contract, with all the moral aspects of a legal, stipulated contract. The preacher promises to do certain things, and the church, through her representatives, the stewards, promise not to give, but to pay him for his services. And now the preacher feels encouraged and confident. Yes, he says to himself, these brethren have individually pledged themselves for $300, and surely out of a rich and liberal membership of over two hundred they can collect $700 more. And now I can go to work unembarrassed. And with a cheerful heart and bright prospect ahead, he says: Well now, my brethren, let us unite in singing that blessed chorus:

"Lord, revive us; Lord, revive us;
All our help must come from thee," etc.;

and close this very interesting meeting with prayer to the almighty God that he may vouchsafe a gracious revival. But, Mr. Editor, I must wait and tell your readers how it all turned out.

AN EDUCATED MINISTRY.

MR. EDITOR: A lengthy article appeared in the ADVOCATE, a few months ago, favoring an educated ministry, which, I suppose, no one ever did oppose. The writer, however, being an ardent, zealous young man, took the position that the people would not hear an uneducated minister. Notwithstanding, there are persons on my circuit who never saw or heard him. Dr. Winans, in his last sermon before the Mississippi Conference, told us of a man in England, that God called to the ministry, who did not know B from a bull's foot, but he could say: "The Spirit of the Lord is upon me, because the Lord hath anointed me to preach." Sir, scores and hundreds of uneducated ministers have been heard, and their ministry honored of God. (See volume third of Stevens' History of Methodism.) Look upon many of the strong members of every Annual Conference. I think the young man is mistaken, and that a spiritual qualification in the ministry is of the first importance, to be followed by mental culture. And then, perhaps, the next most important qualification is an observance of the ordination vow, to be "men of one work," especially an itinerant. Suppose a proposition had been made to the apostles, when they were "filled with the Holy Ghost," to teach school, cultivate a farm, engage in merchandise, serve insurance agencies, or in any other way secularize. I suppose they would have replied: "It is not reason that we should leave the word of God and serve tables."

On the question of support, the infidelity is in the ministry, and not in the church; for if we "go" and pray with the children, "from house to house," we will be supported, or God's word fails: "When I sent you out, did ye lack anything?" "Nay, Lord." Lastly, the church stewards greatly err, and have no authority for their action whenever they take all the money collected and pay the pastor in charge in full, leaving the presiding elder only one-third or one-half his claim. Let the law of proportion be observed.

ITINERANT PREACHER.
MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE, Feb., 1871.

Importance of Religious Knowledge.

MR. EDITOR: Religion, on account of its intimate relation to a future state, is every man's proper business, and should be his chief care. Of knowledge in general there are branches which it would be preposterous in the bulk of mankind to attempt to acquire, because they have no immediate connection with their duties, and demand talents which nature has denied or opportunities which Providence has withheld. But with respect to the primary truths of religion the case is different. They are of such daily use and necessity that they form not the materials of mental luxury so properly as the food of the mind. In improving the character the influence of general knowledge is often feeble and always indirect; of religious knowledge the tendency to purify the heart is immediate, and forms its professed scope and design. "This is life eternal: to know thee, the only true God, and Jesus Christ, whom thou hast sent." To ascertain the character of the Supreme Author of all things; to know, as far as we are capable of comprehending such a subject, what is his moral disposition, what the situation we stand in toward him, and the principles by which he conducts his administration, will be allowed by every considerate person to be of the highest consequence. Compared to this, all other speculations or inquiries sink into insignificance, because every event that can befall us is in his hands, and by his sentence our final condition must be fixed. To regard such an inquiry with indifference is the mark not of a noble but of an abject mind, which, immersed in sensuality or amused with trifles, deems itself unworthy of eternal life. To be so absorbed in worldly pursuits as to neglect future prospects is a conduct that can plead no excuse until it is ascertained beyond all doubt or contradiction that there is no hereafter, and that nothing remains but that we eat and drink, for to-morrow we die. Even in that case to forego the hope of immortality without a sigh—to be gay and sportive on the brink of destruction, in the very moment of relinquishing prospects on which the wisest and best in every age have delighted to dwell—is the indication of a base and degenerate spirit. If existence be a good, the eternal loss of it must be a great evil; if it be an evil, reason suggests the propriety of inquiring why it is so—of investigating the maladies by which it is oppressed. Amid the darkness and uncertainty which hang over our future condition, revelation, by bringing life and immortality to light, affords the only relief. In the Bible alone we learn the real character of the Supreme Being—his holiness, justice, mercy and truth. The moral condition of man, considered in his relation to him, is clearly pointed out, the doom of impenitent transgressors denounced, and the method of obtaining mercy through the interposition of a divine mediator plainly revealed.

HUMANITY OF LORD ERSKINE.—The humanity of Lord Erskine is perpetuated in his bill "For the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals." In one of his speeches upon this measure he observes: "I never knew a man remarkable for heroic bearing whose very aspect was not lighted up by gentleness and humanity; nor a kill-and-eat-him countenance that did not cover the heart of a bully or a poltroon." Of many quaint stories illustrating his fine tenderness for the mute creation, one may be inserted in this paragraph. Having expostulated with a ruffian for violently beating a feeble and emaciated horse, he was asked by the rascal: "Why! it is my own; mayn't I use it as I please?" The man's tone heightened the insolence of his words, and having uttered them, he renewed his attack on the poor brute. In a trice Erskine, who was armed with a stout cane, gave the offender a sound thrashing. "What right have you to strike me?" roared the fellow, beside himself with rage and pain. "Pooh, man!" replied the executioner, "my stick is my own; mayn't I use it as I please?" Jefferson's Book about Lawyers.

A Little Bit of Counsel to Those Who Crave for Riches.

While they last it is a pleasant thing to have riches! Friends and kind words are as plentiful then as air and water. Favors are in excess of all possible powers of acceptance! But these fall off when the money is all spent; and the friend who was so kind grows cold, or the lover who hung around you with such entrancing gestures of affection, or filled your delighted ears with such rich feasts of loving words, casts derision in your teeth now, and tells you you were a fool in that you believed him. Ask not for riches! They make for you wants and needs to which, in poverty, you are a stranger. They make you the victim of the cruel and the false-hearted. Poverty protects you from deceitful friends; it is a very reliable touch-stone for friendship. If you fear that your neighbor will think less of you because you are poor, remember this: Our Saviour, while on earth, chose to be poor; and that has left poverty well worthy to be considered a crowned and honored lot.

ONE WHO LEARNED THE TRUTH OF THE ABOVE BY EXPERIENCE.

UNION OF METHODISM IN CANADA.

The Canada Christian Advocate contains the following notice of the first meeting of a committee appointed to consider the subject of a union of the Methodist churches of Canada:

The first meeting of the committees appointed by the Conferences of the Methodist churches on the great subject of a united church in Canada was held in the Mechanics' Institute, on Thursday, February 2, 1871. After devotional exercises by ministers of three branches of the Methodists, Hon. J. C. Aikin was elected president.

His opening remarks were worthy of the Christian gentleman and an honor to the statesman. Rev. A. Sutherland was appointed secretary. The spirit, kindness, courtesy and true expression of Methodist Christianity was maintained throughout the day. We do not pretend to give a report of the speeches and of the proceedings of the assembly. The Wesleyan, Primitive, Methodist Episcopal and the New Connection Methodist churches were severally represented by their committees. The Bible Christians were not present, but we believe there is a good reason to be assigned, and we are led to regard them as favorably disposed.

No plans or rules as a basis of union were submitted; but a free and friendly interchange of thought, which lasted until the adjournment for dinner. The great question of episcopacy was considered, and elicited from the speakers a desire for a modified episcopacy of from four to six years' duration. The question of lay representation, as to the principle, was considered. Each of the churches claims to have this in their systems of government. Modifications of this also were asked and in some faint sense conceded. There were many incidents encouraging to the advocates of union, and we are convinced the question is fairly broached and opened. We were compelled to leave before the adjournment, but secured a meeting of the committees about the last of next March. Some plan may then be adopted, that may be laid before the Annual Conferences.

NOT EASILY SATISFIED.—Mr. Young supplies the following story of a Scotch student in theology: "A simple country lad," he says, "went up for examination previous to receiving his first communion. The pastor, knowing that he was not very profound in his theology, began by asking him how many commandments there were; to which he cautiously replied: 'Aihlins (perhaps) a hunner.' The pastor, of course, told the youth that he must wait and learn more. On his way home he met a friend; and, on learning that he too was going to the manse for examination, shrewdly asked him: 'Weel, what will ye say, noo, if the minister speers hoo mony commandments there are?' 'Say! why, I shall say ten, to be sure.' To which the other triumphantly replied: 'Ten! Try him wi' ten! I tried him wi' a hunner, and he wasna satisfeed.' This story was related to the dean by a minister of the Established Church, who had the names of place and persons."

IT IS ANNOUNCED that Mr. Theodore Tilton, late editor of the Independent, will issue on the first of March a new weekly journal, to be called the Golden Age, to be devoted to the free and untrammeled discussion of all living questions of church, state, literature, art, society and reform.

SPARE MOMENTS are the gold-dust of time.

THURSDAY, MARCH 2, 1871.

WHENEVER I SIT IN THE TWILIGHT.

Whenever I sit in the twilight,
At rest from the toils of the day,
And the little ones gather about me,
Too weary for laughter and play,
I think, with the longing of sorrow and love,
Of the one little child that's away--

Away from the arms of the mother;
And sometimes it grieves me to know,
Content with the love that surrounds him,
He never will miss us below;
For he looks in the face of the Father above,
And walks with the saints to and fro.

I love in my fancy to follow
Their steps by the river so fair,
And list to the wonderful stories
The angels are telling him there—
The beautiful angels of Paradise,
And dear Little Silverhair.

There's the angel that spoke unto Hagar,
"Fear not, for God heareth thy moan;"
And the one that came flying to Mary,
All shining with light from the throne;
And the strong, blessed seraphs that soothed
the dear Lord
When tempted and fainting alone.

But grandest of all is the angel
Whose story I often have read,
Who came to the tomb of the Saviour,
And rolled back the stone from its head,
And said to the weepers that trembled to hear,
"The Lord is gone up from the dead."

O angel of life and of glory!
Come whisper thy message to me,
When sadly I sit and remember
The child that is gone from my knee;
For I know in the mansions where Jesus has gone
His little ones surely must be.

Wesleyan Methodist Church Membership.

The Rev. John Bailey is contributing a series of instructive letters to the Richmond Christian Advocate on the subject of Wesleyan Methodism in England. From his last letter we take the following in reference to membership:

As far as I have been able to understand the Wesleyans, they have several classes of members, only one of which is ordinarily comprised in the estimate of their numerical strength. I refer to their "societies," or classes. If, for example, there is a congregation of five hundred members of "society," there will be at least five hundred, sometimes one thousand, others—men, women and children—large numbers of whom have been baptized, some of whom regularly take the sacrament of the Lord's Supper, attend prayer meetings, etc., and support the church by contributions and in other ways, who "do not attend class." Do they not, in some sense, belong to the "Wesleyan Church of England?" Some profess to be "converted," some do not. But they, like some members of the classes, have the form, and they are seeking the power of godliness. It seems to me that the admission of any person to the Lord's table is an open acknowledgment that the person so admitted is a member of that or of some other branch of the visible church of Christ.

ADMISSION INTO THE SOCIETIES.

I am not aware that what we call "opening the doors of the church," publicly, to receive members, is ever used. When any person is thought to be "awakened" on the subject of religion he is generally advised to join a class on probation, and if he does so his name is taken as a member "on trial." He is also instructed that it is his duty to pay something weekly, and also quarterly, for the support of the church. The minimum amount paid is usually one penny per week and one shilling a quarter, which makes nearly two dollars a year. Others pay much more than that amount in the classes. It is a well established maxim among the Wesleyans that when God converts the soul he converts the purse also. They think it irrefutably true that a child of God will pray and pay. If the person on trial is found to be faithful, and if he wishes to continue in society, after he has been examined by a minister at one or more of his quarterly visitations, he receives a ticket, which is his certificate of membership; and this has to be renewed quarterly.

While on a visit to the Wesleyan Book Room, London, in 1861, I had a conversation on this topic with the Rev. John Mason, the Wesleyan book steward. Among other notable things Mr. Mason said: "Your preachers don't give tickets; your leaders do it. If we were to let our leaders give tickets we should receive ten to one."

Thoroughgoing English Wesleyans have their children baptized, take them to class with them, and pay for them. Mr. Arthur mentioned this fact while he was preaching the funeral sermon of the Rev. John Scott in 1868, and also that Mr. Scott was eleven years old when he received his first ticket.

What the terms of membership in the Wesleyan "societies" are may easily be seen by all who choose to procure a Methodist Discipline and read the rules which it contains for the United Societies. In addition to these there are still more select societies, with more rigid rules, and these are denominated "bands."

Much unmerited odium has been thrown upon the Wesleyans for their rigid attention to class collections, and it has been said that any one who will pay well is retained in the society, while the poor, who can pay little or nothing, are excluded. I will not say that this never occurs; corruption creeps into the best ordered communities; there was one Judas among the apostles of our Lord. But those occurrences must, in the judgment of charity, be exceptions. Mr. Wesley's advice was that the richer members should pay for the poorer ones, and when it is found that any cannot pay without embarrassment, the amount is returned to them from a special fund provided for the use of the poor. I remember hearing of an examination of a class by the preacher in charge, when it was ascertained that a certain rich member had been absent from his class two whole quarters. The leader urged the preacher to give him a ticket, from a consideration of his influence, family connection, etc., and as a closing appeal threw a bright sovereign on the table, which the delinquent had sent for his quarterage, or as the phrase was, "to pay for his ticket." The preacher immediately returned the sovereign to the leader and said: "There, take it back to him, and tell him that if he can do without our meetings we can do without his money."

THE SINGING "AN OPPORTUNITY."

The singing of hymns in public and social worship, we observe, is styled by a cotemporary journal "an opportunity"—for what? one may naturally inquire. An opportunity for all to unite in praising God is the most obvious suggestion. But it is for something very different. The writer is speaking of the singing in the Sunday school, and remarks that "the school stands while singing, during which the library books, that have been brought in and placed by the scholars in the ends of the seats, are quietly collected. * * The singing of another hymn allows the superintendent to look after and locate new scholars and visitors."

In church singing, one may commonly see, an opportunity is given for the sexton or deacon to bear a note to the pulpit, or to communicate verbally with the pastor. Where the incumbent of the pulpit is not receiving such visits it gives him an opportunity to look out places in the hymn book or Bible, run over his notes, or possibly to look about the house and scan the congregation—in which pleasant occupation he has imitators at several points in the audience. The sexton, besides bearing notes to the pulpit, may attend to any little matters that demand looking after.

Perhaps, when all these matters are considered, it will not seem so wonderful that members of choirs consider the time of prayer or preaching their opportunity. It is wrong, no doubt, but is it strange?

Now the case may arise when it is necessary to make some movement into or out of church, during time of singing or prayer, of Scripture reading or preaching, and necessity knows no law. But we are taught, with a good deal of frequency and emphasis, that the singing of psalms and hymns and spiritual songs is an act of worship, as truly so as prayer, and that it should be engaged in solemnly and heartily as to the Lord. Is it quite consistent for a minister to inculcate this upon his people, and then occupy the time of such worship in the ways described? Is it necessary to occupy that time for such purposes?

Notices of the church's own appointments ought, certainly, to be written and in the pastor's hands before service begins. As to other notices, if it were once understood that none would receive attention unless offered beforehand, there would be no difficulty with them. No person, as a rule, goes into a desk to conduct public worship without knowing the places he wishes to turn to in the Bible and hymn book. Let him find his places before the first word is spoken. Let him make sure of having as abundant privilege of praise as his people, and if he is not endowed with musical capacity to join audibly in the singing, he can attend to it, and make melody in his heart. A good example in this regard is a valuable reinforcement of the pulpit teachings.

These remarks leave nothing to be said of Sunday school arrangements, except that we owe it to children to be more, rather than less, careful of the associations they shall form with the singing of hymns, than we are with mature minds. While they stand up to sing praise to the Saviour, let them see superintendent, teachers, librarians, all praising also. It will not be lost time. Better stay six or seven minutes longer than to slight the service of song.—Examiner and Chronicle.

METHODIST DOCTRINE.

The substance of doctrine is the great dogma of justification by faith, and the doctrine which flows out of it—the divinity of Christ. If we must be saved by justification, Christ must be divine to save us. It is not into controverted questions that I care to lead you. Do not trouble your heads about predestination, and questions of metaphysics, which belong to the region of philosophy, and ought to be taken out and kept out of the arena of religion. We are endowed with will to repent, and knowledge that we are all sinners and need a Saviour, and that Jesus Christ is ready to be our Saviour, and will save all that come to God through him. In the providence of God it has come to be considered that the Methodist Church is intrusted with two doctrines—the doctrine of the witness of the Spirit, and that of Christian perfection. They are not doctrines in the strictest sense of the word; they are not theories or dogmas at all. No dogmatic statement is needed of the fact that when a Christian man is received into the favor of God he receives the witness of it himself; the Holy Spirit witnesses to his spirit that he is a child of God. This doctrine is as old as the Church of England—you will find it in her dogmas; as old as the Church of Rome—you will find it in the lives of the saints who, in the dark ages, shone like lights in a benighted land; you will find it in the writings of Augustine, Cyprian, Tertullian; it is as old as Paul, and is taught by Christ to his disciples: "The wind bloweth where it listeth, and thou hearest the sound thereof, but canst not tell whence it cometh and whither it goeth; so is every one that is born of the Spirit." This doctrine is the doctrine of the church, and you will find it illustrated in practice by every Christian church—at least by all with whose members I ever come in contact.

The doctrine of Christian perfection is on the same basis. We are bound to love God with our whole soul; bound to take God at his word when he says: "Be ye perfect, even as your Father who is in heaven is perfect." There are two errors into which this exhortation may lead you: one is to think despondently that it is utterly impossible to attempt to approach such a standard; and the other is to excuse your faults by saying it is impossible to be a perfect Christian. You have no right to lower the standard of Christianity, and it is perilous to yourself to do it. Never dare to say what God enjoins is impossible, or that he sets before us a model he does not mean us to follow. Set before yourself the highest model, and let no failure hide it from your view.—Dr. McClintock's Living Words.

THE OLD BELL.

"What ails our bell? It sounds dull and harsh. It has no ring. As my brother said when he was here the other day, 'It stops when it gets through.' What ails it?"

"That's a good bell."

"Perhaps it is; but surely something is wrong with it now. Let's go up and see what's the matter."

So we climbed up among the dusty timbers till we stood beside the friend we had come to interview. We found, to be sure, a good bell, of fair size and good metal, and perfectly sound.

But we discovered what ailed it. It had been neglected for some time. It had sounded out its call when the rope was pulled, but had not been cared for or kept in order.

In the first place, the spring was broken. Of course the clapper, striking and resting on the side of the bell, could produce only a dull and heavy sound.

The fastening of the bell in the yoke had worked loose, so that it would sway in a crazy fashion when rung. Then we knew why the ringing of the bell had shaken the house so much of late.

Furthermore, the loosening of the bell had displaced it so much that its edge, on one side, rested directly upon the wood of the wheel. Is it any wonder that its tone was unmusical and stopped very short?

People ask sometimes: "What ails our minister? He don't preach as well as he used to. He is heavy and unattractive. He has no life about him."

Suppose you go into the pulpit or the study and make an examination. It may be that the spring is broken by cares and wants from which you in your "call" have engaged to keep him free. It may be that he has worn loose in his fastenings by too long-continued hard work. It may be that the music is killed in him by contact with the wood of your indifference and lack of co-operation. It may be that he creaks and groans for want of a little lubrication by words of appreciation and sympathy.

Now there's good metal in him yet. Put him in order by a little rest. Show him kindness and sympathy. Do your own duty. Co-operate with him heartily in Christian work. You may soon be as well satisfied as if you had thrown him away, and sent off your order for a successor.—Interior.

CALMNESS IN VIEW OF DEATH.

Not very long since a lady from St. Louis, who was staying at one of our public houses, went, as it were, to the bounds of life, and was permitted to come back and relate her experience of what seemed the dying hour. Having been seized suddenly with hemorrhage, she bled till she quite swooned away. No pulse could be found, and the inexperienced attendants thought breath was gone. Without help she would doubtless, in ten minutes, have been beyond recall. A skillful physician reached her before death had completely unclasped the bond which unites soul and body. He stanched the blood, applied restoratives, and after some hours she was able to speak. While her life hung in doubt, he remarked that her calmness and freedom from all anxiety favored her restoration.

After this lady so far recovered as to be permitted to converse freely, she confided to a friend who had been with her in the hour of peril the secret of that calmness; what had been going on in her mind when she had seemed to her attendants unconscious and scarcely alive. In that season of prostration, when no outward object made any impression upon her senses, her mind had been never more lively or busy. Her soul was filled with holy activity and pious joy. The gospel plan of salvation, to which she had been no stranger in health, had opened to her spiritual vision with a fullness and glory such as she had not before seen. She knew no pain. She heard no mortal voices, saw no forms of friends; knew not that restoratives were being applied for her relief. Lying on the floor, to which she had slidden from her chair, as the loss of blood enfeebled her, insensible to all around her, she had been carrying on the sweetest communion with her Maker and Redeemer. He came and supped with her, and she with him. "I saw," she said, "that I was a sinner, a great sinner, but my Saviour said: 'Not too great for my blood to pardon.' The plan of redemption, of saving a sinner by grace, was opened to me as never before. I said to myself, 'Now I am going to know what full salvation is;'" adding: "I do not know as I should like to have Nathan," alluding to her husband, "know how good it did seem to be going."

How many of our believing friends who cross the unbridged stream without returning from the hither side, to tell us of the activities within, may be finishing their work below, and entering on the heavenly state, in a like conscious manner! The obscure recesses into which the soul, pressed by mortal disease, retires, are not beyond the reach of him who said: "Lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world." Where he is, there shall his servant be; and where his servant—the soul in covenant with him—is, there will the blessed Son of Man not fail to find him.—Evangeline, in Congregationalist.

CREED OF THE RITUALISTS.—A writer in an English paper, quoted in the Protestant Churchman, charges Ritualists with dishonesty in remaining in the Protestant Episcopal Church.

1. They revile Protestantism. They call it a heresy, pest, cancer, etc., and villify the Reformation and reformers in terms equally coarse.
2. They propose to abandon and labor for the abrogation of the thirty-nine articles.
3. They hold, with Rome, that there are seven sacraments.
4. They pray to the Virgin Mary.
5. They change the communion table into an altar, the minister into a sacrificing priest, and accept the whole doctrine of Rome concerning the mass.
6. They pray for the souls of the dead, and avow their belief of purgatory.
7. They enjoin auricular confession to a priest.
8. They deny the sole authority of God's word.
9. They are disposed to accept the primacy of Peter.

BEST SAFEGUARD.—A little boy was on a ship with a company of wicked men. He was a pious, praying boy. The sailors wanted to teach him to drink rum and chew tobacco, and to swear, but he would not. They tried and tried, but in vain. At last one of the sailors said to the rest: "We might as well give up. We cannot spoil the boy, for he is chock full of Bible." Yes, the way to be safe is to be chock full of Bible.

THE MAN WHO, whether in his habits or his actions, in great things or in small, separates himself from his friends, seems to set every evil and envious feeling of our nature in array against him. Distinction is purchased at the expense of sympathy.

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

NOT GIVEN TO READING.—The Catholic World says that, with six million members, there is but one Catholic paper in the United States with over ten thousand paying subscribers, and scarcely one that can afford to pay for contributions.

ACCORDING to the statement of a writer in the New Jerusalem Messenger, there are seventy Swedenborgian churches in this country, half of which are without ministers, and the divinity school of that denomination has but four students.

THE Southern Churchman mentions the fact that during the last five years the average given by the Protestant Episcopal denomination for the cause of foreign missions has been only $75,000 a year, and that the treasury is now overdrawn to the amount of $28,000.

DANIEL PAGE, of Parowan, has just been excommunicated by Brigham Young for reading the Mormon Tribune, the organ of the new reform party. Mr. Page appealed his case to the High Council, and they were obliged to admit that this was the only charge against him. In several other cases Young has been acting vigorously against those suspected of favoring the new party.

BREAD IN SYRIA is of higher price than for many years, and there is at the same time no work for the poor. Men are starving to death in the vicinity of Mount Carmel. All this is affecting the female seminary at Beirut badly, and an appeal is made to its friends in this country for help. The congregations at Beirut have from four to five hundred in attendance, and the Sabbath school one hundred and twenty.

THE Missionary Herald for January condenses from eight pages of the December number of the "Annals of the Propagation of the Faith" statements showing the departure from Europe to foreign fields, during the last five months in 1868 mostly, of new Roman Catholic laborers to the number of ninety-five male "missioners" and two "teachers," seventy-four "sisters," besides a special consignment of "several Belgium nuns" for Calcutta.

A GERMAN paper states that three days before the fight at Saarbrucken, a battalion encamped near a town requested the pastor to administer the communion to them, which they received very devoutly. All the Lutheran officers and soldiers, amounting to seven hundred, participated. The battalion went courageously into the battle, and but few came out of it. It is said their undinching heroism and invincible perseverance contributed much to the victory.

THE Episcopal Church is trying to carry on missionary operations among the deluded Mormons. The Record says that a missionary bishop, the Right Rev. D. S. Tuttle, is settled at the great Mormon city, with a diocese of three hundred and fourteen thousand square miles. He has a church school with more than two hundred pupils. It estimates the Mormons at fifty thousand, a great many of them of the lower class of English people. More than fifteen thousand of this number were baptized in the Church of England.

ON THE eighth of January the first Protestant church ever built on Roman soil was opened, the inauguration being (thanks to the entrance of the Italian troops) publicly announced by the local press The congregation is under the auspices of the Free Church of Scotland. The Rev. John Macdougal, of Florence, conducted the morning service, preaching from Second Cor. viii, 9. The Rev. James Lewis, the pastor, preached in the afternoon from First John iv, 9. But for the flood the church would have been opened on the first Sabbath of the year. The event is one of marked interest.

A WRITER from the East gives an account of the Mohammedan zeal which manifests itself about Cairo, in Egypt. At that city is a university to which students crowd to read the Koran and to hear it expounded. The place is holy ground, and the students take off their shoes and sit with bare feet to listen to their Arabic teacher. Every one that goes out from this institution is expected to go as a kind of missionary to propagate the Moslem faith. Many of these students travel long distances through the center of Africa, over Arabia, Persia, Central Asia, India, and countries still further east, to spread this faith.

THE most celebrated educator of boys which this country has yet had, Samuel, Harvey Taylor, LL. D., died very suddenly, last week, at Andover, Massachusetts, after having served for thirty-three years as principal of Phillips Academy. His pupils are in all quarters of the earth, and these lines will be read by thousands of them, as they are written by one of them. Dr. Taylor has been called the Arnold of America. It is hardly a true title for him. He was a man of wonderful power over his students; but it was more the power of fear than of love. He was unexcelled as a disciplinarian.—Independent.

A VERY determined effort is being made in Madagascar, and of late with much success, to supplant the "dance-tunes" introduced at first by French bands, admired by the people for their lively jingle, and adopted in the churches for hymn tunes. Three years ago, at a united meeting of leading church members, a public sentiment was organized which has resulted in bringing in a more reverent music. The dance-tunes are now nearly extinct in the nine churches of the capital, and their singing will "compare favorably with that of English country churches." Instruction in singing, it is suggested, shall be made part of the training of the native pastors.

WE MUST chronicle yet another death. Prof. Eleazer T. Fitch, of Yale College, died January 30, aged eighty years. He was a native of New Haven, and graduated at Yale in 1810. He spent five years at Andover, first as a student, and then as an assistant to Dr. Porter. His purity of character and eminent scholarship led to his appointment as professor of divinity in Yale College in 1817, as successor to the lamented Dr. Dwight, at the same time that Dr. Day was chosen to the presidency. His duties, as prescribed in the laws of the college, were to give instruction in theology to young men preparing for the ministry, to preach in the college chapel to undergraduates, and act as pastor of the college church.—Independent.

EITHER QUEEN VICTORIA is but an indifferent church woman, although the legal head of the Church of England, or else she fails to keep a firm control over her children. The strict church people in England are just now greatly excited by the announcement that the marriage of the Princess Louise to the Scotch Marquis of Lorne, who is, of course, a Presbyterian, is to take place "in the midst of Lent!" How horrible! The Church Journal of this city says: "The law of the church has seriously forbidden weddings in Lent; and no well-instructed and devout Christian person—extraordinaries excepted—would consent or would venture to have her wedding in Lent." Perhaps this case is one of the "extraordinaries excepted!"—Independent.

THE Russians have been organizing "The Orthodox Society in behalf of Missions" at Moscow, under the presidency of Innocent, metropolitan bishop, and heretofore known as "the Apostle of Kamschatka." The occasion was marked by a crowded congregation and the presence of the highest officials. "Happily," says a Russian correspondent, "the time seems come when we begin to look upon the church as consisting not of the clergy alone, but of all the orthodox people, and on the interest of the faith as equally important to us all. The society is placed under the patronage of the Empress, and to be under control of the Holy Synod; committees are to be formed in every city, under the local bishop, and its object is defined to be the conversion of the non-Christians in the empire.

CHILDREN'S CHURCHES have recently been established in London with notable success. The first experiment dates back to 1865, when a church was instituted at Fieldlane Ragged School, as an offshoot of its large Ragged church, which has an average attendance of nine hundred adults. It has been very fruitful of sincere conversions. At the present time above twenty of the institutions affiliated to the Ragged School Union conduct such "children's churches." They are usually held on Sunday morning, when the average attendance exceeds two thousand. Mr. E. I. Hytche, a gentleman to whom the Union is greatly and in many ways indebted, writes: "Having visited and addressed several, I can testify to the marked attention and reverence of the youthful worshipers. One feature deserves notice, namely, the simple faith they exhibit when they request the conductor publicly to pray for some object dear to themselves or their parents. They, at least, never seem to doubt that Jesus meant what he said when he intimated, 'Ask and ye shall receive.' Many of these juvenile worshipers give every evidence of their conversion. Some have gone home to their Father; while others so adorn the religion they profess that they preach Christ by their lives in those dismal alleys and dens which disgrace our city."—Christian Union.

CHRIST MAKING FIGURES.—An aged minister noted for his liberality said recently, when a contribution was about to be made: "When I am about to subscribe anything for Christ I always feel as though I would like to have him make the figures for me."

RELIGION.—The depths of the soul are a labyrinth, and dark without the torch of religion. Left to ourselves, we are like subterranean waters—we reflect only the gloomy vault of human destiny.

MINISTERIAL SUPPLY.

The following resolutions were passed by the Louisiana Conference at its recent session in this city:

Resolved, THAT IN VIEW OF THE GREAT DESTITUTION OF LABORERS WITHIN OUR BOUNDS, WE SET APART THE FIRST FRIDAY IN APRIL AS A DAY OF FASTING AND PRAYER, THAT THE LORD OF THE HARVEST MAY SEND FORTH MORE LABORERS INTO THIS FIELD.

Resolved, THAT THE PREACHERS BE REQUESTED TO PREACH IN THEIR SEVERAL CHARGES ON THE CALL TO THE MINISTRY, ON THE SABBATH FOLLOWING THE FIRST FRIDAY IN APRIL, OR AT SUCH OTHER TIMES DURING THE YEAR AS MAY BE MOST SUITABLE.

LATEST FROM BISHOP ANDREW.

We learn by telegram, and also by mail, that Bishop Andrew stood the trip to Mobile pretty well. He was about the same as when he left New Orleans, though, we regret to state, his physicians have but little hope of his recovery.

Since writing the above, and just as we are going to press, the following note from Bro. Rush comes to hand. It will be seen that the Bishop is near his end.

MOBILE, Feb. 28, 1871.

DR. PARKER—Dear Brother: Bishop Andrew is slowly sinking, but still conscious, and able to talk a little. He has great diffienlty this morning with phlegm. It hinders his swallowing and talking. The physicians say he cannot last much longer. I think he will hold out four or five days. His arm and leg are entirely paralyzed, and he consequently is very helpless. The other day he sent messages to the Bishops and the church, which you will receive at the proper time. His mind is on the church always.

Yours, etc., J. W. RUSH.

STILL LATER.—The following telegram, received at half-past eleven o'clock on Wednesday, the first instant, informs us that Bishop Andrew is dying:

MOBILE, ALA., March 1, 1871.

BISHOP J. C. KEENER, 112 Camp street: Bishop Andrew is dying. Come to Mobile. J. W. RUSH.

OUR LOUISIANA MINUTES.

We have received a copy of the Minutes of the Louisiana Annual Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church South. It is a handsome pamphlet of forty pages, good paper and unexceptionable typography. The copy was prepared by Rev. C. F. Evans, the secretary of the Conference, and published by Robt. J. Harp, agent, 112 Camp street, New Orleans. The Minutes are being sent out to the preachers for distribution as fast as possible. Let every Methodist in Louisiana obtain a copy and read it with care. We observe that the thoughtful publisher has appended a considerable amount of statistical information of the church at large, and placed a most convenient index upon the cover.

POST OFFICES.

As changes are being made in the post offices of the preachers, they will greatly oblige us by furnishing their addresses as early as possible. Don't forget to give the post office from which your paper is to be changed, as well as that to which it is to be sent.

INABILITY VS. ABILITY.—A man being asked for five dollars for a worthy object of benevolence, replied: "O, I can't! I have had $100,000 lying in bank several months without drawing interest." He could not perceive that out of his own mouth he was condemned as an idolator.

INTEGRITY OF CHARACTER.

There is no pursuit in life in which integrity is not severely tested. It has come to be a question with many whether honesty is compatible with success. The competition of unscrupulous men in all departments of business is so great that those who are thoroughly upright feel themselves shut out from anything like equal chances of prosperity. In these days of corruption the old maxim about honesty being the best policy is likely to be received with distrust. Thousands, under what they regard as the pressure of necessity, submit to devices and tricks in trade against which their consciences protest. It is the custom of commercial life, and to resist it would be to invite disaster and ruin. A man may feel that he is as truthful and unselfish as circumstances permit, at the same time that he knows that the golden rule is excluded from his daily practice. Believing in the gospel and heartily wishing that the world were conformed to its precepts, he does not see altogether how business can be conducted on religious principles.

Where equal shrewdness and energy are untrammeled by moral considerations, and where lying and treachery are used without stint, the fair-minded dealer is sometimes tempted to doubt the possibility of making a living by reputable means. The business side of character is often distinct from the social and religious. In the former, hardness, duplicity and selfishness are exhibited as things essential and legitimate, while in the latter there are at least the semblances of benevolence and devotion. The Sunday side of character is as different from the other as are the clothes which are worn in the church and in the mart of trade. "Business is business," and it knows nothing of "bowels of mercies," of tenderness of conscience, and of love to our neighbor. The moral sense in business obligations is blunted and impaired by the sophistry which drives conscience from the arena of commerce. Moral reservations, like a tacit mortgage, cover the ground of all contracts, and the antiquated notion that a man should swear to his own hurt and change not, is scouted as unsuitable to modern affairs. To make a complete surrender to creditors, and, as far as possible, to repair the losses which our mistakes or misfortunes have inflicted upon others, is more frequently professed than practiced. The downright honesty which submits to any degree of poverty and humiliation rather than compromise principle is as refreshing as it is rare.

The tolerance of public opinion relieves dishonesty of any considerable degree of social restraint. The world is given to the idolatry of success, while the means of attaining it are but imperfectly estimated. Gain may be ill-gotten, but position is conceded to the fortunate possessor. Wealth may be the fruit of meanness and fraud, but these are winked at or soon forgotten, while the prosperity of the modern Dives is envied by his less successful competitors in the race for fortune. Political corruption has become so nearly universal that it has ceased to give notoriety to those who are most deeply engaged in it. To buy influence and votes for the support of the most unquestionable measures of the public good is considered entirely legitimate, while the reception of bribes scarcely entails the faintest reproach. Presidents, governors, judges and legislators are expected to grow rich as a matter of course.

With this general loosening of the foundations, and with this flood of corruption sweeping over society, there is need that the voice of warning and admonition be lifted up. The wholeness and moral soundness of character, which consists of absolute truth and honesty, must be guarded with care. Capacity and industry may reach the highest prizes of fortune without weakening self-respect or bartering integrity. In the end these principles will rise superior to fraud and villainy, and secure a more permanent and desirable triumph. But if it were otherwise, still a perfect integrity is to be insisted upon. No worldly sacrifice is too great if a pure heart and a good conscience depend upon it. These times try integrity of character as gold is tried in the fire, and the martyrdom which comes of truth and honesty is deserving of a record as illustrious as that which has been accorded to those who have met death at the stake rather than deny their faith.

CHURCH FAIR.

We again call the attention of our readers to the fair which is to be held next week, for the benefit of the Moreau Street Church. The society there is weak numerically and financially. The church is planted in the midst of a Catholic and foreign population, and is doing a useful and important work. The members have gone even beyond their ability in supporting their pastor and buying a parsonage. They deserve help, and we believe they will receive it from all of our churches and people. Let all come up generously to the rescue, and let the entire debt be wiped out at once. It can be done, it ought to be done, and we venture to hope it will be done. The fair will be held at the Stonewall Jackson Hall, Elysian Fields street, close by where the old Pontchartrain depot was situated. Take the cars of the Levee and Barracks line, starting from the customhouse, or the Rampart and Dauphine street line, starting from the Clay statue.

A GOOD THING.—From the Southwestern Book and Publishing Company, of St. Louis, we have received a copy of "The Pastor's Pocket Record and Form Book." It is a memorandum book for pastors, and well adapted for their use. It is arranged with pages lettered and ruled for the names and address of official members, members, friends, sermons preached, funerals attended, baptisms, pastoral visits, cash account, diary and general summary. Besides one hundred and sixty blank pages thus ruled and lettered, there is a neat calendar for 1871, and so much of our Ritual as contains the forms of marriage, the administration of baptism and the burial of the dead. There are also some appropriate selections of Scripture for the visitation of the sick. It is of convenient size for the pocket, handsomely bound in morocco, and the most complete memorandum book for a Methodist pastor that we have ever seen. Price, $1.25. Send orders to Southwestern Book and Publishing Company, St. Louis, Missouri.

THE UNIVERSITY SERIES.—In our columns of this issue will be found the advertisement of the admirable series of school books issued by the University Publishing Company. The well known character of the authors of these books for thorough scholarship and the long and patient labor bestowed upon each book of the series are sufficient guarantees for their excellence. We think the publishers do not claim too much. Read the advertisement.

A WORTHY EXAMPLE.—A large-hearted brother, says the Texas Christian Advocate, has authorized us to assist him in selecting five children, either boys or girls, who have no means of procuring an education, and he will pay for their tuition. If any of our friends in any portion of the State will furnish us with the name and circumstances of such children we will gladly cooperate with our friend in placing them at school. Give name, age and suggest the most convenient school. Who among those whom God has prospered in this world's goods will imitate this noble example? If every one who possesses the ability would see to it that a thorough education, under healthy religious influence, were furnished some boy or girl who, without such aid, must grow up in ignorance, what important results would follow!

IT IS A real blessing to have one in a family who is sensitive to the ludicrous. There are enough to reflect the sad side of life, and its irritable side, and its sober side.

THE Baltimore Conference holds its session at Salem, Virginia, March 8. Bishop Pierce is to preside.

OUR PERIODICAL LITERATURE.

The following extract is from a letter of Bishop Doggett, published in the Baltimore Episcopal Methodist. Our church is, indeed, well, but not over-furnished in her periodical literature. The size and excellence of our weeklies is a matter of rejoicing and pride with us. And now our Review, Magazine and Sunday school departments are splendidly filled. The Bishop says:

No medium of communication so well subserves these objects as an ably conducted Review, appearing at intervals sufficiently short to keep the reader advised of the progress of events in the literary world, and yet sufficiently long to summarize their principal features. Books are too slow, too numerous, too crude and too costly to answer these purposes. And while a Review cannot substitute useful and learned books, it mediates, if I may say so, between the extremes of excess of reading, on the one hand, and the impracticability of it, on the other, in an age as prolific of the productions of the forest as it is of every species of extravagance. But I must arrest my pen in this recommendation of the Review, except to say that Dr. Bledsoe is certainly equal to the representative position which he now occupies. His vigorous and well furnished mind, and his identification with Southern Methodism entitle him to the confidence of the church, as well as to the respect of the educated portions of society.

I intended in this connection to pay a tribute to our weekly church journals. It is scarcely necessary. The number and ability of them are a proof of the marvelous vitality of a church, all of whose periodicals were extinguished by the war. We now number eleven or twelve principal weeklies, whose merit cannot be surpassed by those of any denomination on the continent. They are conducted with a skill, a brilliancy, a variety and power which raise their editors to the grade of leaders of Christian opinion, and reflect credit upon the passing history of American Christianity. That they are sustained evinces the status of a denomination which furnishes the readers and the support for so vast and expensive an apparatus. Our periodicals are not only evidences of prosperity, but are ecclesiastical co-efficients. They are powerful instruments in advancing the scope and in molding the materials of our hopeful future, and should receive the enthusiastic cooperation of all lovers of Methodism.

I had no idea, when remitting a forgotten subscription, of categorizing our publications. It would, however, be a seeming dereliction, though not a real one, if I were to omit two members from the series. And the more so, as I have been recounting some of the moral forces now in active operation, as indicative of present strength and of future progress. I refer to those intermediate links in the chain of influence recently added, giving to it both solidity and extension. I mean the New Monthly Magazine, addressing a class of readers the necessities of whom neither an elaborate quarterly nor teeming weeklies can satisfy. The accomplished conductors and the specimens of their work already before the public are assurances that the intellectual stature of Southern Methodism will not be lower than that of any sister denominations.

Last and not least of all, I will not omit to notice the most unpretending, but perhaps really the most effective of all our periodicals, the Sunday School Visitor, and the little adjunct, because they reach and remodel the under-stratum of society, and bring in concert with it the sanctifying elements of divine truth.

This general resume of the periodical productions of Southern Methodism shows how, in addition to the stated and stable instrumentalities employed, it is occupied in rising to the emergencies of the age, and how full of promise they all are, by the blessing of God, to our growth and expansion as a church.

BISHOP KAVANAUGH.—The Nashville Christian Advocate says: The whole connection will be glad to learn that Bishop Kavanaugh will soon be in the field of active labor. He has learned the lesson that

They also serve who only stand and wait.

He writes, Loxingtou, Kentucky, February 10: "I have been confined now thirteen weeks; my present condition promises that my release is close at hand, and I sigh to be active once more. I trust that my confinement has been of considerable service to me, in giving much more time for reading and reflection, than I have enjoyed for full many a year."

CREDIT.—The article which we published last week, on "The Eclipse and what it Revealed," should have been credited to the Methodist. The omission was, of course, accidental.

DEATH OF REV. E. B. LOCKLEY.

The following is extracted from a communication published in the San Francisco Spectator:

Rev. E. B. Lockley is no more! While walking a few steps east of his residence, near the town of Centerville, on the confines of the western and outward bluff of King's river, a gun suddenly fired killing his dog, and being in the fatal range of shot, he received one ball in his right arm and two in his right breast—the latter did the work of death. He instantly retreated toward his house, calling to his wife, saying: "I am killed." He reached the yard gate, caught his wife's hand, fell on his knees in the attitude of prayer, and in a few minutes left the shores of time amid the cries and unutterable affliction of wife and daughters. The unfortunate accident transpired on Friday, at eight P. M., January 27, 1871, while many of the friends and brethren were engaged in worship and prayer to God for a revival at our quarterly meeting. After dismissal that evening we were informed that a young man living in the vicinity was aiming to kill the dog and not his owner. The Quarterly Conference Committee refrain from expressing an opinion of guilt or innocence, as the matter is undergoing a legal investigation—the jury of inquest having been held. Rev. E. B. Lockley was born in the State of South Carolina, January 1, 1821, and departed January 27, 1871, aged fifty years and twenty-six days. Subsequent to his birth his father moved to the State of Georgia, where the deceased embraced religion when but a boy, and joined the Methodist Church. In about his twentieth year he was a traveling preacher in the Georgia Conference, and afterward some years in the Alabama Conference, from which he was a transfer to this, the Pacific Conference, in 1850, preaching on this coast with great power and acceptability. In 1855 he was united to Miss Eliza Johnson in marriage, by whom he was blessed with four daughters. One of them, Eva, sleeps quietly in Linden, California. The remainder, with an affectionate wife, live to lament and mourn an irreparable loss in this life. Brother Lockley was rather above mediocrity in general reading, originality and preaching. His stirring appeals and holy zeal still ring in our ears, and will live and sound many years in this and other Conferences. May the great Head of the Church supply the loss!

To the Preachers of the Louisiana Conference, M. E. Church South.

DEAR BRETHREN: Please forward to me at New Iberia, Louisiana, in the month of March, a report of all the Sunday schools in your pastoral charges, made out according to the blank forms furnished you at Conference. Those who have no blanks can get them on application to me, or to W. H. Foster, of New Orleans.

No money should be reported except that collected since Conference.

I wish each pastor to furnish me a statement in detail of his manner of conducting Sunday schools, together with any suggestions for the benefit of the Sunday school work. Brethren, this secretaryship is a new business to me, and I want you to help me all you can. Don't fail to send your report.

UNION PERFECTED.

To the Presiding Elders of the Mississippi Annual Conference of the M. E. Church South—DEAR BRETHREN: The vote of the membership of the Mississippi Annual Conference of the Methodist Protestant Church, in regard to the proposed union, stands as follows: For union, 255; opposed, 87. Consequently the union is perfected.

MORTON, MISS., Feb. 21, 1871.

SMALL GIFTS.—It is stated in a New York paper, as the experience of the managers of the most of the private charitable institutions in that city, that about three per cent. of donations received for the support of the same is in sums of $100 or upward, and perhaps twice that amount in sums ranging from $20 to $25; but that by far the greater part is in sums less than $5. This is only another illustration of the fact that the church must rely for its resources not on the large gifts of the few, but on the small gifts of the many. Any system of collection in behalf of church expenses and church benefactions which will secure the ten cent currency notes of the people will put hundred dollar bills into the treasury of the Lord.—Congregationalist.

NEW PUBLICATIONS.

COMMENTARY ON THE GOSPELS. By Thomas O. Summers, D. D. Vol. 3—St. Luke. Nashville, Tenn.: Publishing House of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, 1871.

This volume is uniform with the two which have preceded it, in size, binding and typography. The map, preface and introduction are the same as in the other volumes. The Commentary on Luke is upon the same plan and of equal merit with the Commentaries on Matthew and Mark. The notes are a marvel of judicious selection and condensation, in which the author's wide range of critical knowledge is compressed to the utmost. Nothing difficult or desirable is left unexplained, at the same time that we are spared verbose and tedious expansions of a homiletical character. Dr. Summers' Commentaries are thoroughly reliable and judicious, and will supply a great want in the line of critical exposition. Sunday school teachers and young ministers especially should supply themselves with this valuable work. We are indebted to R. J. Harp, of the Depository, 112 Camp street, New Orleans, for a copy. Bro. Harp has a large supply on hand. Price, $1.50.

A MANUAL OF ANCIENT HISTORY, from the Earliest Times to the Fall of the Western Empire, comprising the history of Chaldea, Assyria, Media, Babylonia, Lydia, Phœnecia, Syria, Judea, Egypt, Carthage, Persia, Greece, Macedonia, Parthia and Rome. By George Rawlinson, M. A., Camden professor of Ancient History in the University of Oxford. New York: Harper & Brothers, publishers, 1871.

This volume of six hundred and thirty-three pages is indeed a valuable compend of ancient history, and for purposes of reference and for the use of schools is a most important and timely contribution to the historical literature of the day. The author has adopted the general plan and divisions of Heeren's Hand-book, his analysis is thorough and his method exhaustive. For sale by George Ellis & Bro., 82 Camp street, New Orleans.

THE CRYPTOGRAM. A novel. By James DeMiller. With illustrations. New York: Harper & Brothers, publishers, 1871. Pp. 261, octavo, handsomely bound in muslin.

SIR HARRY HOTSPUR, OR HUMBLE THWAITE. By Anthony Trollope. Illustrated. New York: Harper & Brothers, publishers, 1871. Both of the above from Ellis & Brother, 82 Camp street.

THE GALAXY, for March, has nothing from Mark Twain, but it has a number of entertaining articles, among which are: The Higher Education in America; The Annexation of San Domingo and the Nether Side of New York.

THE ATLANTIC MONTHLY, for this month, is brilliant and varied. Here are specimens from the table of contents: Women's Rights in Ancient Athens; Ups and Downs of the Bonapartes and Bourbons; John Wesley; Our Eyes and how to take Care of Them, No. 3.; Active Glaciers within the United States.

SCRIBNER'S MONTHLY AND ILLUSTRATED MAGAZINE FOR THE PEOPLE, for the current month, is abundantly illustrated, and contains a vast amount of instructive reading matter. We have specially noted the following articles: Weather Telegrams and Storm Forecasts; The Ancient Fenians; Life in the Cannibal Islands; and the Celestials in Sunday School.

BURKE'S MAGAZINE FOR BOYS AND GIRLS.—We are happy to congratulate the enterprising publisher upon the beautiful appearance of this magazine in its new form and dress. The weekly gives place to a monthly very much of the size and style of the Little Corporal. The present number contains forty-eight pages of illustrations and choice reading matter. It is a very handsome and attractive periodical. Every family where there are boys and girls old enough to read should subscribe for it at once. Published by J. W. Burke & Co., Macon, Georgia. Price, $2 per annum.

WE HAVE RECEIVED the American Stock Journal for February, published by N. P. Roger & Co., Parkesburg, Pennsylvania. It is a neat monthly, devoted to the interests of stock dealers, and valuable to all who have the care and raising of animals.

THE PRACTICAL PLANTER, published at Memphis, Tennessee, is a valuable agricultural journal. The February number is particularly attractive and instructive. It is edited by George W. Gift. Price, $1.50 per annum.

KNOWLEDGE ESSENTIAL TO FAITH.—Missionary McLaurin says: "I used to speculate as to how much divine truth a man would have to know before he could become a Christian. India and the Teloogoos have settled it. A man must know himself a sinner, and Jesus a Saviour; that is all."

GOSPEL EXPEDIENTS.

It has been about thirty years since the inception of Moreau Street church. It has been a beacon light to many a distressed and wandering mariner on life's ocean. It has subserved an important purpose in carrying forward the great work of evangelization. It has been on missionary ground, and yet self-sustaining. Now, to render it more efficient and to fit it for aggression, a parsonage is added, which, with recent repairs on the church, renders it expedient that we have a fair (and it never had one before) to liquidate the remaining debt.

A great point is gained in getting our people together. Get them together, as one great family, to interchange sentiments, to concert plans for the future, to adopt methods for the accomplishment of ends, to take a general survey of the work, to cultivate Christian unity, to drink in of the same spirit, to act in unison and concert, to strengthen denominational ties, to sustain connectionalism among us. On our unity depends our success; especially so in this great and wicked city, where the most adverse elements surround us. We need "the unity of the spirit in the bonds of peace."

God has done great things for us. Many have been led to the Saviour's feet through our instrumentality. Thousands more will come "bending" to Zion if we prove not recreant to the high trust committed to us.

The social advantage of camp and basket meetings is patent. Vast crowds, assembling from various parts of the country, give the occasion a zest and interest. The enthusiasm rises with the influx of people. The gospel embassador takes fresh inspiration, the bugle notes of the gospel of peace ring a truce to partisan feelings—schism and strife is hushed. The words of faithful warning from the watchman on the walls are timely in restoring many backsliders to their first love. The alarm given, that the "wrath of God is revealed against all ungodliness," and the fierce glare from Sinai has disclosed to the sinner his fearful doom; while the Victim slain on Calvary has presented him an only and sufficient hope. True, these occasions, unlike camp meetings, do not admit of preaching; yet who would think it untimely or out of place to advert to Christian experience and to talk of religion? It is the theme for the Christian, engaging and enrapturing his best powers.

Let us see plainly manifested who are our friends in this little enterprise for building up the cause of God. This will be evinced by your attendance and participation.

Next Tuesday evening, March 7, our fair will begin, and continue four consecutive days and nights, to be held at Stonewall Jackson Hall, near the old Pontchartrain railroad depot, Third district.

Come! Your presence will be a token of encouragement and appreciation to the devoted sisters who have labored so arduously for four weeks in getting it up for your enjoyment.

To the Presiding Elders of the Mississippi Conference.

The districts are assessed for Bishops' salary this year and deficiency of last year as follows:

	This year.	Deficiency.
Woodville district	$225 00	$43 80
Summit district	95 00	18 50
Seashore district	95 00	18 50
Brookhaven district	225 00	43 80
Jackson district	300 00	58 35
Vicksburg district	203 60	50 80
Brandon district	111 00	21 60
Meridian district	180 00	36 20

By resolution the Conference directed that the presiding elders take up the deficiency on their first round of quarterly meetings, and remit to the chairman of the Joint Board. It may be more convenient for them to remit direct to Dr. Redford, and instruct him what portion of their remittance to apply to the account of deficiency against the Mississippi Conference, and what on account of salary of this year.

POVERTY only looks well in poetry, and only is well in religion.

THE Richmond Christian Advocate says the Rev. Thomas C. Jennings died in Norfolk, January 30. He was one of the ministers of the Methodist Protestant Church who united with ours in November last.

Married.

In Auburn, Alabama, February 22, by Rev. W. Shapard, Rev. THOMAS K. ARMSTRONG, of the Alabama Conference, to Miss VIRGINIA E. PERRY, daughter of Simeon Perry, Esq.

By Rev. W. B. Lewis, January 19, 1871, in the Methodist church, Fayette, Mississippi, Mr. —— CULLY to Mrs. MARY BALDWIN.

By Rev. W. B. Lewis, February 9, 1871, at the residence of Mr. William H. Stampley, Jefferson county, Mississippi, Mr. PHIL. D. STAMPLEY to Miss FLORENCE MARTIN.

Obituaries.

CHARLES NAPOLEON, son of G. N. and S. L. Graves, and grandson of Captain T. W. Graves, died near Keachie, Louisiana, February 7, 1871, aged two years.

The chilling winds of death have blighted another little bud. We weep not as those who have no hope. "We know, by faith we know," that Jesus has saved the babe. The prattling little tongue is now learning "melodious sonnets sung by flaming tongues above." Three babes of these dear parents lie side by side. When the great white cloud shall appear in "that morning" these three babes, "raised in glory," will join hands to make that lofty flight never made on angels' wings. May these dear parents be able, by faith in Jesus, so to live and die that they may rejoice forever with their children in heaven.

—R. H. ADAIR.

MR. WILLIAM C. MARTIN was born in Jones county, Georgia, on the sixteenth of August, 1820.

At five years of age he was left an orphan, thus losing in early life parental counsel and guidance. Growing up to manhood, he entered upon life's duties, and well and faithfully did he perform them. He was a man of much pride of character, none more than he despising a mean or ungentlemanly act. The community has indeed been deprived of one of its most reliable citizens, the church of a constant member, and the family of a devoted husband and father.

He was the subject of much bodily affliction for a considerable length of time. Being apprised of his condition for six months before his death, he began to arrange his business matters accordingly. For several months the idea of leaving his wife and children troubled him exceedingly, but for some weeks prior to his final sickness he expressed resignation to the will of God, and was enabled to obtain the victory over the grave.

The writer of this calls to mind the occasion, some nine years ago, of the marriage of Mr. Martin to his now bereaved companion. How full of joyous life was he then!—how many bright hopes of the future, how many plans came to mind as to how he could render home comfortable, and how improve his estate for the benefit of his family and the entertainment of his friends. But alas! since then how many changes, how great the inroads of time, how many victims death has numbered!

Our friend sleeps well. The turmoil and strife of the present interrupt him not. We can but seek to emulate his virtues, and hope to inherit with him a habitation above—"a house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens."

L. F. D.

Died, at her late residence, near Port Gibson, Mississippi, December 25, 1870, Mrs. CATHARINE F. W. JEFFERIES, wife of Mr. Nathaniel Jefferies, Sr.

She was born April 7, 1807, near Camden, South Carolina. When about fourteen years of age Miss Watson—which was her family name—came on a visit to her friends in Jefferson county, Mississippi, where she became acquainted with Mr. Jefferies, to whom she was married February 3, 1825. She and her husband were industrious and moral, and respectful to religion, but neither of them united with the church until 1829. In the spring of that year, at an appointment in a private residence, the writer had the pleasure of receiving her into the church, and soon after her husband also. From that time to the hour of her death, in humble reliance upon the merits of her atoning Saviour and the gracious assistance of the Holy Spirit, she lived an humble, loving, joyful, consistent Christian life. She not only considered it her duty to belong to the visible church of Christ, but also an honor and a glorious privilege; and as a member of the church she was fully reliable at all times. To say that her example in all the relations of life, as wife, mother, mistress and neighbor, was such as could be safely copied, is simply to utter a truth which no one doubts who knew her. As the result of walking closely with God for more than forty years, her end was full of peace, and holy joy, and triumphant hope.

When she felt that the time of her departure was at hand she had her large family assembled around her bed, and after giving them an assurance of her eternal salvation and expressing an earnest desire that they might make an unbroken family in heaven, she requested each one to give her a pledge that they would endeavor to meet her in that bright world. Her husband asked her if she felt an assurance of going to heaven? "Yes," said she, "I sought and obtained a preparation for that forty years ago." Again he said: "You have been my guardian angel in this life; when you get home to heaven will you not return and be my guardian angel still?" With unutterable tenderness and child-like simplicity she replied: "I will if God will let me." She requested that I, as her spiritual father, should lead the funeral services at her burial. What else was so appropriate for a text as "To die is gain?" In her uniform and earnest piety and consistent Christian life, in connection with her triumphant death, she has left the richest inheritance for her husband and children. May they all follow her as she followed Christ!

J. G. JONES.

Died, January 8, 1871, at the residence of her son-in-law, Dr. G. G. Everett, at Newton, Mississippi, Sister JANE CARR, in the seventy-third year of her age.

Sister Carr's maiden name was Cole, and she was born in North Carolina, March 4, 1798. In early life she went with her parents to reside in Tennessee, and thence her parents moved to Wayne county, in the then Territory of Mississippi, where she was united in marriage to Mr. Mayers, and became the mother of eight children, of whom only three survive her, viz, Colonel A. G. Mayers, of Brandon, Captain P. K. Mayers, editor of the Handshoro Democrat, and Mrs. Mary A. Everett, of Newton, with whom she lived the last ten months of her life. She was left a widow by the decease of Mr. Mayers, the father of her children, in 1834, and was married to Mr. Claiborne Mann in 1841, and went to reside in Neshoba county.

In the year 1850 or 1851 she united herself with the Methodist Episcopal Church South, and was one of only five members of that church in all that region. Though surrounded with difficulties, and cut off from the privileges of hearing Methodist preaching, only at long intervals, she remained steadfast in faith and firm in her attachment to the church of her choice.

In 1857 she was again left a widow, and in the fall of the same year she removed to Rankin county, and lived for some time with her son-in-law, Dr. Everett, and enjoyed not only the society of her children, but greater religious privileges and advantages. In 1866 she was again married, to Rev. Jacob Carr, a deeply pious and useful local preacher. Bro. Carr died in 1869, and the subject of this notice went to Brandon, to live with her son, Colonel A. G. Mayers, who was assiduous in all his filial regards to make her declining days serene and untroubled.

Sister Carr was a woman of very robust and vigorous constitution; and until the last two years of her life time seemed to lay the burden of over three-score years lightly upon her. In 1869 she became the victim of a severe attack of chills and fever, which prostrated, in a great degree, her strength and vigor. She was then attacked with asthma, and became a great sufferer for the last ten months of her sojourn on earth. It was on account of this last severe sickness that she went to reside, in March last, with her daughter, Mrs. Everett, at Newton, that she might have the benefit of the kind care and skill of Dr. Everett, her son-in-law; and his unremitting attention and skillful treatment mitigated her sufferings, and a daughter's care soothed her sorrows. The writer of this brief notice visited Sister Carr several times during her protracted and painful illness, and found her always firm in her faith and confidence in her Saviour; and while she longed for the hour of her release from earth and from suffering, she prayed for patience and resignation to the will of her heavenly Father.

Not fearing or doubting,
With Christ at her side,

she was strong in confidence that death would be gain to her. In this frame of mind, and in the furnace of affliction still, she waited until her end came, and on the morning of January 8, 1871, this saint of God entered into "the rest that remaineth for the people of God." Her faith failed not in death, and her dying message to her children was to meet her in heaven.

SOUTHERN BOOKS FOR SOUTHERN SCHOOLS.

School Books which are Unsectional, Unpartisan and Unpolitical.

PREPARED BY THE MOST EMINENT SOUTHERN SCHOLARS,

And Entirely Acceptable to Southern Teachers and Parents.

THE UNIVERSITY PUBLISHING CO.,

An association composed of many of the most eminent citizens of the several Southern States, feeling the necessity for a series of School Books which in their teaching should not be

Offensive to the Thought and Feeling of the Southern People,

Are now issuing a complete series of School and College Text-books by the eminent Southern scholars and educators named below, which are the

CHEAPEST, BEST AND MOST BEAUTIFUL SCHOOL BOOKS

Now published. The "University Series" embraces

MAURY'S GEOGRAPHICAL SERIES,

By Commodore M. F. Maury, of Virginia Military Institute. A series of books which mark an era in the study of this science, and which, in the words of a well known and accomplished Southern teacher, "are characterized by a felicity of arrangement and simple freshness of style which must ever render them attractive to the young, and which will be used by all who wish to teach Geography as a science, as something to make pupils think, and not merely as an enumeration of dry facts."

HOLMES' READERS AND SPELLERS,

By George F. Holmes, LL. D., Professor of History and General Literature in the University of Virginia. A series of Readers unequaled in cheapness, excellence and typographical beauty. They are steadily progressive in character, bright and fresh in their selections of prose and verse, and illustrative of Southern scenes, incidents and history.

VENABLES' ARITHMETICAL SERIES,

By Charles S. Venables, LL. D., Professor of Mathematics in the University of Virginia. These books are received everywhere by intelligent teachers with the highest satisfaction, as being most admirably adapted for mental drill, as well as for business education. Their methods, rules and reasonings are clear, distinct, logical and comprehensive, and the series is carefully graded throughout.

HOLMES' HISTORY OF THE UNITED STATES,

By George F. Holmes, LL. D., of the University of Virginia. It is enough to say of this admirable work, interesting, impartial and truthful, as well as pure and graceful in style, that it is the only History of the United States which is acceptable to Southern teachers and parents. It comes down to the present date. In addition to the books above named the

"UNIVERSITY SERIES OF SCHOOL BOOKS"

TO WHOM SHALL WE GIVE THANKS?

A little boy had sought a pump
From whence the sparkling water burst,
And drank with eager joy the draught
That kindly quenched his raging thirst.
Then gracefully he touched his cap:
I thank you, Mr. Pump, he said,
For this nice drink you've given me!
(This little boy had been well bred.)

Then said the Pump: My little man,
You're welcome to what I have done:
But I am not the one to thank—
I only help the water run.
Oh, then, the little fellow said,
(Polite he always meant to be,)
Cold water, please accept my thanks,
You have been very kind to me.

Ah! said cold water, don't thank me;
Far up the hillside lives the spring
That sends me forth with generous hand
To gladden every living thing.
I'll thank the spring, then, said the boy,
And gracefully he bowed his head.
Oh, don't thank me, my little man,
The spring with silvery accents said.

Oh, don't thank me—for what am I
Without the dew and summer rain?
Without their aid I ne'er could quench
Your thirst, my little boy, again.
Oh, well, then, said the little boy,
I'll gladly thank the rain and dew.
Pray, don't thank us—without the sun
We could not dll one cup for you.

Then, Mr. Sun, ten thousand thanks
For all that you have done for me.
Stop! said the Sun, with blushing face,
My little fellow, don't thank me.
'Twas from the ocean's mighty stores
I drew the draught I gave to thee.
Oh, Ocean, thanks! then said the boy—
It echoed back, Not unto me.

Not unto us, let unto Him
Who formed the depths in which I lie.
Go, give thy thanks, my little boy,
To Him who will thy wants supply.
The boy took off his cap, and said,
In tones so gentle and subdued,
Oh, God, I thank thee for this gift.
Thou art the giver of all good.

TWO SIDES OF A STORY.

"What's the matter?" said Growler to the black cat, as she sat mumping on the steps of the kitchen door.

"Matter enough," said the cat, turning her head another way. "Our cook is very fond of talking of hanging me. I heartily wish some one would hang her."

"Why, what is the matter?" repeated Growler.

"Hasn't she beaten me, and called me a thief, and threatened to be the death of me?"

"Dear, dear!" said Growler. "Pray what has brought it all about?"

"O! the merest trifle, absolutely nothing; it is her temper. All the servants complain of it. I wonder they haven't hanged her long ago."

"Well, you see," said Growler, "cooks are awkward things to hang; you and I might be managed much more easily."

"Not a drop of milk have I had this day," said the black cat; "and such a pain in my side."

"But what," said Growler, "what is the immediate cause?"

"Haven't I told you?" said the black cat, pettishly. "It is her temper—what I have to suffer from it! Everything she breaks she lays to me. Such injustice; it is unbearable!"

Growler was quite indignant; but being of a reflective turn, after the first gust of wrath had passed he asked: "But was there no particular cause this morning?"

"She chose to be angry because I—I offended her," said the cat.

"How, may I ask?" gently inquired Growler.

"O, nothing worth telling—a mere mistake of mine."

Growler looked at her with such a questioning expression that she was compelled to say: "I took the wrong thing for my breakfast."

"O!" said Growler, much enlightened.

"Why, the fact was," said the black cat, "I was springing at a mouse, and I knocked down a dish; and not knowing exactly what it was, I smelt it, and just tasted it, and it was rather nice and—"

"You finished it?" suggested Growler.

"Well, I should, I believe, if that cook hadn't come in. As it was, I left the head."

"The head of what?" said Growler.

"How inquisitive you are!" said the black cat.

"Nay, but I should like to know," said Growler.

"Well, then, of some grand fish that was meant for dinner."

"Then," said Growler "say what you please; but now I've heard both sides of the story, I wonder she didn't hang you."

Little reader, are you like the black cat?—Interior.

AN ILLUSTRATION.—The Mississippi, the outlet of a vast territory, flows, with an irresistible flood, southward.

A little brook, whose sufficient business it is to float the paper ship of childhood and water the lambs of a meadow, has laid its course northward, and pushes, with difficulty, its sinuous windings through tangled grass and rafts of dried weeds and leaves.

On observing the case with which the Mississippi pours his majestic flood along, the little brook prays him to reverse his course, turn into its tiny channel and sweep all its obstructions away. Drawn by its own constant longings, the little brook approaches imperceptibly nearer to the mighty river, till, unbeknown to itself, it has "fetched a compass" to the right-about, falls in with the passing current, and is swallowed up in the bosom of the Father of Waters.

Its desire is accomplished. The Mississippi now flows with it, because it flows with the Mississippi.

God wills the best. If we, as we ought, desire the best, and truly pray, "Thy will be done," our desire is granted.—Interior.

DEATH AND THE GRAVE.—A Fable.

"I am hungry," said the Grave. "Give me food."

Death answered:

"I will send forth a minister of awful destruction, and you shall be satisfied."

"What minister will you send?"

"I will send alcohol. He shall go in the guise of food and medicine, pleasure and hospitality. The people shall drink and die."

And the Grave answered:

"I am content."

And now the church bells began to toll, and the mournful procession to advance.

"Who are they bringing now?" said the Grave.

"Ah," said Death, "they are bringing a household. The drunken father aimed a blow at his wife. He killed the mother and her child together, and then dashed out his own life."

"And who," said the Grave, "comes next, followed by a train of weeping children?"

"This is a broken-hearted woman, who has long pined away in want, while her husband has wasted his substance at the tavern. And he, too, is borne behind, killed by the hand of violence."

"And who next?"

"A young man of generous impulses, who, step by step, became dissipated and squandered his all. My agent turned him out to be frozen in the street."

"Hush!" said the Grave; "now I hear a wail of anguish that will not be silenced."

"Yes, it is the widow's cry. It is the only son of his mother. He spurned her love, reviled her warning, and a bloated corpse he comes to thee. And thus they come—further than the eyes can reach the procession crowds to thy dark abodes. And still lured by the enchanting cup which I have mingled, the sons of men crowd the paths of dissipation. Vainly they dream of escape, but I shut behind them the invisible door of destiny. They know it now, and with song and dance and riot they hasten to thee, O Grave! Then I throw my fatal spell upon the new throngs of youth, and soon they, too, will be with thee."

The Farm and Garden.

What is the True Value of Manure?

This is a very important question, because upon the answer given to it will depend the degree of appreciation in which a farmer holds manure, and the pains he takes to accumulate and apply it. In countries long cultivated manure becomes absolutely essential for the profitable growth of any crop at all; and thus a late English writer defines the chief business of farming to be "the bringing of manure on to the land, and the carrying of cattle and produce off it"—connecting together the manure and produce as cause and effect.

What is manure? This question resolves itself into the stating of a great fact: The farmer creates nothing; he only changes the form of what already exists. Cotton, corn, wool, beef, cheese and butter are nothing else than earth, air and water in another shape. But the earth is composed of some ten or twelve substances; and that portion of it capable of being converted into a plant, at any one time, is comparatively small—about a half per cent. of the whole—while air and water constitute the least valuable part. These three substances are the farmer's raw material, and out of them he must manufacture his crops. If his soil contains a very small quantity of matter capable of conversion into a vegetable, he receives a small crop at harvest time. A baker can make but little bread out of a nearly empty barrel of flour; but fill the barrel and he will make much bread. Let the farmer fill the earth with substances capable of changing into grain, and he receives much grain. Nothing can be more simple, and yet more true, than that whatever we receive off of our farms is but a portion of the soil, with some air and water in a new form.

When we sell a crop of cotton we do not sell something that we have created, but we sell so much lime, salt, phosphorous, potash, etc., which last year helped to constitute the soil. Throughout all nature, "Out of nothing nothing is made." Now, then, we can answer the question: "What is manure?" It is the stuff out of which plants are made; just as truly as the fleece on a sheep's back is the stuff out of which your best coat is made. There are many substances utterly worthless in their present shape—nay, worse, for they are offensive, as if to teach us to bury them—which are composed of the very things which compose corn. Such are dung of all kinds, bloods, ashes, old woolen rags, offal, urine, dead animals, etc. Still further, unlike the greater portion of the soil, they are in the fit condition to undergo change; and we have only to put them in the right way in the ground beside a seed—that mysterious fragment of accumulative life—for them to turn into whatever kind of vegetable we wish them. We cannot eat woolen rags or ashes, but we can eat wheat, what they are in another shape. What the chrysalis is to the butterfly manure is to grain. Who knows but this very rag was once before an ear of wheat?

Now you perceive the true value of manure when it is judiciously applied. It either prevents our land from becoming worthless, or it gives us this year as many bushels to the acre as we had half a dozen years since, or it increases the fertility of the land, and gives us yearly a larger return on the same area.

Suppose you make, save carefully from the wet, and apply twenty-five loads of barn-yard manure to an acre of land. From first to last it has actually cost you $10 to do so. You are $10 poorer than if you applied no manure, and if it gives you no return it is $10 lost. But this acre of land cost you $10, and you do not consider that lost. No! it is invested. It is an investment paying interest, and not only so, but actually preventing loss. With the educated scientific farmer there is neither chance nor guesswork about it.—Practical Planter.

PLOWING LANDS WHEN WET.—The season now approaches when the plow has to be in motion for the crop, and we earnestly advise our readers better do nothing than plow when land will not crumble. The exception is lime lands, for these may be plowed when water will follow the plow. We believe less injury is done if the plowing be done early, when light freezes follow; yet, better not risk a freeze. The farmer should not work depending on luck—so called; find other work to do until it is dry enough, and when dry enough stop all other work for the plow. We hold that no work should be done in the earth with the spade, hoe or plow when the earth is wet. A field, plowed when the earth is wet enough to show a smooth, slick, glossy surface, will require good management for years to restore the soil. And we say more: Better wait till the heavy winter rains are over, for the impacting of water will make land closer than the land not plowed. Let our experience warn the young farmer or the thoughtless old one. We know we are right, and do not write from other say-so.—Southern Farmer.

CULTIVATING IRISH POTATOES.—As soon as the tops are three or four inches high run a "twister" or light turning plow that will throw the earth over them and entirely cover them up. This will not injure them, as might be supposed, but will be an advantage to them in several ways. First, if they are very early, and liable to have the tops bit by frost, it will be a protection; and, second, it checks an early and luxuriant growth of tops, and causes them to commence forming tubers earlier. They will soon grow out again, and when they are large enough plow them again, throwing the dirt to them, but do not cover them this time. This is all the plowing they will need. Keep them clear of weeds and grass, of which there will not be much after the second plowing.

RETARDING PEACH BLOSSOMS.—Peach growers should look to it that their peach trees do not blossom during this warm weather. If they should, a nipping frost, which we shall be sure to have, will prevent us from eating home-grown peaches. To do this effectually put sawdust or any other heavy substance around the tree, wet it with cold water every few days, and cover it with plank, slabs, bricks, stones, slate or other material. This will keep the roots cold, and the tree will not blossom before you want it to.—Our Home Journal.

A NEW CLOVER.—Some one, says the Practical Planter, has introduced into north Mississippi a new California clover, represented as a wonderful grass. What is it and where did it come from? We know as much of California as any living man, and we never heard of this particular clover. Look out for it, if you are wise. The peddlers seem to be out in great force this season. Put them down.

Stoves! Stoves! Stoves!

THESE are not the best the world ever saw, nor do I pretend to say that they will last for ages and generations to come; neither will they bake bread or warm rooms without some little wood or coal, and just the least bit of fire, judiciously applied. But I do believe they are just as good as any now in use, and with the same care in using and skill in managing will perform as well, and prove as durable and economical as the most approved pattern. MISCELLANEOUS.

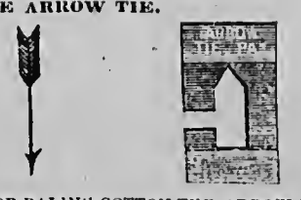
THE ARROW TIE.



FOR BALING COTTON THE ARROW TIE is the most popular, being the best Cotton Tie in use.

Planters and Cotton Press men everywhere prefer it to all others.

THE ARROW TIE

was used to cover MORE THAN HALF THE CROP OF 1869, giving entire satisfaction.

The patentee and manufacturer of the celebrated ARROW TIE, J. J. McComb, formerly of New Orleans, now residing in Liverpool, having control of the best and most extensive Rolling Mills in Europe, is constantly importing large stocks of this popular Tie, manufactured of the very best quality of English iron, to meet the increasing demand for it throughout all the Cotton States.

Planters can buy or order the ARROW TIE of all dealers in Iron Ties, and of country merchants generally, at the lowest market price; and we respectfully solicit the patronage of Planters and Factors everywhere.

MEDICAL.

N. JENKINS' ANNIHILATOR,
A Purely Vegetable Compound
FOR THE PERMANENT CURE OF
RHEUMATISM AND GOUT.

WE TAKE PLEASURE in being able to announce to the public that the above mentioned painful diseases can be entirely and permanently cured. Many popular medicines of the day have rendered inestimable relief to sufferers from these diseases. But experience has demonstrated the fact that such relief is only temporary, and that the patient is not cured through their instrumentality.

The remedy now offered eradicates every vestige of the diseases of which it claims to be the "Annihilator," and there can be no relapse. Let all those, then, who are suffering from these complaints send for a bottle of N. JENKINS' ANNIHILATOR, and give it a trial. It is a simple preparation of pure vegetable substances, and can do no harm, whereas my unparalleled success in the use of it in the southern and southwestern parts of this State, (to which localities, and especially to Fisher T. Rawson and James E. Bailey, would I refer those who desire facts before trying it for themselves,) justifies me in offering the Annihilator as a positive cure for Rheumatism and Gout. This is a broad assertion, but a fair trial of it will certainly convince the most skeptical that it is not an exaggerated one.

What the Annihilator Will Do.

1. From one to two bottles will cure permanently any first attack of Rheumatism or Gout.

2. From two to twelve bottles, according to duration of disease, will cure permanently any case of Rheumatism or Gout.

3. It will cure many cases of Neuralgia from the simple fact that the origin of the disease has been of rheumatic character.

PRICE, $5 PER BOTTLE.

No charge made except for medicine. Full directions as to use and further information address

BRACES AND TRUSSES.—DR. JOHN BANGELL informs the medical profession and others that he has constantly on hand and for sale a complete assortment of FLEMING'S TRUSSES, Spinal and Shoulder Braces, and other appliances for the prevention, relief and cure of general debility, physical weakness and derangements of public speakers and singers, palpitation of the heart, bronchitis and weakness of the lungs, spinal weakness and deformity, dyspepsia and nervous affections, constipation and chronic diarrhea, female derangements and extreme displacements of the womb, RUPTURE, PROLAPSUS, prolapsus-ani, and weakness of the male or female system.

These light, cool and springy auxiliaries are the special favorites of the profession, are intensely common-sense and scientific in their action; supply a missing link in treatment; place the above affections in a new and more hopeful light, and often effect cures where medicine can only palliate, and more than it can cure a hernia or a dislocated joint.

He specially desires an examination of these appliances by the professional brethren. Where necessary the proper application of the above braces will be under our supervision or that of the family physician.

These valuable appliances are sanctioned by a large number of the medical profession in the United States and Europe as the best adapted to fulfill the purpose for which they are intended, and the Trusses and Braces are adopted by the United States government for the use of the army and navy. Terms moderate. Consultations free. Send for their pamphlet. It is better to call.

BOOKS AND STATIONERY.

STANDARD EDUCATIONAL WORKS

PUBLISHED BY

CHARLES SCRIBNER & COMPANY,

651 BROADWAY, NEW YORK.

Guyot's Geographical Text-Books.

"Incomparably superior to anything published."—Agassiz.

Introduction to the Study of Geography.
Elementary Geography.
Intermediate Geography.
Common School Geography.

Guyot's System is approved and indorsed by the most distinguished literary and scientific men of our nation; such as Profs. Agassiz, Dana, Tenney, Henry and others, celebrated in science throughout Europe as well as at home.

The fact that ONE MILLION (1,000,000) copies of the work are in use in the schools of our country, at the present time, is proof of the unparalleled success attending the New System, for no other series of books ever published in America have ever secured so rapid and extensive introduction. They are the text-books in nearly all the colleges, seminaries, normal schools, etc., in the United States; in the public schools of the cities of New York, Brooklyn, Rochester, and most of the cities and towns of the Eastern States; Cincinnati, Cleveland, Columbus, Springfield, Toledo, Marietta, and most of the other important towns and cities, numbering nine thousand schools in Ohio, and hundreds of towns and cities in the other Western States, while in the Southern States and California they are being extensively adopted.

Believing that the publication of Professor Guyot's series has marked a new and better era in the presentation of geographical science, that by it the pupils of this generation obtain a clearer, more definite and extended knowledge of the world on which they live, and that it is so systematized as to render that knowledge more valuable and permanent, we commend it to the attention of those interested in educational improvements and progress.

DR. DEEMS' SERMONS,

AS PREACHED FROM THE PULPIT OF

THE CHURCH OF THE STRANGERS,

To be published and mailed, postage paid, to subscribers regularly during the week succeeding their delivery. No sermons are so elegantly printed either in Europe or in this country.

The Church of the Strangers is a Christian communion, composed in part of persons who have been members of the Baptist, Congregational, Episcopal, Lutheran, Methodist, Presbyterian and other denominations, and in part of those who have made a confession of faith under the ministry of the Pastor. We believe ourselves to be the first unsectarian church established in America. Our symbol of faith is the Apostles' Creed, our ritual is simple, our communion is open, and our seats are all free. We are at war with no existing denomination of the Christian Church, but are endeavoring to supplement the labors of them all, and are at perfect peace with all who "love our Lord Jesus Christ in sincerity." Our aim is to demonstrate the practicability of Christian Unity, to keep up a Free Christian Church in this city, and to furnish a Sunday Home for Strangers whom pleasure or business may bring to the metropolis.

"As brilliant as those from Plymouth pulpit; they are sounder in theology and purer in style."—Banner of the Church, Atlanta, Ga.

A PARAGRAPH is going the rounds cautioning the public against the use of an article passing for "golden sirup," which is not a true product of the sugar cane, but made from starch by the use of sulphuric acid. A test is also recommended for detecting the spurious article by using tannic acid, or a little tea, when the mixture will turn black like ink. A correspondent of the American Chemist shows that this test would be very likely to mislead a person into accepting the spurious article and rejecting the true. The test simply determines the presence of iron, which gives the ink reaction. All cane sugars and sirups are manufactured in iron vessels; and, in spite of the efforts to exclude the metal, it is quite likely to be present in them, while the spurious article made from starch is more likely to be free from iron. The spurious article is, however, a good, healthy sugar, called grape sugar, the sugar of raisins, but not so sweet as cane sugar.

THE Peruvian government has started an exploration of an almost unknown region, under its nominal jurisdiction, but now in the possession of hostile Indians, to the eastward of the Andes. Railroads have been boldly carried over loftier elevations than have been attempted anywhere else in the world; and it now only remains to connect these, if possible, with some navigable river flowing into the Amazon, to establish a very desirable commercial communication with the Atlantic. The river Perene starts from a point within fifty-eight leagues of Lima, on the Pacific coast, and preliminary surveys have been made to determine whether it is navigable. The first reports are chiefly interesting as showing that the Indians are so far acquainted with metallurgy as to have iron foundries in successful operation, with furnaces, anvils and other appliances, using also coal in their processes. A hill of salt is reported to be in existence in the same region, but so far nothing more has been discovered than an impregnation of salt in some portions of the soil. We shall watch with much interest the results of future explorations, which are promised.

A SINGULAR report is set afloat, on the authority of an East Indiaman, to the effect that the Island of Aurora has disappeared from the Pacific ocean. It has been known as one of the chief islands of the New Hebrides group, situated some nine hundred miles east of the Australian coast. It was thirty-six miles long and five wide, and quite fertile; but nothing remains, it is said, to mark its former position, or give a hint as to the time of the catastrophe. As the Papuans, who would naturally be best acquainted with such an event, are not particularly literary or social in their habits, it may be some time before the assertion is either confirmed or denied. Meanwhile we can remember that the New Hebrides belong to a system of groups in the Pacific which all trend in very much the same direction—northwest and southeast—and give evidences that they are the tops of sub-oceanic mountain ranges, with many tokens also of volcanic origin and disturbance. Even the individual islands, which are apt to be long and narrow, like Aurora, are shown to have the same trend with the main lines of the groups. Of volcanoes the New Hebrides claim some two or three.

MR. ROESSLER reports as received at the museum of the United States General Land Office some specimens of the oldest known fossil, the Eozoon Canadense. This fossil was discovered some years ago in Canada in rocks which had till then been considered without life, and has since that time been accepted as antedating every other appearance of life known to geology. The new specimens are well marked, in a greenish-colored limestone found in a cutting opened by the Adirondack and Lake George railroad, near Saratoga. The locality, thus accessible, abounds in these fossils, which will be very acceptable to geologists, especially as there is room for considerable study yet as to their character. Less distinct specimens have been found in half a dozen places in eastern New England, as well as in Canada. Many microscopists have claimed to demonstrate various particulars regarding their structure as organisms. At the same time, we note in the Journal of Science that the organic character of the Eozoon is sharply called in question by some English microscopists, who maintain that it is only mineral, after all. Perhaps the new evidences may now bring a settlement of the question.—Independent.

"THERE is not greater grace of possession than to believe that God speaks to us. If we believe that we should be already blessed. Christ was offered once for all; now he requires nothing but that we should give him thanks forever."

NEW ORLEANS MARKETS.

From the N. O. Price Current.

A fair business has been done since our last issue in most branches of the wholesale trade, in filling orders for spring goods and to replenish broken stocks, but the movement in sugar and molasses has been restricted by light supplies of the better qualities. From a similar cause the sales of flour have been of limited extent, but grain has come forward more freely, and sold at easier prices, while provisions have continued quiet and firm at previous rates.

Our accounts from the country indicate that preparation for planting has been seriously delayed by frequent rains. The more recent accounts both from the Atlantic and Gulf States report a large amount of cotton yet to come forward, and that the crop promises to reach not much less than 4,000,000 bales.

COTTON.—The following are the arrivals since the twenty-fourth ultimo:

Louisiana and Mississippi	bales.. 29,351
Lake	84
Florida	199
Mobile	550
Texas	322
Total	30,506

On Saturday a considerable amount changed hands during the morning, at firm prices for all good cottons, but at irregular rates for mixed lists and the poorer qualities, sales of about the same quality showing a difference of ¼ to ½c., but toward the close all descriptions ruled more in favor of buyers, without any quotable decline. The sales were to a fair extent, embracing 6,150 bales. On Monday operations were restricted at the opening by brokers claiming concessions which factors were unwilling to admit, but later in the day, under unfavorable accounts from Liverpool and New York, and a decided decline in sterling exchange, the latter were compelled to give way to the extent of about ⅛c. The movement, however, was quite animated at the decline, the business embracing 9,500 bales, prices being a good deal unsettled at the close, but nominally quoted at 12¼ to 12¾c. for good ordinary, 13¼ to 13¾c. for low middling, and 14¼ to 14½c. for middling. On Tuesday the market opened with only a moderate inquiry, and buyers claiming further concessions, which factors were unwilling to admit; but later in the day, under a decline of ⅛c. at New York, discouraging telegrams from Liverpool, and a further reduction in sterling exchange, the latter were compelled to meet the demand more freely, which brought out the former with increased spirit, and 8,100 bales changed hands at easier prices generally, but without any quotable decline, except in low middling and the lower grades, the outside figures for which were reduced ⅛c.

This makes an aggregate for the past three days of 25,750 bales.

The receipts at this port since the first of September (exclusive of the arrivals from Mobile, Florida and Texas) are 972,151 bales, against 829,071 bales to the same date last year, and the increase in the receipts at all the ports, up to the latest dates, as compared with last year, is 663,694 bales. In the exports from the United States to foreign countries, as compared with the same dates last year, there is an increase of 593,444 bales to Great Britain, 109,212 to other foreign ports, and a decrease of 177,732 to France.

Referring to our remarks above, we quote as follows:

Ordinary	11 to 11½
Good ordinary	12¼ to 12¾
Low middling	13¼ to 13¾
Middling	14¼ to 14½
Strict middling	14¾ to 15

VOL. XVII. NEW ORLEANS, THURSDAY, MARCH 9, 1871. NO. 8.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

WASHINGTON, March 2.—The conference committee on the Texas Pacific railroad have agreed upon and report a branch from New Orleans to Marshall, Texas, via Baton Rouge and Alexandria, a trunk from Marshall to San Diego, and a branch from the Colorado river, near the thirty-second parallel. Parliamentary courtesy requires that the House must act first on the report.

WASHINGTON, March 3.—The Texas Pacific railroad bill has passed both houses, and now awaits the President's signature, the report of the committee of conference having been agreed to this afternoon.

The text of the House substitute, a synopsis of which has recently been published, was not materially altered, but amended by the addition of several new sections.

The main trunk commences at Marshall, Texas, and extends thence by the most direct and eligible route, to be determined by the said company, near the thirty-second parallel of north latitude, to a point near El Paso; thence by the most direct and eligible route, to be selected by the said company, through New Mexico and Arizona, to a point on the Rio Colorado, at or near the southeastern boundary of the State of California; thence by the most direct and eligible route to San Diego, California.

The New Orleans, Baton Rouge and Vicksburg Railroad Company, chartered by the State of Louisiana, has the right to connect by the most eligible route, to be selected by the said company, with the said Texas Pacific railroad, at its eastern terminus, and shall have the right of way through the public lands to the same extent granted hereby to the said Texas Pacific Railroad Company: and in aid of its construction from New Orleans to Baton Rouge, thence by the way of Alexandria, in the said State, to connect with the said Texas Pacific Railroad Company at its eastern terminus, there is hereby granted to the said company, its successors and assigns, the same number of alternate sections of public lands per mile, in the State of Louisiana, as are by this act granted in the State of California to said Pacific Railroad Company, and said lands shall be withdrawn from the market selected, and patents issued therefor and opened for settlement and pre-emptions upon the same terms and in the same manner and time as is provided for and required from the said Texas Pacific Railroad Company within the said State of California, provided that the said company shall complete the whole of the said road within five years from the passage of this act for the purpose of connecting the Texas Pacific railroad with the city of San Francisco.

The Southern Pacific Railroad Company of California is hereby authorized, subject to the laws of California, to construct a line of railroad from a point at or near Tehachapa Pass, by the way of Los Angelos, to the Texas Pacific railroad at or near the Colorado river, with the same rights, grants and privileges, and subject to the same limitations, restrictions and conditions as were granted to the said Southern Pacific Railroad Company of California by the act of July 27, 1866; provided, however, that this section shall in no way effect or impair the rights, private or prospective, of the Atlantic and Pacific Railroad Company or any other railroad company.

WASHINGTON, March 3.—Senate.—The cable telegraph bill passed, with an amendment making the maximum cost $5, gold, for ten words.

The conference committee on the Mobile and Chattanooga railroad reported that they were unable to agree, and were discharged.

The Texas Pacific railroad bill was adopted, and goes to the President.

The Senate is in session to-night.

House.—Business being well up, the House was occupied with pensions and other private bills, and hearing the reports of committees of conference.

WASHINGTON, March 4.—The President has signed the Texas Pacific railroad bill.

The Senate has passed the Cincinnati and Southern railroad bill. The House agreed to the conference report on the army appropriation bill. The report strikes out the rider for the relief of Southern loyalists, but accepts the House bill for the appointment of three commissioners, and also directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay the Pacific railroad half rates instead of reserving the whole amount.

At midnight all the appropriation bills had been disposed of.

Senate.—The following new Senators were seated and sworn in: Messrs. Cragin, Republican, New Hampshire; West, Republican, Louisiana; Davis, Democrat, West Virginia; Kelley, Democrat, Oregon; Ferry, Republican, Michigan; Logan, Republican, Illinois; Frelinghuysen, New Jersey; Anthony, Republican, Rhode Island; Wilson, Republican, Massachusetts; Morrill, Republican, Maine; Wright, Republican, Iowa; Windom, Republican, Minnesota; Cooper, Democrat, Tennessee; Saulsbury, Democrat, Delaware; Robertson, Republican, South Carolina; Stevenson, Democrat, Kentucky; and Messrs. Hitchcock and Caldwell. Objections were made to Mr. Goldthwaite, from Alabama; his credentials were laid on the table. The name of Vance, from North Carolina, was not called.

The credentials of Foster Blodgett, from Georgia, were laid on the table to await investigation.

The credentials of Hamilton and Reynolds, claiming seats from Texas, were tabled.

The Senate adjourned till Tuesday.

House.—The House organized by the election of the Republican caucus nominees. All claimants presenting themselves were seated.

The House adjourned till Tuesday after passing a resolution to adjourn first session at noon on Wednesday.

SALT LAKE CITY, March 4.—A letter received to-day from a reliable authority in East Canon says that good placer diggings have been struck there, and claims have been located for mines. There is great excitement in the vicinity. The smelting works on this canon are also worked successfully, but snow on the mountains prevents prospecting.

BOSTON, March 6.—The shock of an earthquake was felt in New Hampshire last night.

WASHINGTON, March 6.—Among the appropriations passed by Congress are $175,000 for post office and court house buildings.

It is understood the President is opposed to the early adjournment of Congress. He wants San Domingo settled.

Among the bills which passed the Senate, but failed in the House, is one relieving some six thousand Southerners of political disabilities.

Congress appropriated about $160,000,000.

Over $4,000,000 subscribed to the national loan has already been reported.

FOREIGN.

PARIS, March 1.—At ten o'clock A. M. the eleventh Prussian corps, numbering thirty thousand, with ninety-six pieces of field artillery and the usual proportion of cavalry, advanced in two columns, one at Porte Neuilly and the other at Pont du Jour. The former advanced at a pretty rapid pace up the avenue of the Grand Armee, direct for Arc de Triomphe, the French troops vacating the streets as the Germans approached. The other column entered at Pont du Jour, below Auteuille and Commencid, to march along the quay on the north side of the Seine direct for Place de la Concorde, where the rendezvous of the two columns is fixed. The zone surrendered to the Germans was almost free of French. It commences at the extreme southwest corner of the enceinte, which forms a point and runs in the shape of an irregular triangle, of which the Seine forms the east side, the enceinte from Porte du Jour to Porte des Ternes the west side, and Faubourg Honore and Avenue des Ternes, from Neu Rogale to the enciente, the north side or base. The only points within these limits retained by the French are the baking establishment of the army of Paris, Quai de Billy and Pont du Jena.

As the troops proceeded along the line the artillery took positions from Porte de Neuilly to the Place de la Concorde, from Pont du Jour to the same point, as a precautionary measure. Nothing could exceed the splendid appearance of the troops, who turned out in as perfect order as if on parade ground at home. The chief thoroughfares were quiet and few persons were about from six to nine A. M. The shops were closed, windows shut, and the aspect of the city deserted. The Nationales are posted as piquets on every avenue, with lines of sentries across the streets to prevent persons going beyond the line of demarkation.

From ten to twelve o'clock the same aspect was presented, with mere people in the streets—small crowds and with mere Nationales on duty. At the corners of Rues Royale, Riveli and Place de la Concorde are double lines of wagons, cutting off communication. Most of the women out were in mourning and were going to mass. On Champs Elysees hardly a person was seen. All the houses were closed except three or four small cafes. No one was seen at the windows, and only a few Italian, American and English flags were flying, and one single French flag hung over the Corps Legislatif.

At nine A. M. the head of the Prussian advance was seen rounding the Arc de Triomphe, to the surprise of the few who were present. Both men and women were seen hurrying away in tears, and only boys and a few workmen were left. The German hussars galloped down every avenue leading to the Champs Elysees, to search the streets branching therefrom. Not the slightest attempt at disturbance occurred.

About four thousand infantry and cavalry only were in the advance. There was no music, but the drum was beat and the trumpet sounded.

A splendid body of men halted opposite the Palais d'Industrie, which was at once occupied by hussars.

A few uhlans ride down the Place de la Concorde, where they view with derision the faces of the statues covered with crape.

The Germans are astonished at the mournful aspect of the city and the desertion of its streets.

BORDEAUX, March 1.—The Assembly voted for ratification of the preliminaries of peace—546 to 107.

LONDON, March 1.—In the House of Commons this evening the bill authorizing the burial of dissenters in the parish church yards without the burial service of the church was carried to a second reading by sixty-two majority, after a sharp struggle.

LONDON, March 1.—The following correspondence has passed between the Emperor of Germany and the Czar of Russia. The Emperor in his letter to be Czar, after stating the terms upon which peace has been concluded, says:

"We have arrived at the end of a glorious and bloody war, which was precipitated by the frivolity of the French. Prussia remembers that you prevented the spread. God bless you."

The Czar replied that he shared the joy felt by his illustrious brother, and hoped for a durable peace. He had proved a devoted friend. The happiness and glory of Russia and Prussia is now insured.

HAVANA, March 1.—A letter received here states that a battle was fought on the sixteenth, between six hundred insurgents under Martino Gomez and four hundred Spaniards, near Mozari. The Spaniards fought with great bravery, but their ammunition becoming exhausted they were obliged to retire. The loss was heavy on both sides. The Spaniards had one hundred and sixty men killed. The loss of the insurgents is not known.

An entrenched tower of observation, nine miles from Puerto Principe, was attacked by four hundred insurgents under Bembeta and Jose Mendoza. The tower was defended by only twenty-five men; the attack was kept up two hours, and the insurgents failed to take it. The Spanish loss was three killed and twelve wounded.

The insurgents destroyed the plantation of San Jose, twenty-five miles from Santiago, on the fifteenth ultimo. Five negroes were killed and the buildings burned. The same day the insurgents destroyed the cane fields of the plantation La Perseverncia.

VERSAILLES, March 1.—The Herald correspondent, just returned from Paris, gives the following account of the Emperor's review of the German troops at Longchamps:

At exactly 10.30 the Emperor drove up to the background stand in an open carriage, attended by dragoons and great officers, his household alighting at the steps of the grand entrance. He took his horse and cantered across the field toward the general staff, which followed along the line. As the Emperor appeared the band played "Heil Der," and all the troops saluted him. The Emperor looked exceedingly well and rode dashing by, despite his lingering indisposition. As he rode down in front of the line the flags were drooped and the men gave three ringing cheers. The Emperor kept his hand on his helmet and smiled upon the soldiers. Passing Bismarck he waved his hand in a friendly manner. Twice having passed up and down the lines, the Emperor galloped across the field to a point two hundred yards to the right of the grand stand, facing the troops, where he took up a position in front of the Crown Prince. Sitting erect on his charger, and surveying the troops for a moment with deep emotion, the order was given to march. The bands struck up, and with a splendid step thirty thousand men marched past in so perfect a manner that each battery presented a profile as only one gun.

PARIS, March 2.—The troops in some cases, on entering the city, were mobbed and narrowly escaped injury. Some persons near the Arc de Triomphe congratulated themselves on the difficulty experienced by the Prussian cavalry in getting over the heaps of sand and stones. They pointed to the Arc and said: "Wait till we enter Berlin." The Germans took no notice of the insults.

At fifteen minutes after one o'clock the head of the German troops had advanced up the Grand avenue. After the dragoons came Bismarck, Dukes Saxe-Coburg and Wurtemburg, King Leopold of Bavaria, General Adolbert and Prince Charles of Prussia. When the procession of infantry passed under the Arc de Triomphe they were received with whistling, screams and derisive shouts. A squadron of hussars came next.

Bismarck did not enter the Arc Triomphe, but turned around and rode back to Neuilly.

The grandest part of the military spectacle was the march along Champs Elysees with bayonets and helmets glittering in the sun, flags, torn by battle, fluttering in the breeze. A crowd of men and boys blockading the way were dispersed by the uhlans. The uhlans and Bavarians are especially hated. The troops looked splendid and surprised the French, who owned that they could not beat them.

VERSAILLES, March 2.—The preliminaries of peace arranged by Bismarck and the other plenipotentiaries with Thiers and Favre are as follows:

Article first specifies the line of demarkation.

Article second provides that France will pay Germany five milliards francs; one milliard at least in 1871, and all the rest in the space of three years from the ratification.

Article third provides that the evacuation is to commence on the ratification of the treaty by the Assembly. The German troops will then immediately quit Paris and the left bank of the Seine, and the departments of Cher, Indre, Loire and Seine Inferieure. The French will remain behind the Loire till the signing of the definitive peace, except those in Paris, where the government is not to have exceeding forty thousand troops.

The Germans will evacuate the right bank of the Seine [illegible] after the signing of [illegible] gradually treaty and [illegible] the definitive mil[illegible] the payment of half a [illegible]ard francs. After the payment of two milliards the Germans will only hold the departments of Marne, Ardennes, Meuse, Vosges, Meurthe and Belfort. After the payment of three milliards the Germans will only keep five thousand troops in France; but if a sufficient money guarantee be given the Germans will evacuate completely at once. Otherwise three millions will carry interest at five per cent. from the ratification.

Article fourth provides that the German troops make no further requisitions; that the French government will find food for the army in the occupation of the ceded departments; that favorable arrangements will be made with the inhabitants and time given them to move if they please; and that no obstacle will be placed in the way of emigration.

Article sixth provides that the prisoners will be immediately liberated on the ratification of the treaty, and that the French railways will lend their carriages and engines at the same prices as to the French government.

Article seventh provides that the treaty will be definitely signed at Brussels immediately after the ratification.

Article eighth provides that after the ratification the management of all the departments occupied will be handed over to the French officials, subject to the German commanders, and in the interest of the German troops.

Article ninth provides that it be well understood that the Germans have no authority over the departments not occupied by them.

ROME, March 2.—The Bavarian minister here has provisionally assumed the functions of German embassador to the Holy See in place of Count Von Arnim, transferred to Paris.

LISBON, March 2.—A new cabinet has been formed.

LONDON, March 2.—A dispatch from Versailles says the French indemnity is payable in three installments, viz: One million of thalers in 1871, two in 1872 and two in 1873. Interest is only payable on the last installment.

A Paris dispatch of Wednesday night says the Germans occupy all the quarters assigned them, and perfect tranquility prevails.

LONDON, March 2.—The Pall Mall Gazette expresses the belief that the high commission now in session at Washington, avoiding all difficulties to the distribution of the Alabama claims, will agree to pay a round sum of money, leaving the division of the same to the United States.

LONDON, March 3.—A dispatch to the Times, from Versailles, states that the Germans evacuate Paris today. Prince Frederick Charles retires immediately behind the Seine. The Emperor and Crown Prince leave in a few days for some point on the right bank of the Seine.

LONDON, March 3.—The ministerial motion for a select committee to inquire into affairs in Ireland passed the House of Commons by eighty-one majority.

BORDEAUX, March 3.—A dispatch from Paris, evening of the second, says: A ratification of the treaty of peace was exchanged to-day, and Favre has returned from Versailles.

LATER.—Paris is tranquil; the Prussians evacuate the city to-morrow.

BORDEAUX, March 3.—The government has ordered the immediate return of the mobilized National Guards to their homes.

BERLIN, March 3.—The Empress has received the following dispatch:

VERSAILLES, March 3.—I have just ratified the conditions of peace, which the Bordeaux Assembly has accepted. Thus far the work is completed which was, through seven months of battle, to be achieved.

Thanks to the fervor, devotion, endurance of our incomparable army, and the sacrifices of the Fatherland. The Lord of hosts has everywhere visibly blessed our enterprise and by his mercy has permitted an honorable peace. To him be the honor—to the Fatherland thanks.

WILHELM.

BORDEAUX, March 3.—Rochefort, Blanc, Mallon and Tridon have resigned their seats in the Assembly. Pyatt refused to resign, but declared he would never enter the Assembly until the cession of French territory was rescinded.

VERSAILLES, March 6.—Numerous conversations held at Bordeaux and Versailles with deputies to the National Assembly, including Grevy, Favre, compel the belief that a civil war will soon occur, ending in the restoration of Orleans.

Extensive emigration from the ceded territory will occur. Large bodies will come to America.

DRESDEN, March 6.—The Journal says all the French officers and all the privates of the Mobile Guard, prisoners in Germany, may return to their homes on Monday, if they so desire, at their own cost. Soldiers of the line and the Imperial Guard will remain until arrangements for their transportation are completed.

LONDON, March 6.—At a review of the Prussian guards at Longchamps the Emperor addressed the troops. He thanked them for the heroism, endurance and devotion they had displayed, and adding they must thank Providence for choosing them as the instruments to bring to pass events of such magnitude and renown.

ROME, March 7.—The Pope has held a secret consistory, in which he delivered an allocution of considerable length. The holy father, in his address to the cardinals, attacks the motives and acts of the recent Italian events, particularly the occupation of Rome, and rejects the guarantees of his spiritual power proposed by the bill which recently passed the Italian parliament. He also laments the occurrence of the Franco-Prussian war, and expresses his gratitude for the devotion to himself and the church of the Catholic world.

VERSAILLES, March 7.—The news from Paris confirms the rumors that the inhabitants are growing suspicious, and are acting on the belief that every man's hand is against them. Foreigners are generally looked upon as spies, and in many instances Americans and Englishmen have been insulted and roughly handled in the streets, several barely escaping with their lives. The mob in Paris at present is almost wild with excitement, and the authorities appear powerless to prevent the spread of the threatened revolutionary spirit.

The mob is found by the government to be in possession of a large quantity of arms and ammunition.

THE CHINA MISSION.

This ought to be an interesting subject to the Methodists in the Mississippi Conference. One of the members of the Conference is in China as our missionary. When he was first read out for that field, in 1853, the Conference pledged to sustain him—support him in that work. But we have not done so by—considerable.

Allow me to appeal to you again in his behalf.

1. To the Sunday school superintendents and Sunday schools. You have, I trust, seen the resolution of Conference requesting the superintendents of all our Sunday schools to take collections to aid him more especially in his effort to keep up a home for orphans, and to educate them and have them under his own control. If you have not yet done this I hope you will immediately, for the case is an urgent one. Have you read Bro. Allen's letter to Bro. Foster? If so, you have seen how much they now need help. Then to work! and let me hear from you soon.

2. To the preachers and private members of the church. Bro. Lambuth informs me, in a letter of January 12, that Bro. Allen had taken the government school again, and that he would have to seek for employment somewhere so as to make a support, as they had not heard from the board for eight or nine months past.

Now, brethren, this is an appeal which ought to be heeded. This brother and his family are far away from us and their native land. They are missionaries at heart, and have been so in practice, so far as their circumstances would allow—as they have been supported. Part time Bro. Lambuth has [illegible] of the and act as inte[illegible]nad to teach eipal ad[illegible]reter for the munimonity to make a support.

Cannot every minister in the Mississippi Conference send me, from his charge, at least ten cents for every member in his charge, by the first of April, as a special collection for Bro. Lambuth? I believe you can if you try. I shall hope to hear from every one of you soon.

Send by post office money order when you can, or by registered letter, to Canton, Mississippi.

H. H. MONTGOMERY.

P. S.—Will not the brethren of the North Mississippi Conference, who have in other years been helping in this work, respond to this call? I hope they will.

H. H. M.

F. W. PERKINS KILLED.—On Tuesday morning F. W. Perkins, proprietor of the Alliance line of Havana and Florida steamships, was found dead in his office, at No. 26 Carondelet street. Over his right ear and above the temple was a pistol shot wound, which had evidently occasioned immediate death; if, indeed, the fearful beating he had received over the head had not previously produced insensibility. The back part of his head had been beaten to a pulp. The skull was fractured in twenty places, as if he had been stricken down by some heavy instrument and pounded until life was extinct. It is probable that the pistol shot was fired afterward by the assassins to make sure the butchery was complete.

Mr. Perkins left his office last night at the usual hour and went to his residence at the corner of Annunciation and Sixth streets, but probably forgetting some papers or other valuables, he returned to his office at a late hour of the night. This is the supposition of his friends. He was doubtless followed back by his assailant and murdered as related.—Picayune, March 8.

The Christian Advocate.

THURSDAY, MARCH 9, 1871.

For the Advocate.

ALICE CARY.

Let one most loving of you all,
Say: "Not a tear above her fall
He giveth His beloved sleep!"

The sun-tints flashed a livelier flame
Through dew-drops brightened by her tread,
The waves went by with mellowed sound,
And sorrow looked up, comforted.

Soft childhood held her gentle robes,
And youth her happy garlands wove,
And age upon its tottering staff
Forgot its weariness for love.

The music of the silenced strains
Is hushed for us through earthly hours;
But echo sings them far away
Through memory's fairy-haunted bowers.

There breezes make more soothing sound,
There birds sing with more touching strain,
And holier fancies where she sings
Come through the rustling of the rain.

Gone! But her loving hand has swept
Soft music from our heart's sad string,
When love had grown to weary days,
And life had lost the flours of spring.

Gone! But we feel that far beyond
The sky that night with radiance fills,
Beyond the moon's white light that streams
So saintly on the distant hills—

There is a spirit pure and fair,
Awakened to a sinless birth,
Singing in groves of Paradise
The dearest notes she sang on earth.

Forever free from tears of grief,
The Voice resistless called her home—
My faithful servant—"Enter in;
Into thy Saviour's kingdom come."

TRANSFERS.

Mr. Editor: Perhaps no action taken at the recent session of the Louisiana Conference was more important—certainly none was more opportune—than that in reference to transfers. Resolutions were unanimously adopted welcoming them to said Conference. The action was not taken from any mere sense of courtesy; it was the expression of an earnest feeling, which much consideration of the subject, during the session of the Conference, had awakened in the minds and hearts of the brethren present; it was, indeed, a wholesome reaction from a contrary feeling that, unfortunately, has infected most of our Conferences for some time. It cannot be denied that transfers have come to be a tabooed class in our ministry; and, strange to say, all the more so if they are men of shining ability and distinction. This prejudice, which has attained unto such grave proportions in our connection as to have added no little to the burden of these chief shepherds among us who have "the care of all the churches," has evidently from misconceptions of the [illegible] plausible but aided, in part, by [illegible] of com- essentially selfish causes [illegible] plaint here and there. If the territory of a Conference, including its stations and circuits, is a sort of estate which belongs to the members of the Conference, upon which they are dependent for their sustenance; if the several appointments of a Conference are so many sources of revenue organized for the support of the preachers belonging thereto, then, unquestionably, it amounts to the character of an outrage upon a Conference for a Bishop to transfer a preacher from elsewhere to one of their appointments, especially if that appointment be one of the most desirable within the bounds of their monopoly. In such case the casus belli is clear—transfers are invaders, and should be treated a la porcupine. But is this view of the relation of the appointments of a Conference to the members thereof, according to the genius and mission of Methodism? "Tell it not in Gath, * * * lest the daughters of the Philistines rejoice." Grander and sublimer, for strictly apostolic is the mission of Methodism. It is not to provide emoluments for her officiates, but to preach the gospel to a "world that lieth in wickedness." Her field of operations includes "the regions beyond" as well as the regions at home—"the uttermost parts of the earth" no less than the territory bounded by Conference lines. John Wesley spoke for Methodism when he said: "The world is my parish." So far as any title is concerned, however, the whole is Immanuel's land; and the relation of the preacher thereto is simply that of a laborer to his master's vineyard; it is not for him to choose what part of the field he shall cultivate—that is the prerogative of our Lord Jesus Christ, a prerogative which he commissions those denominated "governments" in the church militant to execute. With us said "governments," as distinct from "helps," are called Bishops; and hence from these it is the preacher's solemn duty to accept work wherever they may appoint him within the area of their churchly supervision. Having committed to them the charge of so many laborers within a given extent of Immanuel's territory, it is for them to send said laborers whither they will, moving them from Dan to Beersheba, according to their godly discretion. This is Methodism; her sublime history is in irrefutable attestation of it; her "noble army of martyrs," her grandly heroic leaders, her unexampled successes in pioneer evangelism, are in eloquent witness of the same. It is by the free exercise of this episcopal prerogative that the law of adaptation, as between preachers and people, is carried out more perfectly in the Methodist Church than in any other ecclesiastical organization in Christendom.

Therefore the preacher who suffers himself to covet, to negotiate for, and play the diplomate to secure a particular appointment, in his own or any other Conference, is a sorry specimen of Methodism; it is sheer mockery for such a man to rank himself among that itinerant host who have given such distinctive character to Methodism. And miserable Methodist is he, indeed, who keeps a jealous eye upon a given range of territory, for convenience marked off as Conference limits, and sets himself to rallying the weak and discontented brethren into a state of frowning prejudice against transfers, with pent-up-Utica watch-cries such as Know Nothingism once evoked: "America for the Americans!" "Louisiana for the Louisianians!" Imagine what an effect it would have had on church history if, instead of calling upon the preachers in Asia, "Come over and help us!" they of Macedonia shouted: "Macedonia for the Macedonians!"

Surely our church must rid itself of this imp of Know Nothingism—let it be hunted out of all our Conferences; and let an esprit de corps worthy of historic Methodism—broad-minded, cosmopolitan, truly chivalrous—reassert itself everywhere among our ministry. One excellent way to secure this desideratum is for the Bishops to use their transfer power rather freely for a while, just enough to rid our preachers of the delusion that they belong [illegible] Conference in particular to any [illegible] church in general rather than to the [illegible] connexion at large. It is a shameful [illegible] from the spirit of Methodism and primitive Christianity when preachers can suffer themselves to regard transfers as any the less entitled to appointments within their Conference lines because hailing from distant Conferences.

Let other Conferences follow the example of Louisiana, and bid the transfers welcome with real heartiness. By all means let transfers have just the appointment for which they are best adapted; make them to feel that wherever they hail from, to whatsoever appointment assigned, they are brethren beloved; and if they are men of commanding talent let us be proud of them, and rejoice in their successes and honor them with high places of trust, according to their personal merits, and not according to their Conference chronology.

Bible Promises.—The promises of the Bible are not made to one act, but to the continued habit of prayer. It evidences more depravity not to repent of a sin than it does to commit it at first. A good man may be hurried away by temptation to commit a sin, but he will invariably repent of it afterward. To do as Peter did, is bad; but not to weep bitterly, as he did, what mark of a denied is worse. So continues to true convert is the after he hopes repent of his ordained. The true that they are to be saved from Christian's hatred of sin and resin; and for it increases in proportions his assurance of heaven increases.

The Bible and Service of Song in Spain.

A correspondent thus writes from Madrid to the London Christian World:

"Upon the very spot where lie the remains of thirty-six thousand of our fellow-creatures who suffered martyrdom during the time of the Spanish Inquisition, and which has lately been excavated, stands a man of faith with the Bible in his hand, and offers one of the gospels of the New Testament for a half-penny. In a few hours hundreds are bought, and all the half-pence are laid out in bread and meat for the poor Spaniards.

"Your readers will be also glad to know that a large distribution of the word has been effected at the fair of San Isidro, near Madrid, where a very large number of Bibles, Testaments and portions have been sold during its eleven days' duration.

"The general sale and distribution of portions of the Scripture printed in Madrid for the Committee of the Bible stand, in the Crystal Palace, amounts now to considerably more than a million, two hundred thousand of which have already been placed in the hands of different people.

"From another writer it appears that much good is being done by a gentleman who is gaining entrance for the words of Jesus by means of the 'service of song.' He establishes classes, says this writer, to teach the children to sing wherever he finds an open door, and God prospering, the songs of Zion will soon take hold of the people's hearts, as they are already sung by hundreds of young voices. Our devoted friend is not unmindful in all of the important part that music and song had in the reformation of Germany, under the inspiration of one so gifted in poetry and psalmody as Luther. In the mission house, among the poor, he has his Sunday school each Sunday morning, his singing class in the evening, and his religious service following. Two days in the week are also devoted to a singing class, and one evening to religious service. What the children learn in the school they carry to their homes, and the result is a good attendance at the public services of parents interested in what their boys and girls have gathered in the school. Yet more remarkable is his entry into an asylum of orphans, or otherwise destitute girls, founded by a warm-hearted man, and sustained by himself and a number of ladies, all devotedly Catholic. Introduced one day to the school, he was pained by the character of the singing on the ten mortal sins, etc. His offer to teach them better how to sing the praises of God was accepted, and every afternoon he goes to his class of affectionate girls, who already sing in happy harmonies of their tender Saviour and his boundless love."

SCHOOL OR JAIL.

Which shall it be? It took many ages of Christian civilization to decide in favor of schools for the poor and outcast. The first step in the right direction was the formation of Sunday schools, where street children were taught the simplest elements of education; and after a time—especially in Germany and the United States—the necessity of national enlightenment came to be generally acknowledged. The events [illegible] present struggle in Europe [illegible] of the [illegible] proof of this, and it is are a striking [illegible] taught that the no longer possible to [illegible] the ignorance of the people means the waste of the national strength. "We cannot declare it too loudly," says the eminent Frenchman, writing of the war, "that it is ignorance that has ruined France—ignorance in diplomacy, which, knowing neither the history, nor the language, nor the tendencies of Germany, deceived the Emperor as to the attitude likely to be assumed in the different States; ignorance in the generals, who had never studied either the organization of the Prussians, or their tactics, or their progress, or the lessons of the campaign of 1866, or the quality of their leaders; ignorance in the officers, who, accustomed to fight against Arabs, have been constantly surprised, confounded, bewildered, in their own country; ignorance in the soldiers, who, considering the German as a brute to be driven with the butt ends of their muskets, lost all their self-possession when confronted with men as brave as themselves, more familiar with the grounds than their own, and with skill enough to fly use of an inferior weapon; ignorance without bound or limit in a press which cried 'a Berlin,' as if it were a mere question of a military promenade."

In England public attention is now strongly directed to the question of compulsory national education, as the only means of saving the mass of the poor from sinking into utter degradation; but the system there is yet far behind those of Prussia and the United States. Even in this country much remains to be done in this direction.

PULPIT ILLUSTRATIONS.

The Rev. Elon Foster's New Cyclopedia of Illustrations is handsome in external appearance, entertaining and useful in quality. It is made primarily to be a pulpit help for preachers. It will also be a treasure in the family. Children are fond of stories and anecdotes, and are much in the habit of asking for them. In this book they will find more than six thousand anecdotes, proverbs, etc., pure and wholesome, all pointed to illustrate some moral or religious truth. In adapting his work for its primary purpose, as a pulpit aid, the compiler has sought, he says, "to furnish a treasury of illustrations so complete that the preacher or teacher need not look in vain for some apt analogy, fable, simile, proverb or anecdote with which to make clear or impress any subject he may wish to discuss." Over five hundred authors have been consulted, and nearly every legitimate branch of literature has been brought into service. The work is arranged alphabetically according to the subjects illustrated. The subdivisions of the subjects are also arranged alphabetically. Every anecdote is numbered. By these means the highest convenience in arrangement is secured.

Under the head "Spiritual Blindness" we find this from St. Augustine: "St. Augustine relates of a certain heathen, who showed him his idol gods, saying: 'Here is my god; where is thine?' Then pointing up at the sun, he said: 'Lo! here is my god; where is thine?' So, showing him divers creatures, still upbraided him with: 'Here are my gods; where are thine?' But St. Augustine said: 'I showed him not my God—not because I had not one to show him, but because he had not eyes to see him.'"

Among the anecdotes on controversy is this on "the test:" "A cobbler at Leyden, who used to attend the public disputations held at the academy, was once asked if he understood Latin. 'No,' replied the mechanic; 'but I know who is wrong in the argument.' 'How?' replied his friend. 'Why, by seeing who is angry first.'"

On Mr. Wesley's readiness for death: "A lady once asked Mr. Wesley: 'Supposing that you knew you were to die at twelve o'clock tomorrow night, how would you spend the intervening time?' 'How, madam?' he replied; 'why, just as I intend to spend it now. I should preach this evening at Gloucester, and again at five to-morrow morning; after that I should ride to Tewkesbury, preach in the afternoon, and meet the societies in the evening. I should then repair to friend Martin's house, who expects to entertain me; converse and pray with the family as usual; retire to my room at ten o'clock; commend myself to my heavenly Father; lie down to rest, and wake up in glory.'"

A story of a "Poem on Perseverance" is accredited to the Rev. Cyrus D. Foss: "I have heard of an Indian who one day came to a missionary, and told him he had been making some poetry which he wished to show him. It was found to be in several verses in very 'common meter,' and all exactly like the first verse, which ran as follows:

"'Go on, go on, go on, go on,
Go on, go on, go on,
Go on, go on, go on, go on,
Go on, go on, go on.'

"The Indian's poem is a grand motto for all Christian workers."

We might take the Indian's advice, and "go on, go on" with the illustrations, almost without end, but we transfer and commend the exercise to our readers.—Methodist.

"The sting of death is sin," writes the apostle, and what a solemn truth does he here assert. For without sin death would have little, if any, power. The alienation of our hearts from God alone causes us to look on death with doubt and dread. Thus the kingdom of death is a lesser kingdom, and exists under the protection of sin. I see death go down the world as king of terrors, with all his dark retinue of doubts and fears, and it is sin which lends him this retinue. It is sin which supplies him with the black pageantry of his grim state, which chills and awes the heart of man. It is sin which sends before him that sounding trump of doom, which most of all things men dread to hear. It was sin which first made him king of terrors, which placed the crown upon his head, and put the scepter in his hand. For death has no strength or power in himself alone, but derives all from his dread ally. And as death has derived his strength from sin in the past, so in the future will he share his weakness. For when sin is overthrown death will fall with it—fall to rise no more.

Make the Lord's day the market for thy soul; let the whole day be spent in prayer, repetitions or meditations; lay aside the affairs of the other parts of the week; let the sermon thou hast heard be converted into prayer; shall God allow thee six days, and wilt thou not afford him one?

THE REPRIEVE.

I had long wished to be the bearer of life to some condemned cell. My wish was granted me. It was on a Tuesday that a poor senteneed criminal was to be hanged. He was within one day of the fatal drop. But on the Monday, all unexpectedly, I was summoned to take him his life! I had obtained a reprieve for that man—a paper signed by our Queen, giving him back his forfeited life. This, as I have said, is what I had long wished for. So wonderful a privilege was it to be in a position to give life!

My first thought was, Where is the train that can bear me swift enough to the cell? I dreamt not of delay. Delay appeared cruel; until, at the very threshold of the prison, I bethought me thus—How can I tell him? The news will kill him. The man will die if I tell him, so great will be the revulsion. He has died, so to speak. He is dead in the law. And he is already in the bitterness of death. So, with life in my hand, I stand before the victim in his cell. His face is wan; his knees feeble. His vacant eyes have no tears, but are red, and look as if, with dry, hot grief, they had burned down into their sockets. Melancholy picture! She who owned him as her husband had just been carried out from the last separation—still, and seemingly a corpse, unconscious of the strange, last kiss which a murderer had impressed on her lips. The expectant orphans, after their wretched farewell, were crying over the yet motionless form of their mother.

"My poor man, can you read?"

"Yes," was the reply.

But fearing to break the royal pardon to him too suddenly, I added:

"Would you like your life?"

"Sir," he responds, "do not trifle with me."

"But life is sweet—is it not?"

"Sir, I rather you would not speak to me."

"But would you not like me to procure your life?"

"It is of no use, sir; I'm justly condemned. I'm a dead man."

"But the Queen could give you your life."

He looks inquiringly at me, but is silent.

"Can you read this?"

And now those hot eyes are directed down upon the paper. As he intently reads, putting my arms around his shoulders, I say:

"There, my poor fellow; there is your life!"

No sooner had I uttered the words than, as I expected, he dropped down at my feet. There he lay, as it were, dead! It was more than he could bear

What! when a man to whom a reprieve is announced, granting him a few more short years of natural life, falls down as dead, may not a sinner, who finds he is not to be lost, but that on believing he is saved—he has Christ, and heaven, and everlasting life—I say, may not he weep? Yea, cry? Cry for joy!—J. Denham Smith.

A Good Test.—A few years ago, as Rev. Prof. Finney was holding a series of meetings in the city of Edinburg, many persons called upon him for personal conversation and prayer.

One day a gentleman appeared in great distress of mind. He had listened to Mr. Finney's sermon on the previous evening, and it had torn away his "refuge of lies." Mr. Finney was plain and faithful with him, pointing out to him the way of life clearly, and his only hope of salvation. The weeping man assured him that he was willing to give up all for Jesus—that he knew of nothing he would reserve—all for Jesus.

"Then let us go upon our knees and tell God of that," said Mr. Finney. So both knelt at the altar, and Mr. Finney prayed: "O Lord! this man declares that he is prepared to take thee as his God, and to cast himself upon thy care, now and forever."

The man responded "amen!" heartily.

Mr. Finney continued: "O Lord! this man vows that he is ready to give his wife, family and all their interests up to thee."

Another hearty "amen!" from the man.

He went on: "O Lord! he says that he is also willing to give thee his business, whatever it may be, and conduct it for thy glory."

The man was silent—no response. Mr. Finney was surprised at his silence, and asked: "Why do you not say 'amen' to this?"

"Because the Lord will not take my business, sir; I am in the spirit trade," he answered.

The traffic could not withstand such a test as that. "The Lord will not take" such a business under his care. He demands its destruction as one of the mightiest obstacles to the progress of his kingdom in the earth.—American Messenger.

The first Protestant service in Madrid was attended by not more than fifteen persons. There are now two congregations that number one thousand each.

ABOUT SUNSHINE.

"I wish God had never permitted man to invent green blinds," said a gay and brilliant woman.

Why did she say it?

Because she saw, wherever she went over our fair and sunshiny land, that green blinds were closely shut upon our comfortable houses, excluding the sun's light, which we may be sure God sends down for some blessed purpose. That blessed purpose is to promote growth, to give strength, to impart color, to gild with beauty, to inspire good thoughts and to insure light hearts and cheerful faces.

It is thoroughly well known that no valuable plant can grow well without being visited by the direct rays of the sun; no plant can bear seed, no fruit can ripen, without it. It is thoroughly well known that no valuable animal can grow and perfect itself except it enjoys the direct rays of the life giving sun. The pigs of a friend of mine, which were shut under his barn, and who had everything favorable except sunlight, failed to grow well; they did not at all equal those which had the ordinary run in the open air. So it is, as we all know, with city-grown children; they are pale weaklings the world over.

The fish of the Mammoth Cave are white; their eyes are not opened, because they have never felt the glorious light; they are weak and imperfect, a kind of idiots, if fish are liable to that wretchedness.

Now, then, can man, can woman thrive if debarred this life-giving light? Can our lovely Americans afford to shut out this light from their houses, and grow idiotic in the dark? Are not green blinds a curse rather than a comfort? We appeal to our fine women, who wish to be strong, who wish to be beautiful, who abhor "low spirits," to consider this matter.

Recent discoveries have shown there is conveyed to animals, by the direct action of the sun's rays, a subtle current of iron. It does not exist in light, or but very slightly, if at all, but it is a part of the sun's rays. Therefore we must enjoy these rays if we would feel their full effect. This iron it is which is supposed to give color to plants and animals, and to impart strength and beauty. With strength and beauty come health and good spirits, and despondency and fear are banished.

Sleepless people—and they are many in America—should court the sun. The very worst soporific is landanum, and the very best, sunshine. Therefore it is very plain that poor sleepers should pass as many hours in the day in sunshine, and as few as possible in the shade.

Many women are martyrs, and yet do not know it. They shut the sunshine out of their houses and their hearts, they wear veils, they carry parasols, they do all possible to keep off the subtlest, and yet most potent, influence which is intended to give them strength, and beauty, and cheerfulness. Is it not time to change all this, and so get color and roses in our pale cheeks, strength in our weak backs, and courage in our timid souls? The women of America are pale and delicate; they may be blooming and strong, and the sunlight will be a potent influence in this transformation. Will they not try it a year or two, and oblige thousands of admirers?—Hearth and Home.

A Ministerial Snuff-Taker.—The Scotch tell a good story of the late Dr. Duncan, of Edinburg. He was remarkable for absent-mindedness, and being one day engaged to officiate for the reverend minister of Cutler, near Aberdeen, he left the latter place all in good time, mounted on a Shetland pony. Being a great snuff-taker, he frequently had recourse to his "mull," and arriving at a turn in the road, where the wind blew right ahead, he turned his "sheltie" square about, in order to get a pinch more easily. Having indulged, he unfortunately forgot to rein his beast round into the right direction again, and rode calmly back to Aberdeen, only when too late discovering that "circumstances" were having no service that day.

You Said That Afore.—Little folks are keen critics and have good memories. So in speaking to them avoid useless repetitions as well as nonsense and baby-talk. Old Father Bushnell, of Vermont, used to relate a story of a little boy who was one day sitting right at his feet, and looking up into his face while he was standing and preaching in a densely crowded room.

As the old man was going on very earnestly he happened to repeat some remark he had previously uttered, when the little fellow spoke out:

"You said that afore!"

Mr. Bushnell used to say that was the best criticism he ever received on his preaching in his life.

He presents a wretched specimen of religion who labors more to convert Christian men to his own sectarian views than sinners to Christ.

HOMEWARD.

BY LOIS BROOKE.

A gallop through the mountain way,
With click, click, click against the flint—
Hard following on the flying day,
That backward flings a fiery tint.

The twilight pines stand dense and grim,
And sigh and sigh, "The day is dead;"
The virgin birches, tall and slim,
Wave shadowy arms across the red.

In brooding peace the uplands lie,
Stretched dimly in their evening rest;
As through their lifted calm I fly,
On, onward, to the happy West.

Oh West, heart red, burn close before!
Pale, dreamy East, float far behind!
No pause, good steed—a few miles more;
In yonder glow our rest we'll find.

Urgent, we reach the downward tilt,
The village darkens far below—
Has aught befallen her of ill?
My eager heart leaps down to know.

A swift descent along the ridge,
Through shady glooms and breaks of light;
A cheery clatter on the bridge,
Then up the street where falls the night.

Across the dark a hearth-fire's gleam,
A graceful shadow on the wall;
'Twas false, thank God, that last night's dream,
That something evil did befall.

From out the door a ruddier shine
Meets vanished daylight's golden trace;
And starry eyes turned up to mine—
One light in heaven and home and face!

Personal Religion in Relation to Business Life.

The ambition of many fathers to save their children the ten thousand cares and difficulties of the business world by endowing them at one-and-twenty with a competency is affectionately cruel, and invariably results in demoralization and idleness. The old Jewish custom of giving every man a trade of some kind or other is in every way wiser and better.

I hold it that every man has a calling to some work or other—a divine calling which is the voice of power, partly conscious and partly latent. By obeying this call a man is to minister to the body politic in matters physical, social or intellectual, and by this ministry his own physical, social and intellectual needs are to be met. Every Christian man has two callings, which are, however, really one. He has the lower calling, to which we have referred, and he has a high calling of God in Christ Jesus, in virtue of which he is to take part in the ministry of goodness. But these twain are one. The high calling does not alter the form of the lower; it only gives it a new spirit. If a man is called to make boots, when he becomes a Christian Christianity does not say to him: You must give up boot-making. No, it simply says: You must now make the very best boots possible, and it is at your peril to make bad boots. This calling of yours is capable of great elevation. If you bring to your work a spirit consecrated to the right, you will not simply minister to the bodily comfort of your customers, but you will touch them morally and spiritually. The supernatural light in you, which is the power that fits you for your high calling, will find a thousand chinks in your every-day life and toil through which to illume and bless men. There is no difference in form between the man who breaks stone on the high road and the geologist who also breaks stones; but really the two men are as wide apart as the poles. What makes the difference? Simply the higher spirit and nobler purpose that the geologist brings to his work. Now the spirit of Christ within a man is to exalt the work and business of life into worship: "Whatsoever ye do, whether ye eat or drink, do all to the glory of God."

All the wrong and confusion of the business world arises from the cruel divorce between religion and business. Worldly men say: "Business is business." That formula is supposed to be a kind of sufficient reason for any cruel pressure or unscrupulous dealing that circumstances may seem to require. Not a few professedly good men have given in their assent and consent to that formula. There is a kind of unwritten business code which differs from that which should regulate the private life. Many justify themselves in adopting this code when they pass to the shop and the warehouse by saying, rather loudly to themselves, that it is utterly impossible to embody the high morality that is preached to us in our every-day life if we are to succeed. It is just there that the mistake is made. Men suppose that their first duty is to succeed, and their second duty is to be right if they can. The first duty of the disciple of Christ is to do right, and he is to take for granted that he will succeed. What if the world calls it failure? It may be notwithstanding, a sublime success. Our Lord failed, as the world would say, and yet his is the sublimest success. There are many who do not fully believe in mammon, and yet because they expect something from both they try to serve both. It is an impossible task. And if it were possible it would not be profitable. The Spirit of Christ ought to underlie the whole life. The business life ought to be instinct with the religious life, and unconsciously we ought to be doing right and seeking righteousness. The true artist unconsciously embodies the principles of art in his work, and because he unconsciously embodies them he paints truly. And it is only as we thus embody the principles of truth in our life will work be truly done in the business world and in all other places. One cannot imagine anything more beautiful than a business world permeated with the light of truth and righteousness.

That the business world to-day is no better than it should be admits of no manner of doubt. Those who know it best have the saddest tales to tell respecting it. Thank God there are multitudes of honorable men in the business world, and they are its salvation. But, notwithstanding, many of the revelations which the last few years have brought to light have been anything but consoling and assuring. The enormous extent to which the puffing system has grown implies a vast system of adulteration and rognery. The bitter disputes which arise between masters and men—the grasping of the one and the grasping of the other—are deeply saddening. The presence among us of fraudulent speculators, and the cry for cheapness, are not comforting symptoms. The use, the only use, which the business world is being put to by multitudes—a place to get rich in by any means, if you can—is fraught with mischief.

In the presence of all this we ought to look one or two facts in the face. In proportion as the business world is being ruled on the principle, "every man for himself," it is being hurried to destruction. A society held together by the principle of selfish men is rotten. We are told every day, "business is very stagnant." Why is it stagnant? People do not seem to be disposed to invest their money. And why are people not disposed to invest their money? Because public confidence is shaken, and thus we have now and again a chaotic condition of things, and men's hearts failing them, for fear of the things which are coming upon the earth, which is themselves.

The family life cannot be surrounded by a keen, black atmosphere of this kind without being affected by it. The father will bring the contagion home in his own hindered life, and the nation will also suffer. There is this other thought—that here, as elsewhere, we must have martyrs—men who are willing to become poor and to be poor to establish commercial integrity, and lay more widely and deeply the foundations of the kingdom of righteousness in the business world. There were martyrs needed to establish Christian doctrine in the world. The universal establishment of Christian practice is awaiting its martyrs. "I beseech you, therefore, brethren, by the mercies of God, that ye present your bodies a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable unto God, which is your reasonable service."—Rev. H. Simon, London.

THE LAMP WITHOUT OIL.—While spending a week lately in the society of a great number of faithful pastors from the Canton of Vaud, one of them, at a public meeting, related to us the recent conversion of a lady in his parish. She was one of those who lived only for the world; the thought of her sins had never caused her uneasiness; she was careful and troubled about many things, but neglected the one thing needful. One night while alone in the room she saw the lamp which lighted it suddenly go out. Although she was alone, she said aloud—thinking only of the accident which left her in the dark: "There is no oil in my lamp." The words thus spoken echoed in the room, and sounded in her ears, but with a new sense. She recalled the parable of the five foolish virgins who had no oil, and whose lamps had gone out at the coming of the bridegroom; and from that moment, day and night, that word of God remained in her soul as an arrow remains in the side of a stag who flies far away from the hunters. It recurred to her instantly: "No, I have no oil in my lamp! My God, what will become of me! I have not thy grace in my heart!" She was filled with fear; and then she began to pray, and continued in prayer until God answered her favorably, and gave her his peace through the Holy Spirit, and now she is happy and full of zeal. Like Enoch, she walks with God; and we trust that, like him, she will continue to do so to the end.—From the French of L. Gaussen.

CASTELAR, THE SPANISH ORATOR.

BY JOHN HAY.

On the extreme left of the chamber is a young face that bears an unmistakable seal of distinction. It reminds you of Chantrey's bust of the greatest of the sons of men. The same pure oval outline; the arched eyebrows, the piled-up dome of forehead stretching outward from the eyes, until the glossy black hair, seeing the hopelessness of disputing the field, has retired discouraged to the back of the head. This is Emilio Castelar, the inspired tribune of Spain. This people is so given to exaggerated phases of compliment that the highest-colored adjectives have lost their power. They have exhausted their lexicons in speaking of Castelar, but in this instance I would be inclined to say that exaggeration was impossible. It is true that his speech does not move with the powerful convincing momentum of the greatest English and American orators. It is possible that its very brilliancy detracts somewhat from its effect upon a legislative body. When you see a Toledo blade all damaskeened with frondage and flowers and stories of the gods, you are apt to think it less deadly than one glittering in naked blueness from hilt to point. Yet the splendid sword is apt to be of the finest temper. Whatever may be said of his enduring influence upon legislation, it seems to me there can be no difference of opinion in regard to his transcendent oratorical gifts. There is something almost superhuman in his delivery. He is the only man I have ever seen who produces, in very truth, those astonishing effects which I have always thought the inventions of poets and the exaggerations of biography. Robertson, speaking of Pitt's oratory, said: "It was not the torrent of Demosthenes, nor the splendid conflagration of Tully." This ceases to be an unmeaning metaphor when you have heard Castelar. His speech is like a torrent in its inconceivable fluency, like a raging fire in its brilliancy of color and terrible energy of passion. Never for an instant is the wonderful current of declamation checked by the pauses, the hesitations, the deliberations that mark all Anglo-Saxon debate. An entire oration will be delivered with precisely the fluent energy which a veteran actor exhibits in his most passionate scenes; and when you consider that this is not conned beforehand, but is struck off instantly in the very heat and spasm of utterance, it seems little short of inspiration. The most elaborate filing of a fastidious rhetorician could not produce phrases of more exquisite harmony, antitheses more sharp and shining, more neatly fitting, all uttered with a distinct rapidity that makes the despair of stenographers. His memory is prodigious and under perfect discipline. He has the world's history at his tongue's end. No fact is too insignificant to be retained, nor too stale to do service.

His action is also most energetic and impassioned. It would be considered redundant in a Teutonic country. If you do not understand Spanish there is something almost insane in his gesticulation. I remember a French diplomat who came to see him on one of his happiest days, and who, after looking intently at the orator trying to see what he was saying, said at last, in an injured tone: "Mais! c'est un polichinelle, celuila." It had not occurred to me that he had made a gesture. The whole man was talking from his head to his feet.

Finally, as we cannot stay even with Castelar all night, his greatest and highest claim to our admiration and regard is that his enormous talents have been consistently devoted from boyhood to this hour to the cause of political and spiritual freedom. He is now only thirty-two years of age, but he was an orator at sixteen. He harangued the mobs in 1854 with a power and dignity that contrasted grotesquely with his boyish figure and rosy face. During all these eventful years he has not for one moment faltered in his devotion to liberal ideas. In poverty, exile and persecution, as well as amid the intoxicating fumes of flattery and favor, he has kept his faith unsullied. With his great gifts he might command anything from the government as the price of his support. But he preserves his austere independence, living solely upon his literary labor and his modest salary as professor of history in the university.—Atlantic Monthly.

SAYINGS OF DEAN SWIFT.

The following aphoristical extracts from the writings of the original and inimitable wit, Dean Swift, are but specimens of the richness of the gems that may be gathered in that Golconda of literary wealth:

We have just enough of religion to make us hate, not enough to make us love one another.

How is it possible to expect that mankind will take advice, when they will not so much as take warning?

Would a writer know how to behave himself with relation to posterity, let him consider in old books what he finds that he is glad to know, and what omissions he most laments.

Whatever the old poets pictured, it is plain that they gave immortality to none but themselves; it is Homer and Virgil we revere and admire, not Achilles or Æneas. With historians it is quite the contrary; our thoughts are taken up with the actions, persons and events we read, and we little regard the authors.

THE POWER OF SACRED SONG.—A Hungarian nobleman lost a daughter whom he most tenderly loved. The circumstances of her death aggravated his grief, and he became quite inconsolable. Two years passed, and brought no relief. His grief settled down into a fixed and most distressing melancholy, tending to a permanent mental derangement. Every means were tried which wealth or influence could secure, or an earnest friendship devise, but without effect. Lying on his couch, in a room draped with black, from which the light was excluded, he neither smiled nor wept, and joy seemed forever fled from his breast. At that time Mara was the delight of the Prussian court, and of the musical world, for her vocal performances in oratorio and opera. It was proposed that she should sing within hearing of the afflicted father, whose grief had now nearly worn him into the grave. Handel's "Messiah" was chosen for the experiment; and in an adjoining room that sweet and marvelous voice began its almost more than human strains. At first it had no apparent effect on the nobleman. As she proceeded he slowly raised himself from his couch to listen, and the heart that had been dead to emotion began to swell with the rising tide. When she came to the passage, "Look and see if there be any sorrow like to my sorrow," which was rendered with a subdued pathos which brought tears in the eyes of those present, sighs escaped the suffering father, tears flowed from his eyes, and, rising from his couch, he prostrated himself before a crucifix. But when the full choir struck the hallelujah chorus his voice mingled with theirs, and his spirit was free. Henceforth he, too, could "sing of mercy and of judgment," calmly submissive to the hand that had smitten him.—Religious Herald.

FAITH.—As I was passing along one of the streets of New York, a few days ago, I saw a mother and child walking before me. The little one was just holding by its mother's dress, and toddling along without looking at all to see where it was going. It did not seem to care so long as she could keep hold of a little bit of her mother's dress. All sorts of people were passing up and down the crowded streets, but the child was not afraid of any of them. But O, how soon it would have cried if left alone in the great city of New York! Just so when little children come to Jesus, and with faith but "touch the hem of his garment," they can then say with the Psalmist; "I will fear no evil, for thou art with me."—Loving Words.

ROMISH MORALS.—The Westminster Gazette, a Roman Catholic journal, recently made the following acknowledgment: "The neglected children of London are chiefly our children, and the lowest of every class, whether thieves or drunkards, are Catholics, at least in name. We have shirked these facts long enough; it is time that we should face them and not delude ourselves by the appearance of progress."

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

THE revival in Lynchburg, Virginia, has resulted in eighty additions to the Baptist and seventy to the Methodist church.

THE Rev. Thomas Wray, a superannuated member of the Southeastern Indiana Conference, was killed on January 31 by a train which came upon him as he was crossing a railroad track.

THE death of Bishop John Russel, of the United Brethren Church, is announced. He was born in Maryland, March 18, 1799, and was descended from a German family of the Moravian faith.

UNITED BRETHREN.—The Religious Teloscope of February 15 publishes over four columns of revival intelligence, showing over one thousand accessions in various parts of the East, West and Northwest to the Church of the United Brethren in Christ.

ON SUNDAY, January 1, the union between the churches of England and Ireland was dissolved. According to the provisions of the act disestablishing the Church of Ireland, all church property is vested in the commissioners, all ecclesiastical law abolished, and the right of bishops to sit in the House of Lords ceases. On the same day an act took effect to establish a new Divorce and Matrimonial Court in Ireland. The practice is to be analogous to the procedure in England.

THERE is no asylum for the insane in Utah, but the territory is said to abound in lunatics. Religious delusions have many affinities with lunacy, and tend to develop morbid mental activities of various kinds. It is well when lunacies are not malicious. A majority of young Mormons in Utah are said to be free thinkers and anti-polygamists. The Mormon temple in Utah seats eight thousand people, but does not allow those in remote parts of the congregation to hear the speaking. Brigham Young preaches once or twice a month. The Mormon sermons are rambling and discursive. Reading sermons is not allowed among them.

VACANT CHURCHES.—A New Hampshire correspondent of a Boston paper, writing concerning Congregationalism in that State, says: Changes, not all of them for the best, seemingly, are going on among our churches. A dozen or more of those which offer salaries of $1,000 to $1,200 are without pastors, being unable to obtain the right men for that sum; such men as these churches need are unwilling to settle upon a salary that is just able to give them a support. Those who are receiving $1,000 are finding it insufficient to meet current expenses. This fact and the other, that so many of our best and prominent churches are without settled pastors, are perhaps sufficient explanation why there are so few revivals and so little interest in spiritual things.

SOUTH AMERICA.—Our mission in South America, says the Western Christian Advocate, the second in the history of our foreign work, has now four young men in this country preparing to enter the work of the ministry. The fifth arrived last week. They will be able, with the divine blessing, to preach in either the Spanish or English language. One of our missionaries, Rev. J. Thompson, converted in that country and educated in this, is now our missionary to the Spanish-speaking people in the city of Montevideo, and is meeting with very encouraging success. He has a Sunday school of sixty persons, Spanish and English. As the fruit, in part, of his ministry, we have now a missionary to the Spanish-speaking population of Buenos Ayres; and we learn from a reliable source that at a late love-feast held among these people not less than twenty persons gave in their testimony in Spanish for our Lord and Saviour.

ACCEPTING Rev. Mr. Monle—resident for many years in China—we can better understand some peculiar ways of the Chinese. They believe every one has three souls. At death one of these passes to judgment, one remains in the family shrine, and the other goes with the corpse to the grave. These spirits require food and clothing; and this want is to be met by burning gold and silver paper imitations of money. The spirits of those not buried wander about in misery and become ghost-beggars; and, to prevent annoyance from this source, it is said $150,000,000 are annually paid in all the empire to one called "the King of the Beggars." Forbidding such worship, Christianity is charged with perpetuating the misery of the dead. It seems the Chinese also have faith in a purgatory—a most lucrative mine to their priesthood, as to the Roman Catholic, and furnishing a sort of bridge between them.

THE Barbadoes House of Assembly has granted to the Moravians in that island £400 per annum for their religious work. One member opposed the grant, on the ground that it would be unfair to endow the Moravians, and not the Wesleyans, who are equally deserving; while another made no objections to the grant, provided the same was given to Wesleyans, who have an equal claim on the public. The auditor general, however, said that they could not make a grant to the Wesleyans, as they had not applied for one; that, when they did so, he would be ready to support the application. In Demarara a Wesleyan missionary was allowed by the government an increase of allowance, on the ground that the Wesleyan Missionary Society had withdrew its grant. In British Guiana the Wesleyans indorse and share in the concurrent endowment scheme of that colony. There the English Church receives $50,000, the Scotch Church $24,500, the Roman Catholics $12,000, the Wesleyans $5,000, Congregational and other dissenters $1,000 per annum from government. In Sierra Leone the Wesleyans have lately refused aid from the State.

THE Christian Advocate of February 16 makes record of revivals in part as follows: Clinton avenue, Newark, 40 accessions, principally young people; Rock School House and Alligerville, 75; Rock City, Troy Conference, 29; McConnellsburg, Pennsylvania, 70; Hurdtown, Newark Conference, 70, many of them heads of families; Shamokin, Pennsylvania, 80, thirty-five of them heads of families; Jersey Shore, Pennsylvania, 50; Berwick, Pennsylvania, 109, sixty-two of them adults; Frenchtown, Newark Conference, 80; Crescent, Troy Conference, 60; Chambersburg, Pennsylvania, 40; Durham, New York Conference, 50; Emerson, Troy Conference, 40; Gerard, Pennsylvania, 50; Freedom, Pennsylvania, 110; New Windsor, Baltimore, 160; Thirty-seventh street, New York city, 50; Grahamton, Pennsylvania, 91; Beverly, New Jersey, 30; Yonkers, New York, 45; Bedford street, New York city, 60; Danbury, Connecticut, 100; other points, 200; total, 1,833. Of the work in Danbury, it is said that the pastor, Rev. W. F. Hatfield, on Sabbath, February 12, baptized sixty-nine persons, mainly from fifteen to twenty-five years of age. The one hundred joining are the fruits of a revival following the observance of the week of prayer. Of the work in Bedford street, New York city, this record is given:

"At the afternoon meeting for the promotion of a higher Christian life the blessed Saviour has appeared in mighty power and glory, and it has indeed appeared at times as if the gates of heaven were all ajar, the divine baptism has been so unusual and overwhelming. The whole membership has been quickened, and every heart attuned to sweeter, more heavenly music. Quite a number have entered the 'valley of blessing,' and scores more are seeking to get beyond the border. The pastor, Rev. John Cookman, is untiring in his zeal, and he will leave here with the regret of not only the entire membership, but of the congregation.—Western Christian Advocate.

METHODISM AND THE BATTLE-FIELD. Whatever may have been the limitations of Methodism, it was proved upon the battle-fields of Germany to be no enervating delirium, but a stimulant to all manly life that was fitted to receive it. Among the army which, about the time that the first Methodist Conference met, fought at Dettingen and Fonteney, was a little band, the influence of which was felt in the sudden and enduring transformation of those who joined it. The marauder who had risked his neck for plunder would not, from the time he joined the Methodists, pick an apple or a bunch of grapes; the drunkard was sober; the habitual swearer never uttered an oath; but in the day of battle the Methodist was distinguished from his companions—not, indeed, by his absolute fearlessness, for that was probably no distinction—but by his meeting death not only with courage, but with rapture. The British army under George the Second boasted no truer specimens of English manhood than the Methodists.—Miss Wedgwood's Life of Wesley.

TRY PRAYER.—An unbelieving lawyer was once present at a meeting for prayer, when much interest was felt in the congregation.—Whether somewhat moved himself, and so rendered more bitter, or from some other motive, he arose and said:

"I have often heard of the power of prayer, and I don't believe one word of it; but if you want to take a hard case, take me."

He was asked to come forward, but replied:

"I shall do nothing of the kind; but if you have power in prayer, try it on me."

The minister desired all to pray for this man at a certain hour, and requested him to remember that they were praying for him. On the third evening he was again present, earnestly seeking for salvation. The result was that he became a most useful preacher of the gospel.—Sunday School Times.

As changes are being made in the post offices of the preachers, they will greatly oblige us by furnishing their addresses as early as possible. Don't forget to give the post office from which your paper is to be changed, as well as that to which it is to be sent.

Bishop KEENER's communication on the character and death of Bishop Andrew will be read with deep interest. The Bishop has our hearty thanks and the thanks of all our readers. It will be a sad and pleasing reflection with the official board of the Carondelet Street church to know that the purse of $200 forwarded to Bishop Andrew by them came in time for his burial. We clip the following notice of the funeral services from the Mobile Register:

The funeral services of the late Bishop Andrew were held at the Franklin street Methodist Episcopal church. The altar was occupied by Bishop J. C. Keener and Dr. Andrew, with other clergymen. After the singing of an appropriate hymn and prayer the service of the dead was read, followed by an address from Bishop Keener, reviewing the eventful life and character of the deceased. The Bishop related many pleasing incidents, both as to the public and private career of the venerable father in Israel, whose body now lay silent and cold before them. Dr. Andrews followed, touching upon the life of the departed brother in the relation of a husband and father; and after the singing of another hymn the services were closed with prayer. The remains are to be taken to Oxford, Georgia, for interment.

A MEMORIAL SERVICE.

At the session of the first Quarterly Meeting Conference of the Carondelet Street church, held on Monday, March 6, 1871, the following resolutions were unanimously adopted:

Resolved, That this conference, having deep sorrow in the loss sustained by our whole church in the death of our beloved Bishop J. O. ANDREW, and desiring that yet more formal and pronounced expression be given of our reverence for his name and memory, would hereby respectfully request Bishop Keener, at his own and earliest convenience, to deliver a discourse in memory of our late lamented Bishop Andrew, on Sunday evening, at half-past seven, in Carondelet Street church.

Resolved, That the several churches of our ecclesiastical connection in this city be and are hereby invited to unite with us in this memorial service. J. L. DUNNICA, Sec.

The memorial service referred to in the above resolutions will be held at the Carondelet Street church on Sunday evening, March 19, at half-past seven, on which occasion Bishop Keener has consented to preach, in accordance with the request of the Quarterly Conference.

BISHOP JAMES OSGOOD ANDREW.

OBSEQUIES AT MOBILE.

MOBILE, Saturday, March 4, 1871.

BRO. PARKER: I arrived here on Wednesday night at half-past nine, only in time to see the last of our beloved Bishop. He died at twenty minutes after eleven. He was lying quite still - his life at its last rally - the action of his lungs narrowing every moment, until, without struggle or spasm, he ceased to live. He died in the midst of his children, grandchildren and the preachers, at the Franklin street parsonage, now occupied by his son-in-law, Rev. J. W. Rush. He was conscious and sensible as long as he could speak. The day before he died, when asked how he felt, he said: "Bless God, all is well." At another time, when his lips were seen moving, he was asked: "What did you say, Bishop?" His reply was: "Victory! victory!" The last intelligent sentence that he was heard to utter was: "God bless you all." This was said to his granddaughter, bidding him good night.
